Dear Brethren of the Baton Rouge District: Please see that your official boards bring to the Fourth Quarterly Conference the proper statistical reports.

Charges desiring assistance from the Mission Board will please take notice that it is the policy of the Board of Missions to help those who show a disposition to help themselves. The appropriations for the year 1910 will probably be made on a basis of what was done in 1909, rather than on promises to do things in 1910.

Will all the pastors please try to have their entire official boards present at the Fourth Quarterly Conferences? Let the pastors be prepared to nominate stewards and trustees who will do the work to which they are elected.

It was in this very cottage in Brookside, 15 miles from Birmingham, Ala., that three Italians nearly died of Fever. They had been sick 3 months. Johnson's Tonic cured them quickly—read letter below:

Brookside, Ala., May 4, 1903.

The two physicians here had 3 very obstinate cases of continued Malarial Fever. All were Italians and lived on a creek 50 yards from my store. These cases were of three months standing, their temperature ranging from 100 to 104. The doctors had tried everything in vain. I persuaded them to let me try Johnson's Tonic. I removed all the printed matter and let the medicine go out in a plain bottle as a regular prescription. The effect in all three cases was immediate and permanent. They recovered rapidly and there was no recurrence of the Fever.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

To the Members of the Class of the Fourth Year:

By request of Dr. H. Walter Featherstun, I shall act as chairman of the committee at the session of Conference at Brookhaven.

Will each of the class be kind enough to communicate with me relative to his work, giving me as nearly as possible just what he has accomplished in the course of study, and if he will be ready for the examination?

Those who are taking the course in the Correspondence School will please indicate it in your letter to me.

I suggest that you read the reference books.

TOPIC FOR SEPTEMBER 25, [illegible]

FAITH PARALYZED BY FEAR

Matt. [illegible]

The multitudes had lingered long listening to the teaching of the Master. As night drew on they grew hungry, and the disciples would send them away into the neighboring villages for food. Instead the Master commanded to feed them, and with a few loaves and fishes he satisfied the hunger of the great throng, with many baskets of fragments left over. When the throng was fed the Master sent away the disciples in a ship while he dismissed the multitude. Then Jesus went up into the mountain to pray. Meantime one of the sudden storms common to the sea of Galilee was bearing down upon the disciples in their ship.

The Lord went to his disciples walking upon the water. When they saw him coming they cried out in terror. Most of us would still be affrighted at such a sight. He quieted their fears, however, by speaking to them. But impetuous Peter was not satisfied. If his Lord could walk on the water, why not he? So he asks to come to him. For a few minutes all is well, and then as he looks at the tossing waves he begins to fear and forthwith to sink. At his cry for help the Master rebuked his unbelief, and at once helped him into the ship.

Humanly speaking it was impossible for a man to walk upon the water. So the followers of Christ are always being confronted with things which seem impossible in the eyes of the world. When the Lord cried on the cross, "It is finished," he left eleven men to conquer the world for him. Apparently they would not be able to make even a ripple on the great Roman Empire; yet they did not doubt, but when he had prepared them for the task they went straight forward. To-day multitudes are doubtful as to the conquest of the heathen world, and think that the Chinese Empire will never be Christian. Thoughtful men see storm-tossed seas over which it is humanly speaking impossible to pass. The conquest of the cities for Christ, upon which the life of our civilization depends, seems hopeless to some. The purification of politics, called by one politician an "iridescent dream," seems hopeless to most people, and yet this can never be a truly Christian nation until this end is reached. The transformation of the nature of the individual seems utterly hopeless to many, and their only expectation is a little reformation that whitewashes the exterior, yet this is what we seek when we plead with men to come to Christ. Many men would expect to walk the waters of a troubled sea before seeing these things accomplished.

He who doubts will sink. Peter sank when he began to doubt. The Christian worker who loses faith will fail. The Christian who doubts his Lord's power to keep will stumble and perhaps fall. Doubt can wreck a man in the social world. Let many whispered things be hinted against some man's character, and soon there will be none "so base as to do him reverence." He will find it [illegible] more [illegible] will keep his [illegible] a great [illegible] the product of doubt [illegible] the Pharisees [illegible]

But there is a cause and a cure for doubt. Peter began to doubt when he looked away from his Lord and looked at the waves, and then [illegible] power of Christ upon the waters. When you measure the task by your strength, then there is sure failure. A great preacher [illegible] Suppose [illegible] the Son of God. [illegible] the strength of the Christ [illegible] there is nothing impossible. He never forgets [illegible] his people [illegible] weakness [illegible] with him.

A CALL TO SERVICE.

To the Epworth Leaguers of the Shreveport District.

At the recent conference of Epworth Leaguers of the district at Mansfield a full set of officers was elected and we are planning and hoping for better things in League work [illegible] wherever possible. One of the chief features in our district plans is that League work should be done more by the laymen and godly women of our church, and have the League as a pastor's assistant rather than have the pastor to plan and push forward the work. We are going to work along these lines.

And now, Brother Pastor, will you please furnish our Secretary, Mrs. S. J. Leigh, [illegible] Oakland Street, Shreveport, with the names of someone in your charge to whom we may present this matter? Or will you, Brother Layman, or some good sister, send us the names?

We want to do you good. We will have some of our very best workers go to your assistance and will help you in every way to build up the League work in your midst.

Our officers are enthusiastic Leaguers and are taking special interest in their departments. Our Secretary will furnish the Advocate with the names and addresses of each of them in her report of the Conference.

Now to the Leagues already organized: If any department of your League is needing help, send to the District Leader for that department [illegible] some one who is capable of doing you good. All we ask is that the League wanting us pay our actual traveling expenses. [illegible]

A REAL BLESSING

What a blessing is perfect health! What enjoyment there is in feeling well! Life is all pleasure, and work is but play. But if one is continually ailing, life seems scarcely worth living.

Thousands of women suffer, continually or periodically, from the ills or weakness peculiar to their sex. Pain kills pleasure, hinders the performance of their daily duties and makes them most wretched.

Countless women, suffering such ills, have found relief or cure in that old, reliable medicine, especially prepared for women,—Wine of Cardui. Thousands of these grateful ladies write to tell what Cardui has done for them.

We recently had this letter from Mrs. Annie Vaughan, of Raleigh, N. C.: "I cannot find words to express my deep gratitude for what your wonderful medicine, Cardui, did for me, for I sincerely believe it saved my life. I was sick and worn out, almost unto death. My sister finally persuaded me to take Cardui. Before I had taken 5 bottles I was well and strong."

Cardui is a pure, vegetable remedy, which acts gently and naturally on the womanly system. If you are nervous, weak or sick, try Cardui. Get it at once. 'Twill help you.

At all druggists in $1.00 bottles.

LESSON FOR SEPT. 26, 1909.

TEMPERANCE LESSON.

I. Cor. x. 23-33.

The letter of St. Paul, of which the Scripture text of this lesson forms a part, was written to a church that was surrounded by tendencies and temptations of outside influences. In no other epistle are evils so particularized, and although written so long ago to an ancient people, the truths and principles remain the same, and are adapted to any people of any time. The subject of the lesson is intended to impress on the mind the necessity of abstaining from the evil habit of drink, and we can make it a study without departing from Paul's writings. It is an evil, a great evil—one that is prevalent among the high and the low, pervading all classes. Where does it come from? What produces this great enemy of man? Paul says in a letter to Timothy that the love of money is the root of all evil. That love of money that pulls down barns to make way for greater ones wherein selfishness is bestowed. That love of money that drives out of the heart all love for God, for the church and God's holy Sabbath day. What a monster does this root of all evil produce! To-day, around the people of our own native land, more than any people on the face of the globe, has this octopus wound its hideous arms, until the American is known by the size of his purse, and recognized by the qualities that have ever been companions to opulence.

There comes a time when iniquity does so abound "that the love of many shall wax cold," that is the love for Christ and his church, the love of God that is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost. If there is a love that drives away all good, God had provided a more powerful love to resist the evil. It is that love that is bestowed upon a neighbor even as upon self. In the spirit of that love the admonitions of Paul are before us in to-day's study. All things are lawful if prompted by Christian love, and any act that benefits not is not of the heart that has been purged from selfish love. Some things may be lawful, yet tending not to the upbuilding of the Kingdom; while doing the things that are lawful, and even edifying, ones own prosperity must not entirely engage the mind, for aid must be given a weaker brother.

Acts of kindness are long remembered, and just as long do they create a beneficial influence. Influence must be watched and guarded as a most precious jewel. No thoughtless word, or questionable act, should be permitted to undo the good that has been effected on him that may be following where we lead. In the Lord's earth, and in its fullness, all things are his, and he gives them to us to use, but when the use of any one thing suggests a scruple in the conscience of another, then abstain for conscience's sake; not thine own conscience, but that of the other, who may be taking thee as an example of piety.

"Why is my liberty judged of another man's conscience?" The liberty bestowed upon a "prisoner of hope" is not subject to judgment, but is used for the glory of God. What a small thing is abstinence, compared to the great things done by Christ, the Savior of mankind! There is a class of intemperance growing upon the plant that springs from the root of all evil, that is as pernicious as indulging in the drink habit; it is caste or class distinction. It is an evil that silently works against that for which the follower of Christ should ever work? It is a speechless evil, and conduct is its best expression. It thrusts away from the house of God poor and plainly-clothed ones, that otherwise would be there. It is discernable even in the Sunday school, beginning in the infant class and extending to the senior. It stands between the fastidious teacher and the humble home of a more humble member of her class.

When Jesus taught, "take no thought for the body what ye shall put on," the thought found lodgement in the mind of Paul when he wrote: "Condescend to men of low estate." Is the church of the fashionable center built of different material, spiritually as well as physically, than the little mission church in the suburbs? However that may be, the difference can best be seen on the inside during services. The masses have heard of how the church is turning this way and that way, looking for means by which to reach them. They have seen who among them all are the sincere, the ones that really want the poor and the working people to come in the church. If this intemperance prevails less among Jesus' professed followers, intemperance of other sorts would yield more readily to the cure that is applied. Christ, the Carpenter, knew where to go to seek and to save, even if he did go followed by shouts of derision from those that "needed no physician." O brother, sister, take in the spirit of this scripture: "Let no man seek his own." Hearken to the cry of the poor and toil-worn, as they moan: "O where shall rest be found—rest for the weary soul?" "Leave behind you formality, conventionality, and tell them to listen with you, and the spirit will murmur to you both: "Come unto me * * * and ye shall find rest for your souls."

CHOON CHUN, KOREA.

Dr. J. W. Reed writes: "My wife and I are hard at the language. I have gotten of late so that I think of it all day, and when I wake at night I find my mind revolving around some Korean word, sound of verb, in fact I am just beginning to get saturated with Korean sounds, and hope that some of them will evolve into words.

I am getting along as well as one could expect with my work. I have a clinic three times a week, and had eighty-six patients last month alone, with two small operations with general anaesthetic.

I had a man to come to me the other day who has been a peddler, and who some time ago had his feet frozen; one of them now is so he can walk very little, due to a decayed bone, and he is, though a strong man, forced to beg. This is a condition with an operation and three or four weeks in bed could be relieved and a man could be earning his living. I have not the instruments, or the bed to put him on, and not the three or four dollars for his food to put him on his feet, so I had to let him go. This is one of many cases of this kind. I do operate sometimes when a case comes in as did a Christian woman yesterday with gangrene of the index finger. This I had to work on, but the conditions under which I had to work were embarrassing to say the least, and I was not able to do what should have been done.

Glances at the World.

In going through the Times-Democrat of Sept. 18, on the sporting page, which recounts the daily doings of the base ball leagues, we read of a noted player, "said to be one of the best centerfielders in the Southern League," just returned to his home after the campaign, who "announced that he was done with base ball—no more playing for me. I have had my fill." We thought, one man has changed for the better, and we were glad. Not that base ball is wrong in itself when confined to men who play for pleasure or exercise, but glad that at least one man had quit the ranks of the professionals who have become so utterly demoralized and demoralizing. We hoped to see the announcement of his purpose to go into a better business—at least one more in keeping with good morals. But imagine our surprise at the next sentence which read: "I shall put my time to my billiard hall interests." That is a clear case of "jumping from the frying pan into the fire"—going from bad to worse. It is hard for us to understand how an intelligent, educated man, capable of better things, and of great usefulness, can abandon himself, soul and body, to professional base ball; and men must be entirely destitute of worthy ambition who quit base ball to look after billiard cues. Men of this sort are of the sort that it takes to make up a bad world.

It is more than remarkable that all the loop-holes in the law are on the side of the law-breaker, or the man who undertakes to evade the law's provisions. Men accused of crime, and convicted before the courts, on clear and unimpeachable testimony, actually come clear because of an unimportant irregularity in the proceedings. A case in point: A party of night-riders in Tennessee caught and murdered in cold blood a respectable lawyer, and would have killed his companion had he not escaped. The men were tried, convicted and sentenced. An appeal was taken, and on a mere technicality the verdict was reversed and the cases remanded. The prosecuting attorney expressed doubt as to his ability to bring the men to trial again. Other cases of quite as much importance, and some of less, might be mentioned. And we have noticed that in violations of the liquor laws, if there is any miscarriage of justice, the law suffers, not the man who has violated the law. And in regard to liquor laws, the saddest thing is the difficulty of enforcing them. Attorneys complain that grand juries will not indict offenders when facts are brought to their attention, and in many cases trial juries will not convict, notwithstanding the plainest evidence. One of the best laws ever enacted by the Louisiana legislature—the law removing saloons from the near vicinity of churches and schools, has been well-nigh nullified by the court's decision, which affirms that the law was not intended to apply to saloons in operation at the time it was enacted. And numbers of such saloons in New Orleans remain undisturbed. These things lead us to ask: Is there no relief for citizens who desire to carry out the law?

It will be remembered by our readers that about three months ago a local option election was held in Bristol, Va. Bristol is a town of considerable size, and divided by the stateline between Virginia and Tennessee. The election returns showed that the liquor forces won by a small majority. The prohibitionists immediately contested the election, principally on the ground that a considerable number of illegal votes were cast, many of these votes being by men who lived on the Tennessee side of the town. This last contention, it appears, was made good by the prohibitionists. The judge, in his decision, rendered on Monday, Sept. 20, held that, "though the voters were not bodily present, a residence once acquired in Virginia could be retained so long as it was the intention of the voter, regardless of where he went or how long he stayed. He held that a majority of the legal votes were cast for license." It is understood that it is not only out of order, but a bit of presumption to criticise the rulings of a court of justice, but we may be allowed to say this: Without disputing the correctness of this judge's ruling in regard to the law in Virginia, under it a man may "acquire residence" in Virginia, sell out his possessions, and move "bag and baggage" to the North Pole, now under the protection of the American flag, and not lose his right to vote in Virginia, so long as he declares it is his "intention" to retain citizenship in the State. No wonder Bristol, Va., went "wet." If this ruling is upheld by the higher courts, all the liquor men will have to do to carry any election is to colonize on the day of election a sufficient number of men who have moved out of the State, or out of the country, and allow them to declare their intention to remain citizens of Virginia.

Mr. Taft, speaking in Chicago last week, made some notable remarks on "The Law's Delay." We quote in part :"It is not too muuch to say that the administration of criminal law in this country is a disgrace to civilization, and that the prevalence of crime and fraud, which here is greatly in excess of that in European countries, is due largely to the failure of law and its administration to bring criminals to justice. * * * * A murder case in England will be disposed of in a day or two. Counsel are not permitted there to mouse through the record to find errors that in the trial seemed of little account, but that are developed into great injustices in the Court of Appeal. * * * Then it is undoubtedly true that in England lawyers in the conduct of their cases feel much more, and respect much more, their obligations to assist the court in administering justice, and restrain themselves from adopting the desperate and extreme methods for which American lawyers are even applauded. * * * On the civil side of the courts there is undue delay, and this always works for the benefit of the man with the longest purse. * * * * I am a lawyer and admire my profession, but I must admit that we have had too many lawyers in legislating on legal procedure, and they have been prone to think that litigants were made for the purpose of furnishing business to courts and lawyers, and not courts and lawyers for the benefit of the people and litigants." In view of the facts. which are patent and damaging, Mr. Taft proposes to ask of Congress "a commission to study the administration of justice in the Federal Courts." Why ask a commission? Why not ask Congress to ask directly on the matter and remedy the evil at once. And State Legislatures might act at once in behalf of a long-suffering public in the States.

Other States than Alabama have made the possesion of a United States liquor tax receipt—miscalled a United States license, prima facie evidence of violation of State liquor laws. Concerning this, a writer in the Brooklyn Eagle, as quoted by the Commoner, says: "A bill passed by the lower house of the Alabama legislature proposes to legalize the arrest of any person possessing a United States license for the sale of liquor, without the formality of securing any other evidence or even of alleging any specific act in violation of State law. An old issue is thus formulated in a shape for logic to tackle it freely. We have no doubt that if the bill becomes a law, the logicians on the bench of the supreme court of the United States will do their duty. Maine made the possession of federal license certificates corroborative evidence of violation of her liquor law. At one time she sought also to use the records of the United States internal revenue department in her criminal prosecutions. In the latter effort she was thwarted. The federal courts, however, did not interfere with the "corroborative evidence' clause of the State law. Alabama's scheme is to make the possesion of United States certificates primary and presumptive, not corroborative evidence. This involves an attack on the revenue-raising laws of the nation, an attack absolutely unmasked and vital. With such a statute on the books of every State nearly $7,000,000 of revenue would be taken from the United States in special tax certificates from taxes on spirits would be seriously menaced. Whether such a State law is constitutional or not will be settled, not by Alabama, but by the nation's supreme court. That is the really significant fact."

President Taft began, on Sept. 15, a tour of the country. In his journeyings he will cover about 12,000 miles. He speaks as he goes. Many cities await with interest his coming. New Orleans and Jackson, Miss., will be embraced in the route. A cartoon in the Times-Democrat, representing the President on his travels, the journey is called "A Tour of Explanation." Mr. Taft seems to be doing a good deal of explaining. Indeed, it appears that one prrincipal reason of his tour is to bring the great West into line with the action of the recent Congress in revising the tariff. He finds it hard work. And with his promises to the people in advance of the election, he can do nothing but explain, or, as debaters say, "beg the question." Defend the action of Congress he cannot. He will doubtless succeed in pacifying some, but the "insurgent leaders" he can never satisfy. And, if he undertakes to "read them out of the party," he will make matters worse, for these leaders have many friends in their respective States who will adhere to them to the end. Mr. Taft himself concedes that the revision is not what he wanted—did not meet his expectation. Then why, it may properly be asked, did he not more strenuously interfere to secure what he desired? Had he done so, the people would listen more patiently now to his explanations. We hope the President will not wear himself out making explanations before he reaches New Orleans in November.

A MATTER OF IMPORTANCE.

By Rev. W. T. J. Sullivan, D.D.

In the the Presidential canvass of 1908 some voters were disposed to inquire about the religious belief of the Republican candidate. The noise of this inquiry got to the ears of the President of the United States and he proceeded to administer a sharp, dictatorial rebuke to these inquirers. He declared that it was no business of the voter to concern himself about the religion of a candidate; that a man's religion was a matter between himself and his God. If the noble President be correct, what, then, becomes of our boasted religious liberty. Are we not free to ask about the political creed of a candidate for office? Suppose this creed and the practice of the candidate display a moral character that is offensive to me and detrimental to the public welfare. Must I pay no heed to these moral questions? Is it a matter of indifference whether a candidate is trustworthy as a man of honor, truth and honesty? Suppose, then, that I inquire into the morals of the candidate. Am I then transgressing my rights? Suppose that my religious convictions forbid my voting for a Universalist, a Unitarian, a Roman Catholic, a Mohammedan, a Budhist, and on that account I cast my vote for the man who suits my religious views better than he does my political platform. What then? Well, that is just what I would do. Then the little political mountebank whose religion and morals rise no higher than the success of his corrupt party, begins to cry, : "Fanatic, mixing religion and politics, uniting church and state," as if religion could pass by the political field without looking in to see if the field were cultivated on right principles; or if the state could construct its constitution and administer its functions without considering the great doctrines which bind man to his duties to God and lay the foundations of his moral obligations. It seems that many of our people have yet to learn that church and state are needful and helpful to each other. The state recognizes, in its practical functions, whether it does in formal statement or not, many of the fundamental doctrines of religion, and hence allies itself with the church. So the church calls on the state for secular service which it cannot command in its own organization. The state would be impotent to execute the laws designed to protect the lives and interests of citizens were it not for the fundamental doctrines of religion which bind man to the obligations of duty. The highest and noblest attainment of man and the truest service he can render to his fellow man is in the sincere fulfillment of his religious obligations. Obedience to the will of God lies at the foundaton of human conduct in the relations and pursuits of life. How, then, can I truly keep the commandments, if I cast my vote for a man who is an enemy to some of the essential doctrines of revealed religion? As a loyal, patriotic citizen, seeking the best interest of my state and country, I must ask about the moral and religious conduct of the candidate. That is my right, my duty and my practice. To rebuke such inquiry is an assault on the personal liberty possessed by every citizen. If our voters would have a deeper regard for religious obligation in casting their votes, many untrustworthy officials would be left out, and the real interests of the people much more securely protected.

Jackson, Miss.

OUR EDUCATIONAL SITUATION.

By Rev. J. A. Rice, D.D.

VII.

Coming now to the situation in Louisiana: Is there room for another college, one under Methodist control, and are the Methodists able to build it? I have asked Prof. Weber for a map showing a radius of a hundred, one hundred and fifty and two hundred miles, describing concentric circles around Shreveport. The first of these circles passes near Gurdon, Ark., on the north, Rayville on the east, near Colmesneil on the southwest, and near Henderson, Tex., on the west. The second circles passed near Hot Springs on the north, Bolton, Miss., on the east, Lake Charles on the southeast, and Greenville on the west. The third of these circles passes near Morrillton, Ark., on the north, beyond Jackson, Miss., on the east, cuts the Gulf on the south, and passes a little beyond Dallas, Tex., on the west. Experience has shown that most colleges draw their chief support from a radius of a hundred miles around. Applying that principle here, we would have that entire area without a college. Texarkana, Ark., and Shreveport are the only cities of any size. Taking the second arc, with a radius of a hundred and fifty miles, we still get no other city except Hot Sprirngs Even the third area would include only Little Rock, Dallas, Jackson, and would pass not a great ways from Houston, and in all this large area even, there is no college worth naming except Millsaps on the east, and the Louisiana State University on the southeast, both of which are on the edge. This would give room for four colleges supported almost exclusively within the largest area, whereas the two on the edge are patronized by large territory outside. Geographically, then, there is abundant room and to spare for a college at Shreveport. I am unable to give the exact population within these circles. Prof. Weber says, "The white population of Louisiana may be put down as 729,000. We ought to touch in Mississippi at least 64,000, in Texas 242,000, in Oklahoma 36,000, in Arkansas 472,000, giving a total of 1,543,000.

Of course these figures are much too small as they are taken from the census of 1900. The Department of Education in Washington gives 1.5 as the percentage of students in higher education to each 1000 inhabitants. This would require 2468 students in our colleges. The fact is, the colleges in my circles have enrolled only 1812. In Massachusetts the percentage is 5.5 per 1000. This proportion would give our colleges 8486 students.

And this territory is marvelously rich in almost every conceivable natural resource. Its climate is delightful, so that the future will bring rapidly increasing numbers of people from all parts of the world and of all lines of interest. It is already opened up by a network of railways so that the abundant materials for all kinds of manufacturing will sooner or later be utilized, and while the river bottoms produce almost immeasurable crops, that whole section will pulse and throb with many kinds of machinery, preparing for distribution over the world products whose wealth no one can now estimate. The type of people, too, will always be substantial. There will be enough agriculture and stable manufactury to bring about a healthy atmosphere and wholesome civic conditions. The very class of people who patronize a college will be the dominant element there.

The advantages of Shreveport are well stated in a circular sent out by some of its citizens:

Shreveport, since the boundaries of the city have been extended, has a population of 40,000 people. Her geographical position is most favorable in that a large and rich territory surrounds her and no competitor to hinder her progress, as New Orleans lies 250 miles to the south, Fort Worth and Dallas an equal distance to the west and St. Louis to the north. Eastward is a large territory extending to the Mississippi river.

Shreveport is the principal distributing point for this vast territory, and it will become more so when her large resources are appreciated and more fully developed. Shreveport is rich in raw material, cotton, timber of various kinds, clay and glass sands are found in abundance, vegetables and fruits of all kinds are grown in its soil to great perfection. While cotton is the chief crop of this section now, fruits, vegetables and grasses of all kinds are beginning to compete for supremacy. The Standard Orchard Company, who operate a few miles west of Shreveport, have several thousand acres in peaches, plums and apricots just come into bearing and which promise good results. This company shipped the first peaches placed on the market in the United States last season.

The following will show some of Shreveport's attractive features:

Natural gas unlimited, for manufacturing and domestic purposes.

A location that is superb from a wholesale distributing standpoint.

A population of 40,000 progressive people.

The market place of the richest valley in the United States.

Over thirty-two miles of handsomely paved streets and alleys. The best paved city of its size in the world. If you don't believe it, come and see.

A street railway system that is unsurpassed and which is constantly growing.

An extensive lighting plant.

Business men who are wide awake at all times and who extend to you a cordial invitation to locate here.

Eleven railroads handling nearly two hundred passengers and freight trains in and out of the city daily.

From a fire insurance standpoint the city is rated in the first class, because of superior fire protection.

Educational and social advantages unsurpassed.

Highest religious advantages, all denominations being represented in the field.

Climate is delightful. There are no extremely cold periods in winter and snow is almost unknown The summer days are not warmer than those in the Northern Central States.

For manufacturing purposes: The proximity of raw material; thousands of acres of virgin timber; large deposits of sand suitable for glass manufacture and shale for manuufacture of brick; all factories exempt from taxation until 1914.

Gladstone Addition is a recent addition of the city of Shreveport, and more recently made a part of Greater Shreveport. This addition is two miles or fifteen minutes' car ride, south of the courthouse and postoffice, and is connected with the center of the city by an electric street railway system making twenty minute schedule. These cars run direct to Gladstone without change of cars and for a five cent fare.

Gladstone is ideal in location, being high and rolling, so that the drainage is perfect. As a resident section it possesses all the necessary advantages for building the modern suburban home. Lying south of the city, the south breeze passes through Gladstone before reaching the city, making the addition cool and delightful. The winds, laden with scent of the pines, make the air healthful and invigorating.

As Gladstone is now a part of the city of Shreveport, all of the utilities will be extended as rapidly as possible, paved streets will soon be built in this addition, which, in connection with the oil road to the west side of Gladstone, will make this addition and the park the most beautiful and fashionable driveway of the city.

Gladstone Park, where Centenary College is located, is especially designed by nature to meet the wants of man. The grounds are broken sufficiently to make them picturesque. A great variety of forest trees covers the entire park and the pines and other evergreens are in sufficient number to give it an all-year summer appearance. Improvements to the extent of $10,000 have already been made in this park, and by another summer we expect to have all the usual amusements found in first-class parks.

In the center of this park is a beautiful artificial lake covering about fourteen acres. This lake is surrounded by dense forests and green lawns of Bermuda grass, making it an ideal spot. Bathing, boating and fishing are indulged in by the public in the lake. The park and lake are open to the public free.

It is the intention of the Gladstone Realty Company to make this the leading suburban resident district of the city. With Centenary College, the park and the lake, and the quick car service to the city, we think the inducements are sufficient to lead us to believe that Glastone soon will be a place of beautiful homes. The plans of several homes are already completed and the work of building same soon will be commenced.

Caddo oil field is now producing thousands of barrels of oil daily and promises to become a very large field, producing a very high grade of oil, running as high as forty degrees specific gravity. New wells are being brought in weekly and the large oil companies of the country are spending millions in developing this territory.

The territory, then, surrounding Shreveport is ample for a great college. The location in Shreveport, with outlets in every direction, is admirable. No one will deny, I presume, the great service a strong college there would render, not only Methodism, but the cause of the kingdom in this part of the Southwest.

Now, are we able to build it? I am not sufficiently in touch with our Methodist people outside New Orleans to know definitely their financial strength, but I have a very distinct impression that a number of our people are growing rich, and I have not the least doubt that there are ten men among us amply able alone to endow the college we need. Is it not possible to get them to see the great opportunity before them of living forever in the grateful hearts of countless men and women, that shall yet live within our borders, and of discharging a noble debt to the wider world? Who among the hundreds of Methodists in Louisiana who are accumulating fortunes will be the first to lead the way in large things in answer to the call voiced by Rev. Briscoe Carter, our commissioner of education? Who?

If a man does something, you may be pretty sure he is something. I pitch my tent by the mouth of a great river: hour after hour, day after day, and month after month it pours its volume of water into the sea. I need no one to inform me that behind that river are deep springs, and mountain streams, and a thousand tributaries; the ceaseless flow of the river is the proof. So, if one has any depth of being, any generosity of nature, any rich heart life, any love for God, any likeness to Jesus Christ, there will be an overflow of beneficence, and every deed will be a sign of the power which lies behind it.—Ex.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Miss Daisy Davies, Field Secretary of the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions, M. E. Church, South, will hold an institute in Meridian, Miss., embracing Sunday and Monday, October 3rd and 4th.

Miss Davies is well known and highly appreciated throughout the South for her efficient and inspiring work. I earnestly beg each auxiliary, and each church where there is no auxiliary, to send delegates to this Institute.

Because of the many demands upon her time, Miss Davies can be at only a few places in the Mississippi Conference, therefore, this is an opportunity we, as missionary workers, cannot afford to lose. Let all who can, attend and carry back the inspiration of the occasion that it may be productive of great good to the cause.

Send names of delegates to Mrs. L. P. Brown, 12th Street and 23rd Avenue, Meridian, Miss.

Every one who will come may rest assured of a cordial welcome and a pleasant, profitable time.

Mrs. R. M. [illegible], Secretary, Meridian District.

HATTIESBURG, MISS.

Missionary Institute of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society.

A Missionary Institute will be held at Meridian, October 3-4, under the conduct of Miss Daisy Davies.

All of the auxiliaries on the Meridian District are urgently requested to send delegates—also members of the Newton District living near Meridian.

The ministers of both Districts are cordially invited to be present.

Miss Davies will be in Newtou on the afternoon and evening of October 5th.

This is the beginning of a series of Institutes and lectures which Miss Davies will give in our Conference, the announcements of which will appear later.

Let every member of the society pray that God will bless these meetings, and that as a result every district may grow in membership, zeal and liberality.

We are particularly blessed in having Miss Davies with us during the Membership Campaign, with such help as this we ought to have no trouble in gaining our eight hundred new members.

MRS. A. F. WATKINS,
Corresponding Secretary.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

By this good hour our president is "at home" and expecting some of us to "give an account of our stewardship." We have been fishing for reports, and if nothing more has been done than has been reported we need some new stewardesses.

We are always sure of a favorable reply from Algiers. No wonder people enjoy the Home Mission column in the Algiers paper; Mrs. Rhodes is the "livest" press superintendent in the State that we have any account of, unless it be Miss Pennington of Shreveport. Good work is being done in this department by both of these good sisters, and they often send us clippings from their columns to cheer us on the way. We do not know how large a place Slaughter is, but we know there is one Home Mission woman there who appreciates the bulletin so much she sends fifty cents to pay for it, though there is no auxiliary in the place. In addition to the above mentioned we thank Mrs. L. Meekins of New Orleans, Mrs. W. T. Rehse of Lecompte, Mrs. M. C. Webb of Trout, Miss Laura Bachman of New Orleans, Miss Mary Wilkinson of New Orleans, Mrs. Essie McIlhenery of Crowley, Mrs. A. J. Burks of Winnfield, Mrs. J. C. White of Wilson, Mrs. C. J. Sanders of Eunice, Mrs. R. C. Holt of Rayne, Mrs. L. C. Sadler of Pearl River and Mrs. Love McDade of Haughton for promptly filling and returning report blanks.

We received a letter to-day from a Conference press superintendent in Oklahoma asking for our methods and how to get the women to report. If we could get the sixty-odd women who did not report to answer that question in full it would doubtless make interesting reading.

MRS. ALICE CARY McKINNEY.

LETTER FROM REV. C. F. EMERY.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I have thought of you many times since we last roomed together at the Kearney House in Yazoo City, and trust that a kind Providence may again assign us to the same place of entertainment when next we meet at Brookhaven, D. V., next December. I trust these few lines that I send you may not prove uninteresting.

Recently I took a two week's vacation, incidentally giving the good people of Brandon a much needed rest, and spent the time in that most delightful of all occupations—assisting my brethren in the work of the Master.

One week I spent with Rev. J. J. Golden, at Paulding, the old capital of Jasper County. Most of the people have moved away to the railroad towns, and a number of vacant houses are sad reminders of what this place once was. Fifty years ago it was an important commercial center commanding trade from a large section of surrounding country, and among its honored citizens were men who, as jurists and statesmen, are prominently identified in the history of our great State.

I was most delightfully entertained by Brother W. E. Cochran and his wife, who live in the same house in which lived Dr. Harmon and where he passed away surrounded by the many friends who revere the memory of this saintly man. The high altitude, pure atmosphere and splendid water make this an ideal health resort. As might be expected, the moral and religious tone of the community is excellent.

The Methodist Church is the only denomination represented here, with the exception of the Roman Catholic, which has a resident priest. This is the fourth time that I have had the pleasure of being associated with my friend, Brother Golden in a meeting. I have never known a more delightful and lovable man. His energy is untiring and his consecrated zeal and genial qualities have endeared him to all the people. The largest morning congregation we had, assembled to hear his sermon on "Water Baptism," which is the best I have ever heard on the subject. It was with genuine regret that I took my departure from this quiet, restful village.

The next day found me pleasantly domiciled in the parsonage at Forest as the guest of Rev. H. Mellard and wife. The capital city of Scott County was devastated a few years ago by a disastrous fire; but out of the ashes has arisen one of the most attractive towns in East Mississippi. The many new handsome residences and attractive places of business would do credit to a much larger town. They have water works and electric lights, and a large compress nearing completion, giving the place an air of thrift and enterprise.

The one thing most needed just now is a handsome new Methodist Church so as to be in harmony with its surroundings. The other denominations lent a cordial support to the meeting and the attendance and interest in the services were most gratifying. Personally, the generous hospitality of these excellent people left nothing to be desired.

Brother Mellard stands justly high in the estimation and love of his people, and my delightful sojourn in his home will ever abide among life's pleasant recollections.

Everything seems to be moving along smoothly here at Brandon. The spiritual condition of the charge is excellent, as evidenced by the attendance on public worship and the prayer meetings. Doubtless a "full" report will be made at Conference.

C. F. EMERY.

THE CHURCH.

By [illegible]

The bigots are not all dead. Ever and anon some theological dwarf or ecclesiastical [illegible] affirms that he belongs to the only church [illegible] are aliens from the mercies of God and only a few steps from perdition. He [illegible] himself and his crowd a monopoly of all [illegible] functions and privileges. No other minister is competent to preach the gospel and administer the sacraments, unless he gets authority from them. If he does not, he is a [illegible] of Jehovah, etc.

This article is intended as an answer to all who claim to belong to "the only church."

What is the Church?

The difference of opinion comes from those who foolishly claim to represent the only true one. A better answer cannot be found than that contained in our Thirteenth Article of Religion:

"The visible church of Christ is a congregation of faithful men in which the pure Word of God is preached, and the sacraments duly administered according to Christ's ordinance, in all those things which of necessity are requisite to the same."

This definition corresponds to the [illegible] idea that a church is a body of people, including their children, holding the essential doctrines of Christianity, organized for the worship of God in offering prayer and praise, in the administration of the sacraments, in preaching the gospel and in the prosecution of Christian work. Wherever there is organization, the preaching of the gospel, the worship of God and Christian work, etc., there is a church of Christ.

The New Testament calls a company of believers "the church," sometimes "the church of God," or "the church of Christ."

In some places the term "church" includes all believers throughout the earth, or its limits are confined to a town or territory, as the church of Laodicea, or churches of Achaia.

The bigots of the world seem to forget that in a number of places the term is applied to the family circle, as "the church which is in thy house." Several times Paul salutes the church that is in the home.

The Greek word "Ekklesia," which is translated "church," means "called out." It implies that Christ has been preached and believed in, and that men regard themselves as called out of the (ways of the) world, out of darkness, away from the service and condemnation of sin, to the light and fellowship, etc., of the gospel.

The Church consists of all who answer the call of God, and "Christians anywhere constitute a church of Jesus Christ."

Whenever they organize, preach the gospel, administer the sacraments, etc., they constitute a visible church. The worship of God, preaching the gospel, the Lord's Supper, baptism, Christian zeal, etc., cannot be neglected.

Many passages might be quoted in support of the definition which has been given. For instance, I Cor. i, 2: "Unto the Church of God which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called to be saints."

The Corinthians were an organized company of men and women of different nationalities, who separated themselves from sin and consecrated themselves to God in Christ, and lived holy in heart and life. This made them a church.

Notice what Paul says at the twelfth chapter:

"By one spirit we are all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free, and have been all made to drink into one spirit. For the body is not one member, but many."

The body of which Paul speaks is the church. In his letters to other churches he says that the church is the body of Christ. Christ is the head and we are members of the body. Through the influences of the Holy Spirit we become members of the real church, or body of Christ. After all, [illegible] Baptism [illegible]

[illegible] members [illegible] The New Testament [illegible] of this church.

If a man is [illegible]

It makes little difference to the Lord what name [illegible] Methodist, Presbyterian or any other name [illegible] If the company [illegible] the above definition, it is a church of the living God, whether [illegible] or not.

The church on earth may be organized by any body [illegible]

Every denomination [illegible] Roman Catholics [illegible]

Baptists claim that they [illegible] any other, yet they are [illegible] know no more about [illegible] pretends that the [illegible] Church.

Someone has said that if a body of [illegible] on a voyage [illegible] uninhabited island [illegible] would have the right to organize themselves into a church. Of course they would [illegible] would be as complete a church [illegible] all the [illegible] if they ever came [illegible] of the world and sent a [illegible] received by any ecclesiastical body [illegible] and order his own [illegible]

Many denominations would [illegible] one or two in the world to-day [illegible] would say: "You are not in the apostolic succession." "You were not baptized by the right mode or administrator." "[illegible] government is not Scriptural." "[illegible] is the only church." "You must get in line and believe [illegible] we believe [illegible] every point and [illegible] in every particular."

As a disciple of Jesus Christ [illegible] my chances on the [illegible] than identify myself with a lot of ignorant narrow ecclesiastical bigots.

If the Methodist Church claimed to be the only church in the world, or a small percent of its membership made the foolish claim [illegible] fellowship with Christians of other denominations, and closed its eyes to piety wherever found, I would not stay in it any longer than it would take me to [illegible] my hat. I would repudiate it and [illegible] some church where intelligence and charity characterizes its members, or I would spend all the rest of my time hunting [illegible]

There are members of the Lord's body in all the Christian denominations of the world and under all skies; and if the man who says to the contrary is not careful, he will find himself excluded from the kingdom.

No one denomination in the world is big enough to monopolize the word "Christian," or to claim all the pious people in the world. Christ says that he is "the door," and the church that robs Christ of his words, and substitutes some mere mode or form of church government deserves to die, and is unworthy to be a representative of Jesus Christ in the world.

Whenever a church spends its time assailing other denominations, and contending for tweedledee or tweedledum, it has woefully backslidden and deteri- [illegible] the Son [illegible] Christ [illegible] Lord [illegible]

VALUE OF SPARE MOMENTS.

An English paper tells of a lad who, at fourteen, was apprenticed to a soap boiler. One of his resolutions was to read an hour each day, or at least at that rate. He had an old silver watch left him by his uncle, by which he timed his reading.

He stayed seven years with his master, and said that, when he was twenty-one, he knew as much as the young squire did. Now, let us see how much time he had read in the seven years at the rate of one hour each day. It would be 2555 hours, which, at the rate of eight reading hours per day, would be equal to 319, equal to forty-five weeks, nearly a year's reading.

That time spent in treasuring up useful knowledge would accumulate a large store. Surely it is worth trying for. Try what you can do. Begin now. In after years, you will look back upon the task as one of the most pleasant and profitable you ever performed.—Selected.

HOPE FOR THE DRUNKARD'S WIFE.

That decision of the Supreme Court which awards over $5000 damages to a wife, whose husband, once sober, had become a prey to the environments of a saloon keeper, points in the right direction. It suggests at least a partial remedy for a wide-spread evil. There is redress to any woman for the alienation of a husband's affections by a third party; but is that a more grievous wrong than the degradation and sorrow she suffers when her husband becomes a drunkard? Admitting that such a man is a moral weakling and that the guilt for his fall rests chiefly with him, yet who will deny the enormous guilt of the man who, for filthy lucre's sake, throws temptation in his way and thus ruins a once happy and prosperous home? In Norway, where the sale of intoxicants is controlled by the State, and where every incitement to drink is cut off, both the drunkard and the man who sold him his last drink are punished—the former by being compelled to do labor to support his family, and the latter, by having a fine or other punishment imposed upon him. If the drunkard were thus taken in hand by the State, and the saloon keeper also, a great step forward would be taken to rid the country of a crying peril. We put robbers and incendiaries behind the prison bars; but what are their depredations compared to the crime that robs innocent wives and their children of all they hold dear in this life?—The Lutheran.

RESTFUL VACATIONS.

Miss Van Cott's mind was disturbed by the apparent monotony of the country people around her. She was spending some weeks in the mountains, and had met a number of the inhabitants of the neighboring houses. "They are fainting for the stimulus of variety, poor things!" she exclaimed one day. "They are eating their hearts out in this terrible treadmill existence! I know it, I feel it!"

"Have you ever talked with any of them about it?" inquired a friend, who had many more years to her credit than had Mrs. Van Cott.

"No, I don't like to. They must be very sensitive about such limitations."

"Oh, I don't know. Try it some day."

Miss Van Cott began her investigations with the driver of the old mail coach. He had made that same round daily, he told her, for the last twenty-three years.

"With no respite in all that time?" in a tone of deep commiseration.

"No what, miss?"

"No vacation, no holiday?"

"Oh, yes, miss, they give me two weeks every summer. Pay runs on all the same, an' I don't have to do a thing day nor night."

"Oh," with a sigh of relief, "that is something! And, of course, you spend it in town."

"Stumville? No, siree."

"Oh, no, I mean the city—seeing the sights and keeping in touch with the great world; or reading, maybe, or—how do you spend those precious fourteen days?"

The old man's face brightened at the direct question. He had been evidently somewhat puzzled over the preface to it.

"Oh, well," he returned, in placid reminiscence, "there ain't much to do around home. Jimmy, he looks after the chores, mostly. So I don't mind taking my own pleasure, an' I generally go over the route with the other man. It's wonderful how it rests a body to see his work done for him like that, an' before his very eyes, too.—Youth's Companion.

SAVED BY A BOY.

By Mrs. Mary A. Floyd.

There once lived on the Mississippi River, with his parents, a little boy whose name was Hiram Enlow. When he was about nine years old there came a young man, who had wandered from his home and friends, and was at that time stopping with the family for a while. One day this man and little Hiram went out on the river in a small dugout, which was round-built. The river being high and the current strong, they were carried down-stream some distance, and when they came to shore they were below a large drift of logs or snags of trees, which had caved into the river and were standing above the water. The swift current made it both difficult and dangerous to paddle a dugout up-stream beyond the drift, unless the boatman was strong and skillful. The man was strong, but without much skill. However, he made an effort to pass the drift, but, after paddling awhile and making no headway, he rose to his feet, and in doing so accidentally fell overboard, carrying the paddle with him.

Unable to swim, the man was helpless to save himself, and he was soon heard to pray—but not to God—the words of his prayer were, "Help! Help!" The needed help came indirectly from God.

There were men on flatboats not far away, but none of them had any means of saving the drowning man. It was, therefore, apparent that they were to see the poor man drown. Not so: God employed the weakest instrument that was near. Little Hiram heard the cries for help, and, by impulse of nature and inspiration of wisdom from God, little Hiram, with his hands, paddled the dugout to the man, and in a few moments the drowning man caught hold of the dugout.

They drifted down the river. The weight of the man holding to the side of the dugout threatened to capsize it, with the boy. Little Hiram, with the same wisdom which the Lord gave him, threw his weight to the other side of the dugout, and holding as much as possible, the man finally raised himself out of the water and rolled in the dugout from the other side, which caused the dugout to dip water.

At length the man recovered strength enough to paddle the boat to shore. But the danger was not all passed, for the man, regardless of the entreaties of little Hiram to land and leave the dugout, or at least to let him go ashore, would do neither. Up-stream again he would go! Hiram's heart ached as they passed the drift the second time.

God provided for their safety. The man yielded to the entreaties of the boy, and obeyed his instructions. The boy remembered how his father had always done, and advised the man—that was to keep his seat, and stay close to the drift, guiding and guarding it from being driven sidewise against the drift, which required skill and strength. If they had failed and been driven against the drift, they would have been drawn under by the swift current, and escape would be impossible. Notwithstanding the perils of their situation, they reached shore safely. It was evident that God, through a little boy, had saved the careless and indifferent man from a watery grave.

WITH PARDONABLE PRIDE

Mr. C. G. Chalmers has been the publisher of the ADVOCATE four years, and the undersigned is closing his ninth year as editor. The fortunes of the paper have fluctuated through all these years, as indeed it has done all along its history. But we are glad to say that the paper is now in better shape than at any time since our connection with it. We are not carrying quite as many names on our mail list as we had when the Post Office Department denied us the privilege (two years ago) of second-class mail rates to subscribers who were a year or more behind in payment, thereby forcing us to cut them off, but we have a far better paid-up list and it is growing.

If the brethren will send in new subscriptions and renewals during the next two months as they are doing now, we will carry to the Annual Conferences the best report ever made by an editor or publisher, except the report made the year preceding the Civil War. We make this statement with pardonable pride.

We would be glad to receive ONE THOUSAND new subscriptions by the 1st of December. Who will be foremost in securing this number? We respectfully and earnestly make this appeal to Louisiana and Mississippi Methodists.

Fraternally,
JOHN W. BOSWELL.

SPECIAL ISSUE.

The next issue of the ADVOCATE will be devoted to Home Mission Work, with special reference to missions in New Orleans, missions to the French in Louisiana, and the Gulf Coast missions in Mississippi. Practically everything else will be side-tracked for that issue now in hand, to go over for a week—some of it for a longer time, as fresh matter that cannot be delayed will come in between now and then.

The mission issue will, in some respects, be the most interesting and important paper we have ever sent out. Those who have favored us with contributions have taken special pains in their preparation.

We hope and pray that the paper will appeal to the hearts and purses of our readers. An extra amount of copies will be printed.

THE EVENING SERMON.

We have never been able to sympathize with those pastors who, because many of the old and faithful members of the church fail to attend the evening service, reducing by a few the number of hearers, abandon the sermon, and, instead, arrange a musical programme. This has always seemed to us as a concession to the worldly-minded of the community—a device to draw them together, not for instruction or edification, but for entertainment.

In our experience as a pastor, especially in towns, we have found the evening service more important than the morning, for then [illegible] God could [illegible]

[illegible] and we [illegible] still we [illegible]

[illegible] the morning sermon [illegible] with a sense of shame [illegible] work was [illegible] three hours on Sunday afternoon [illegible] sermon for the evening service [illegible] with light and lively, earnest attention [illegible] evidence that good was accomplished. As a matter of fact, the evening sermon was [illegible] arranged, but as well prepared [illegible] one, but it caught and held the attention of the people and was more effective.

How it is with other preachers [illegible] we do not know, but with our experience in the past, we could not be induced to abandon the evening sermon for a "sacred concert" or any other device for the sake of pleasing a few people who are satisfied with nothing except the sensational in religion.

THE CHURCH IN POLITICS.

Is the Church in politics? The [illegible] and their allies so charge. This is because Christians of all evangelical denominations are actively engaged in work to bring about the prohibition of the whisky traffic. But if every man, woman and child claiming to be Christian was so engaged, it would not follow that the Church is in politics. It would not be true, even if all the men, women and children in the Churches should engage, on their own responsibility, in a contest for tariff reform, the free coinage of silver, or any other great question involving the management of the affairs of State. Not until the Church, as such, in committee of the whole, or through duly-appointed representatives, undertakes to shape the political opinions of its members, or declares in favor of the policies of one party or another, can it be justly said to be in politics. What Church has undertaken to do this?

It is true that four-fifths, perhaps a larger percentage, of Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians and smaller bodies, are prohibitionists, together with a large number of good citizens who belong to no Church, but they were and are prohibitionists in their individual capacity, just as those members of the Church are who stand for regulation, rather than the prohibition of the traffic. It is true also that these members of the Church being prohibitionists first and of choice, have, by their votes in associations, conventions, conferences and assemblies, put their respective Churches on the side of prohibition. They have done this, not through any desire to manage the affairs of State, but as a matter of safety to the family and society. It is remarkable that the only set of prohibitionists who have manifested a desire to take charge of the government as a party, have miserably failed—failed even to secure the sympathy, to say nothing of the help, of the great body of prohibitionists. This is because the people look upon prohibition as a moral, rather than as a political issue.

But should it be admitted on all sides that prohibition is a political question, the church would be amply justified in standing for it, because its purpose is to rid the country of the greatest curse that afflicts it. Indeed, the Church would be recreant in the face of danger and faithless to its calling should it fail to endorse, not only prohibition, but every other method devised for the extirpation of intemperance. We cannot for

PERSONAL

[illegible] Rev. [illegible] W. B[illegible], of Charleston, Miss., for [illegible] work in behalf of the Advocate. The club [illegible] will be printed a little later.

We have been informed that President Weber, [illegible] College, [illegible] last week [illegible]. We have received no particulars [illegible] sickness.

Rev. J. A. Wells, of Seventh Avenue, Meridian, and Zimville charge, has been hindered of late and absent on account of the protracted sickness of his wife, but he is at his work again and hopeful.

Rev. W. G. Burks, of the Grenada Circuit, enters upon the fourth quarter with fair prospects of presenting a clean balance sheet at Conference. He serves a good and appreciative people, and his work constantly progresses.

Rev. J. E. J. Ferguson, writing from Vaughan, Miss., says: "Our work is moving along nicely—have had good meeting at every church on the work—will give you a report later." Accompanying this was a fine list—ten in number—of new and renewing subscribers.

The [illegible] Circuit, under the ministry of Rev. W. V. Shearer, has been greatly blessed the past season with revivals, resulting in the addition of one hundred and fifteen souls to the church with good prospect of gathering in more. Brother Shearer is a hard worker.

Our church at Amory, Miss., has suffered a great loss in the death of Miss Bettie Owen. She was suddenly called away by a stroke of paralysis on the 21 inst. She was buried at old Green Brier Cemetery beside her father and mother. Her pastor, Rev. W. S. Shipman, promises us a suitable memoir.

Rev. W. S. Shipman, Amory, Miss., has with him at this time, in a meeting, Rev. W. W. Scott, of the North Alabama Conference, who is no ordinary man or preacher, and is doing a great work for his Lord. Brother Shipman says: "We are expecting great results," which he will report to the Advocate in due time.

The two Meridian Colleges, under the direction of the two Presidents, J. W. and M. A. Beeson, opened the full session with a great concourse of students from many sections of the country, and some from foreign ports; and the presidents say, "The colleges have a fine student-body, perhaps the finest in many respects of any previous year."

Writing about the Ruston District, Rev. R. W. Tucker, the presiding elder, says: "The work is going successfully, and despite the very short crop, I think the preachers are going to have good financial reports. We have had some fine revivals, and some meetings to be held yet. This is a good country and as fine people as can be found anywhere."

Rev. R. D. Norsworthy, of the Mississippi Conference, and his excellent wife celebrated their golden wedding at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jno. B. Ligon, of Natchez, on the evening of September 21. We have in hand a full account of the occasion by Rev. Robt. Selby, which we will print as soon as possible. May the happy couple enjoy many more anniversaries!

Rev. Theo. Copeland, D.D., who has many friends in New Orleans, has been returned for the fourth year to St. Paul's Church, St. Louis. The church is preparing to give him a grand reception. He has accomplished a great work at St. Paul's, and is justly popular. Brother Copeland is one of our warm personal friends, and we rejoice with him in his welfare and success. May his fourth year be the most successful!

One of the "beloved" who never fails to speak a good word to the editor or of the editor (as far as we know), in a recent greeting, says: "I hope you will be able to report collections in full. The man who doesn't hand in a good report at Conference is going to feel 'mighty lonesome.'" The Advocate representative will not be "lonesome," but if he reports collections in full, it will be the first time in the history of journalism.

President H. G. Hawkins funrishes the following items concerning the opening of his school: "The formal opening exercises of the 70th session of the Port Gibson Female College were held Friday, September 24. There were appropriate talks made by Revs. P. W. Jones, M. Flowers, M. M. Black, G. H. Galloway and M. B. Sharbrough. The opening sermon was preached on Sunday by Rev. W. G. Linfield. The attendance of the students is about as large as it was for the 69th session, during which the enrollment was 128."

Now that the summer vacation is over, and the good people of Minden have returned to their houses, as have thousands in other places, the pastor, Rev. E. K. Means has entered vigorously into the fall compaign. Among the first things he did was to look after the interests of the Advocate, in which he was successful—as a list of eleven names testifies. More are to follow. Brother Means says: "Minden is a great place. I have here everything I can possibly desire and far more than I deserve. Come up and visit me and see for yourself."

Dr. J. A. B. Jones, of the Mississippi Conference closed a ministry of half a century several years ago. His ministry was commemorated at the Annual Conference by a semi-centennial sermon. He repeated the sermon at Port Gibson, Miss., on the 19th inst., where, just fifty years ago he was pastor, and where also he served only twenty years ago. A number of his old friends—including members of other churches, greeted him on this occasion. The sermon was impressive and edifying. Brother Jones is greatly loved in Port Gibson, where both he and his honored father, the late Dr. John G. Jones, served the church so well and so faithfully.

Rev. J. E. Ellis who holds forth at Gallman, Miss., and at other points rejoices on account of success in the work. At Mount Pleasant there was but one conversion, but the meeting was good. At Bethesda there were seven additions. At old Crystal Springs there were five additions. At Gallman seventeen were added to the church. Some of the old people say, "this was the best meeting ever held in Gallman." Brother Ellis was assisted in one or more of these meetings by Rev. H. B. Watkins of Hazlehurst. He proved himself to be capital help, "preaching the pure Gospel in a simple way," and by courteous manners winning the favor of the people, both poor and rich—a man who has the promise of a great future.

STORM NEWS FROM HOUMA, La.

Dear Doctor Boswell: I presume that you will have more storm news than you will have space to give to it; however, I want to give you what we have here in Terrehonne, and if you have the space, you can use it otherwise; please state that our church at Bourg, or the one that was connected with the Houma work is completely destroyed, and we will have to build from the ground again using what we can of the old lumber. We expect to do this, however, and have services in our new house before Christmas.

There is no loss of life among our people or among the Houma people. The estimate for the Parish in loss of life, runs from two to four hundred, and some of the conservative estimators put the deaths at about two hundred. Insofar as having buildings damaged and trees torn up, twisted off and limbs broken, I don't suppose that there is a house in the town of Houma that has not suffered in some of these ways. There are a number of the smaller houses down, and off the blocks. However, those that are of much value in the residences of the town, are intact with the exception of broken off chimneys and broken glasses.

The loss in the business section from the blowing off of the tin roofs is very great, estimated $70,000 or, $80,000.

Sea Breeze, where a number of our Houma people had summer camps, had a tide of fifteen feet and where there was ten or twelve camps, there is now only a large place that was once used for an oyster factory.

Private, town and parish relief fund here has reached $2,400. Yours fraternally,

C. V. BREITHAUPT.

REPORT ON HOSPITAL EXTENSION.

On September 21st there was held in Jackson, an informal meeting to discuss plans for establishing one or more Methodist hospitals.

There were present: Rev. R. A. Meek and Mr. J. H. Sherard of the Hospital Commission of the North Mississippi Conference; Dr. A. F. Watkins and Rev. C. F. Emery, appointed by Bishop Morrison to represent the Mississippi Conference; Dr. W. R. Lambuth representing the Board of Missions; Rev. A. E. Clement of the Tennessee Conference, appointed by Bishop Hoss as Financial Agent for the Galloway Hospital at Nashville; and Mrs. Robert Somerville representing the Mission Board of the Woman's Home Mission Society.

Brother Sherard, President of the Joint Hospital Commission was elected Chairman, and C. F. Emery, Secretary of the same Commission, was chosen secretary.

Prayer was offered by Dr. A. F. Watkins. Several hours were spent in careful deliberation.

Dr. W. R. Lambuth offered a resolution setting forth the great need of the church to enterprise this important work, and suggested that interest be concentrated upon the Galloway Memorial Hospital to be erected at Nashville.

Rev. C. F. Emery offered a substitute, the substance of which was that we do not at this time commit ourselves to any one plan for establishing a hospital or system of hospitals, but that we recommend that the several Annual Conference memorialize the General Conference to formulate and adopt a working plan for hospital extension and enact such legislation as will put the same into active operation.

After some discussion the following was adopted unanimously:

"Whereas, the establishment of hospitals and the ministry of the sick through Christian physicians and trained nurses has become a powerful factor in reaching the hearts of the people and strengthening their faith in Christ and Christianity; and

"Whereas, we believe the time has come for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to inaugurate a hospital extension movement throughout our entire connection; and

"Whereas, efforts are now being put forth in several different sections of our connection, looking to the establishment of a chain of hospitals; therefore, be it

"Resolved, First, That while we would not interfere with the initiative steps taken by any Annual Conference or group of Conferences, it is the sense of this meeting that the several conferences do not commit themselves to any special plan for establishing any hospital system or chain of hospitals, but leave the matter to the action of the next General Conference.

"Resolved, Second, That we hereby recommend that all annual conferences memorialize the General Conference to formulate and adopt a working plan for hospital extension and enact any legislation that may be deemed necessary for the furtherance of this cause."

C. F. EMERY, Secretary.

AN APPEAL.

Dear Brethren: Some time since I sent out an appeal for help to rebuild our church that was blown down at Longtown, Miss., some responded, but the number was very small. So we didn't begin to get enough to rebuild as we had hoped. But one of our good laymen came to our relief and assumed $250 of the amount, and completed the building; but now the time for payment is drawing nigh and there is no money in the treasury to liquidate the debt, so it will fall upon this layman to pay it if we can't get some help on the outside, and I don't feel that it is right to impose upon our good layman. So, brethren, I am going to ask you all again to take up a collection in your congregations and help us out in this matter. And brother laymen will not some eight or ten of you send a five or ten dollar check apiece on this, too. This is a very worthy cause, and I hope you brethren will appreciate the situation and respond freely to our request. You will encourage a people that need help and also help relieve a layman that has the cause of Christ at heart. Thanking you in advance for you donations. I am sincerely and cordially,

W. V. SHEARER, P. C., Longtown, Miss.

THE SARDIS DISTRICT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: The Sardis District gives promise of the best report for years. Three good churches have been built, two more are now being built, another rebuilt, and others repaired and repainted. The church at Sardis is a beauty—the best arranged church inside that I have seen in the Conference. The church at Crenshaw is a beauty; the pews have just come so that the congregation will be in the church in a few days. The church at Cacy, on Mt. Pleasant charge, was dedicated in early summer and clear of debt. It is a neat, splendid church.

There has been many good revivals and some great meetings; the finances are in better shape than this time last year; every interest of the district has improved; Sunday schools and Epworth Leagues and the Womans' Missionary Societies all show progress, and the preachers have been faithful in a high degree. Never before have I been associated with a company of preachers in the work of our great church where there was such uniform loyalty and brotherly love, and such intense application to business, the work of the church and trying to save souls. I have held six meetings for the brethren and have promised to hold one more.

Brother Hankins has been sick much of the year, but he has recently been holding meetings again. The men in their new pastorates are all doing well.

W. M. YOUNG.

NOTES AND PERSONALS BY REV. W. T. GRIFFIN.

Rev. E. C. McGilvray has given up his work, the Americus Circuit, and gone to an Iowa Conference. Rev. Lyman Roberts has been appointed by the presiding elder to take his place until Conference.

Brother W. J. Ferguson has held several revivals on his own work, and the results have been very gratifying. Many were converted and added to the church.

Rev. A. M. Broadfoot was assisted in his meeting just closed at Bay Springs by W. T. Griffin. There were reclamations and conversions and twelve members were received. This is his fourth year and his people regret that he cannot remain longer. The church has prospered. New church and parsonage built.

Mrs. L. E. Alford of Long Beach who has been in the sanitarium in New Orleans for several weeks, has returned home much improved in health.

Rev. J. T. Abney of Summit has been on a business trip to Gulfport, Miss. His work moves smoothly onward.

Miss Rhoda Anette Dragoo, our deaconess, has entered upon her work enthusiastically at Biloxi, Miss. A wise selection has evidently been made, and she is getting a hold with a master-hand.

Rev. E. W. Lipscomb and wife of Biloxi are visiting relatives at Meridan and Columbus, Miss.

The Seamen's Bethel at Gulfport continues to have good attendance and the sailors are showing their appreciation of the work.

THE BUSINESS MAN IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

On Oct. 3, 4 and 5, in the city of New Orleans, there will be held a conference in the interest of reaching more of the business men of Louisiana and securing their co-operation in Sunday school work. W. C. Pearce, of Chicago, adult superintendent of the International Association, and W. N. Wiggins, general secretary of Texas, will conduct this conference under the auspices of the Louisiana Sunday School Association. On the last day of the conference, Oct. 5th, the Executive Committee of the Louisiana Sunday School Association will hold its semi-annuaul meeting, and the conference and and committee will have a great rally on the night of the 5th. On Monday night, from 5:30 to 7 o'clock there will be a supper for men only. All men interested in the promoting of Sunday school work in Louisiana are especially invited. At 7 o'clock there will be a great parade of business men interested in religious education in the State. Tuesday night, from 5:30 to 7:30 the State Executive Committee will hold their annual dinner in honor of the out-of-town members of the committee, and at the closing session Mr. Pearce will deliver an address on "The Men of Louisiana for the Man of Galliee." Special rates on all roads.

FROM CARTHAGE, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I am glad to be able to report our very successful revivals this summer within the bounds of the Carthage Charge. The first, held at Singleton the fifth Sunday in August—was very good, indeed, in fact, it surpassed anything ever held in that part of the country. The church has been very cold and indifferent for several years past, but some had become aroused and were anxious about the condition of the church, and many earnest prayers were offered up in behalf of the success of the meeting, and as soon as the preaching began, there it was clearly demonstrated that God was with us and was going to honor our petitions. Rev. C. N. Guice did all the preaching, and in an able manner, and to the [illegible] [illegible] that God was with him, since every sermon seemed to have been a direct answer to our prayers "as it just fit the occasion," and not a service passed after Monday, 11 a.m., without several being either converted or reclaimed. The congregations were large from the first—in fact, we had an overflowing house at every service, and by Tuesday night the people were literally flocking out, and at night they would meet an hour before preaching to be sure of a seat and hear "Brother Guice."

The final outcome was thirty-four accessions, nearly all young men and women; twenty-four pledges for family altars above those already established, and no way apparently of telling how many conversions, as the whole community was more or less moved, and feeling still running high.

We closed Friday and began at the Carthage church at once. Brother Guice did the preaching here also, and in an able manner, which was inspiring and filled with solid thought and food for the soul. Interest was not altogether as good here as it was at Singleton, but the meeting gradually worked its way among the people, and they say it was the best held here in fifteen or twenty years. We received sixteen accessions, ten family altars pledges, and one close observer said there were at least thirty-five or forty conversions.

Doctor, we did not forget the Advocate altogether, while we were anxious for souls for our Lord, because we believe it does good every week for God and the church. Inclosed is a list of twelve subscriptions, which makes my number in all twenty-four.

May God bless the Advocate and its staff.

B. E. MEIGS.

FROM DEASONVILLE CHARGE.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I have been thinking for some time I would send you a sketch of my work. I have an outside row, and it is badly squirrel-eaten, but praise the Lord for that. I am in the local ranks, or you may call it evangelistic work if you will. I am under Brother J. E. J. Ferguson, on the Deasonville Charge. I love Brother Ferguson. He is a religious young man. His heart is in the work. Everything is moving along well. He has good meetings so far. Many accessions to the church; collections are well up, and we are praying for this to be a year to be long remembered on Deasonville Charge.

I have seven regular appointments on the charge. I am devoting all the time I can to the work. I go where I am impressed to go or where they send for me. I have just returned from Leake County, where I was invited to come and hold a meeting. I was away back in the sticks. I preached ten days for the people in that place. There were shining results of great good accomplished there. We closed the meeting with the house running over and some in the [illegible] and fifty persons came forward for prayer the last service. My motto is, "Let the people alone." I believe in plain preaching. I believe in going in [illegible] against sin. Better have plain talk here than in the Judgment. Jesus said, "Ye shall know them by their fruits."

HENRY L. GILLEN.

SUBMITTED TO YOUR GOOD JUDGMENT WITHOUT COMMENT.

Atlanta, Ga., Sept. 1st, 1909.

In examination of the active principles of tea, coffee and COCA-COLA we find that tea contains from [illegible] to [illegible] per cent. caffeine and from 13.41 to 17.24 per cent. of tannic acid.

Coffee contains [illegible] per cent. to [illegible] per cent. of caffeine and also tannic acid in smaller quantities than found in tea. The average cup of coffee contains about 1 grain of caffeine, though a "strong" coffee, which is more and more coming into use, a cup is likely to contain as much as [illegible] grains of caffeine.

Therefore, a person drinking a cup of coffee is likely to get from 1 to 2 grains of caffeine; the more cups he drinks the more caffeine in proportion.

COCA-COLA contains [illegible] grains of caffeine per ounce of the syrup, which means per glass of COCA-COLA as 1 ounce of syrup is used in making a glass of beverage. The pure COCA-COLA syrup, therefore, contains [illegible] of 1 per cent. caffeine and since there are six ounces of water added to this and one ounce of pure COCA-COLA syrup to make the seven ounces of fluid found in a glass of COCA-COLA, we find that a single glass of COCA-COLA contains in round numbers [illegible] of 1 per cent. caffeine.

Comparing this amount of caffeine with the amount found in a cup of coffee or tea, we find that in a glass of COCA-COLA there is just about one third the amount of caffeine to be found in the other two beverages mentioned.

Caffeine in the small amount found in COCA-COLA could not be considered a strong stimulant, but merely a mild one, and by its slighter stimulating effects upon the nervous system, it refreshes the mind, causes more animation, and thus, physiologically, tends to relieve, temporarily, fatigue and mental exhaustion.

To sum up: coffee and tea, on account of the large amount of tannic acid and violatile oils which they contain, tend, in the long run, to interfere with digestion, and the large amount of caffeine, which they contain, renders them more harmful if drunk to excess. On the other hand, COCA-COLA does not contain any substance which can in any way interfere with the digestive system; while the small amount of caffeine contained slightly stimulates the heart and nervous system and refreshes the whole mechanism. Yours very truly,

Destroyed by Lightning, Saved by Insurance

That is the story of many churches, and yet many are damaged or destroyed—and no insurance whatever. This latter number is decreasing and has been since our

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property-holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to conneet free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property-holders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically not outlay of ready cash. People Interested in this proposition should consult C. C Hartwell & Co., for a detailed explanation.

COLUMBUS CIRCUIT.

Perhaps it is due the good people and former pastors of this work, that I send in some items, as I have not reported this year.

I have just closed my last revival. At all the churches where we have been, God has wonderfully blessed the Word. We have received about forty into the church. We have had some of the sweetest services that I have ever experienced. God still honors and blesses his word when it is preached in love, but without fear or favor. We have had great demonstrations of the Spirit's power in our midst.

Brothers J. E. Thomas and S. A. Brown helped me greatly in two meetings. I don't know two more forceful and effective preachers in our church than these brethren. Fearless as lions, and yet meek as lambs, "wise as serpents, and harmless as doves." Our meetings were all at high-water tide. But I believe that as in the case of our Lord's wine, we had the best, last. This meeting was held at the church commonly known as Vaughn's Church. So-called because the church is largely made up of the Vaughn family. And by the way, there is no better people in our Methodism than the Vaughns.

Brother S. A. Brown came to me on Monday, at this place and the power of the Spirit was visible from the first service. And on Tuesday we had the most effective service that it has been my pleasure to witness in many years.

At Flint Hill, we had a great victory. Brother Thomas preached some strong gospel sermons. We had good results, and we think that a foundation was laid and a work begun that will live and grow throughout eternity. At the other churches I did the preaching. God was with me and many souls were saved. To him be all the glory.

GOOD WORDS FOR MISSIONARIES.

A number of British officials in India have borne witness to the character and ability of missionaries in that great portion of the British Empire. The latest, perhaps, is that of Sir Andrew Fraser, late Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, who in an address before the great "Missions in India" meeting in London recently said:

"I have served in two provinces, and I have known as many missionaries as possible in both. I have gone in commissions under government over the whole of India, and visited every province and many native states, and in every place I have becomes acquainted with the missionaries. I claim for a layman an exceptional right to speak in regard to missions. I throw myself with all my weight into the class of witnesses who come to speak with thankfulness to God of what they have seen in the past, and hopefulness in regard to the future.—Missionary Review of the World.

BOOK ON OPIUM AND WHISKEY HABITS.

Dr. B. M. Woolley, of Atlanta, Ga., has published a little booklet entitled "Opium and Whiskey Habits and Their Cure." Such a work will not appeal to the public in general, but if you happen to know of anyone who should have it, you can do him an act of kindness by sending the Doctor his name and address and the book will be sent with the author's compliments.

Dear Brethren of the Baton Rouge District: Please see that your official boards bring to the Fourth Quarterly Conference the proper financial reports.

Charges desiring assistance from the Mission Board will please take notice that it is the policy of the Board of Missions to help those who show a disposition to help themselves. The appropriations for the year 1911 will probably be made on a basis of what was done in 1910, rather than on promises to do things in 1911.

Will all the pastors please try to have their entire official boards present at the Fourth Quarterly Conferences? Let the pastors be prepared to nominate stewards and trustees who will do the work to which they are elected.

It was in this very cottage in Brookside, 15 miles from Birmingham, Ala., that three Italians nearly died of Fever. They had been sick 3 months. Johnson's Tonic cured them quickly—read letter below:

Brookside, Ala., May 4, 19[illegible]

The two physicians here had 3 very obstinate cases of continued Malarial Fever. All were Italians and lived on a creek 50 yards from my store. These cases were of three months standing, their temperature ranging from 100 to 104. The doctors had tried everything in vain. I persuaded them to let me try Johnson's Tonic. I removed all the printed matter and let the medicine go out in a plain bottle as a regular prescription. The effect in all three cases was immediate and permanent. They recovered rapidly, and there was no recurrence of the Fever.

PORT VINCENT, LA.

Dear Dr. Boswell: As I feel delighted to see so many letters from different points and enjoy reading the good results of the summer meetings, I feel that perhaps some one would like to know what we are doing on the Port Vincent charge. The Lord has been with us in all of our meetings. We have held two meetings at Port Vincent, one in June beginning the third Sunday, with Rev. R. S. Walton, of Hammond, who did the preaching. The power of God was with him. The church was greatly strengthened.

Our second meeting began the first Sunday in September, closing the fourth. Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt, of Zachary, La., preached with power, and every one was made better by his preaching.

We held a meeting at Sibley's Grove, with our pastor doing the preaching. The meeting was begun the third Sunday in August, and was a success. The power of God was with us from the beginning. We had twelve accessions to the church. Men and women cried out, "What must I do to be saved?" Our meeting was one to be long remembered. The Lord gove us the victory over sin. He was in our midst to own and to bless.

We have received nineteen members on the work and baptized twenty-three children. Our churches are moving on nicely at every appointment, spiritually.

As the year draws to a close we look back and see the hand of God in all things. We learn to walk closer with him and trust him for his goodness.

No Cough

Your doctor's approval of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral will certainly set all doubt at rest. Do as he says. He knows. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

Have not coughed once all day? Yet you may cough tomorrow! Better be prepared for it when it comes. Ask your doctor about keeping Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in the house. Then when the hard cold or cough first appears you have a doctor's medicine right at hand.

BABY SAVED HER

"I was sick for three years," writes Mrs. Nolie Jones, of Russellville, Tenn. "I had a doctor and took medicine regularly, but grew worse, until last spring I was past going out and was just skin and bones.

"One day I noticed my baby playing with one of your Ladies Birthday Almanacs. I picked it up and from it learned of your Wine of Cardui.

"I have taken 4 bottles of Cardui and am well and hearty. Weigh 145 pounds. I believe Cardui saved my life and I hope all women who suffer as I did will try it."

Cardui is a pure, vegetable medicine for women. It has been found to relieve or cure nervousness, headache, backache, pain in the side and other female ailments.

If you are suffering, try Cardui at once. Thousands of letters come to us, from grateful women who have found relief in Cardui. If it has done so much for them, it surely will help you—just one more. Try it.

All reliable druggists sell Cardui, with full directions for use inside wrapper.

N. B. We will be glad to send you one of our Ladies Birthday Almanacs, if you will send postal card, asking for it. Address: Chattanooga Medicine Co., Chattanooga, Tenn.

LESSON FOR OCT. 3, 1909.

PAUL A PRISONER—THE ARREST.

Acts xxi, 27-39.

Golden Text "Thou therefore endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ."—II Tim ii, 3.

Paul and the disciples from Cesarea reached Jerusalem and were welcomed in a brotherly manner; the Scripture says, received gladly; but when the apostle went before James and all the elders, the very first words said seemed an echo of the warning that had been given more than once before. It was true that God had wrought a great work among the Gentiles, and for that they all glorified God. James conceded the conversion of many thousands of the Jews, yet these same Jews were still all zealous of the law; they adhered to many ceremonials in the Mosaic law; Paul had not spoken against this formality, neither had he insisted that the Gentile converts be made to conform thereto. The Jews were inclined to exaggerate Paul's attitude in teaching the Gentiles; they accused him of luring many away from the sacred precepts that were a part of the Jewish life. They had grown wroth concerning it, as the following incidents will show: James and the elders of the church knew of Paul's work and had approved of it, they also knew of the feeling that smouldered like a fire, in the hearts of the Jerusalem Jews, and they began at once to devise means for Paul's safety. The means of placating the disturbers of peace was suggested by the chief of the church; if left to his own will, Paul would have boldly walked through the temple porches, just as Jesus did when he told a wondering multitude that his Father's house was a house of prayer. That which Paul was advised to do was the very cause of arousing the people to the madness of a mob, and in less time than it takes to write it he was a prisoner and in imminent danger of being put to death, and all Jerusalem was in an uproar.

Paul's assent to the suggestion of James, which ended so disastrously, was no compromise of principle, he was willing to conform to any mere outward formality if by that means he could peacefully work among the countrymen he loved so well. He would submit to anything if it enabled him to teach that "the Lord seeth not as man seeth, for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart." This truth was spoken by the Prophet Samuel, yet it had never been learned, and it was no time then to hold back on principles that could only be learned when the heart was touched hy the gospel of Christ in its fulness. Then, again, Paul's mission to Jerusalem was one of peace; he was full of a desire for reconciliation hetween Jewish and Gentile converts, and any controversy would act against this reconciliation. As the infuriated mob ran upon the apostle, who were the first to cry, "Help! men of Israel"? Asiatic Jews, who were thwarted in a similar movement at Ephesus. When they beheld Paul there in that holy city, and in the holy temple, and at the time of the holy Pentecost, their wrath transformed them from religious Jews to mad fanatics.

The roar of the mob continued, and the signal of insurrection came to the captain in command of the Roman garrison, who rushed a detachment of troops to the scene of disturbance. When the rioters saw the advancing soldiers they left off beating Paul, hut still held him until the captain came near and took charge of him, binding him with not one chain, but two chains, asking who his prisoner was, and of what had he heen guilty. Some of the mob tried to answer, hut the confusion prevented them being understood, and the threatening violence of the people was so, that the soldiers had to actually carry Paul away from them. "Away with him" cried the mob, moved by the same satanic spirit that thirty years before, made the mob follow Jesus clamoring for his crucifixion. Jesus had come to them to speak peace, so had Paul, but Jerusalem never learned the things that made for her peace. Her terrihle destruction in after years was foretold by the Savior as he wept over the city of David.

It was Paul's desire to publicly proclaim unto the people, as well as to the Roman authorities, his identity and the real cause of intense feeling toward him. So, as he was being led away, he made request of the chief captain that he be permitted to speak to the people; and then, on the steps that led up to the fortress, he turned and faced the mob that was clamoring for his life, and in their native tongue he told of the time when he was full of zeal for the law, even to persecuting all who were seemingly remiss in its observance. Then he told of the great change that had taken place in his life. There he stood, bound with chains, on the steps that led to the prison, boldly proclaiming his obedience to the one he called Lord, the one seen in the vision, even Jesus of Nazareth, that had suffered death at the hands of his own people. His audience had no ears for such a recital: "Away with such a fellow from the earth; for it is not fit that he should live!"

After this Paul, the prisoner, was taken into the castle. He had grown accustomed to persecution, and was ready even to die for the name of the Lord Jesus. The love for Christ had made him ready for anything that was before him, in the road that he was to walk, in the service of his Lord.

This is the best lesson for us to learn—that even our lives should be given for his service. The day may come, even in this generation, when we will be put to the test to try our loyalty to the Savior. Then let us he ready to acknowledge him even amidst persecution, and before the world, that he may confess us before the Father and all the holy angels in heaven.

TOPIC FOR OCTOBER 3, 1909.

OBEDIENCE AND ABUNDANCE.

Mal. iii:10; Prov. xi:24, 25.

(For the Christian Stewardship Covenant.)

Malachi asks a dramatic question, "Will a man rob God?" Then with accusing words he condemns Israel for robbing God of the tithes and offerings which they owed to the House of the Lord. The Psalmist puts the thought differently: "The liberal soul shall be made fat; and he that watereth shall be watered also himself." It is perfectly plain that the Lord has commanded men to give freely of their possessions, and promised to bless them if they give.

WHY SHOULD MEN GIVE?

You and yours belong to the Lord. You hold nothing absolutely; you are stewards at his will. Your possessions you hold but for a limited time, and then you must account for the way in which you have used them. The Master has a right to demand of his stewards that they use his things according to his will. He has commanded that we should use part of our treasures for the welfare of others. He has set for us the pattern of a self-sacrificing life, and unless we give of the things he has given to us, until we feel it, we can never acquire the unselfish character of our Lord. Freely he has given us all things, and freely would he have us give ourselves and our possessions to those who need our help.

HOW MUCH SHOULD MEN GIVE?

As much as they can cheerfully give. It is written, the Lord loveth a cheerful giver. That which the heart does not give, is not recorded in heaven, for our Infinite Father could do without any of our little treasures. According as the Lord has prospered you. The "widow's mite" was of priceless value because it was her all. The Lord expects of each of us the things which we are able to give. From the rich, large gifts, and from the poor according to their means. The size of your offering to the Lord's work, is measured by the means which you have to offer. It would seem as if the total offering of any year, should not be less than a tenth of your net income. The Mosaic law, is not binding on us in its letter, but it would certainly seem as if we should at least do as much under the inspiration of love as the Jew did under constraint of law. And after all, the tithe as a part devoted to the Lord's work, is much older than the Mosaic law. When the Master criticises the Pharisees for tithing, and neglecting the weightier matters of the law, he says, "These ought ye to have done, and not to have left the other undone." It does seem as if every man should fix a proportion of his income that should be the minimum of his giving, and that proportion should hardly be less than a tenth.

TO WHAT AND TO WHOM SHOULD MEN GIVE?

Tithing, or any other system of giving, is not intended to provide a mechanical substitute for the heart. It only sets the heart free from some of the trammels of selfishness. The problem becomes, what would my Lord have me do? This should be a matter of prayer and study. The fields of philanthropy have room for all that men care to give. Much nonsense has been written about the difficulty of giving away a million. The man who wants to do so, can place a hundred millions so that every cent of it will be doing the Lord's work. Before you there opens varied fields of work in your home church, in the needs of your fellow-men all around you, in the educational fields, in the problems of church extension, and of the foreign fields. When the heart leads you to the Master's feet to find wisdom to wisely use the means he has intrusted to you, the ways will open, whether your wealth is counted by nickels or by millions.

THE OVERFLOWING BLESSING

There is a singular challenge in the passage quoted from Malachi: To the man who devotes a tenth, the Lord promises an uncontainable blessing. Those who have tested this challenge have never had cause to regret it. If such were the measure of the giving among professed Christians, what a relief there would be in the problems of the kingdom. There would be none of the humiliating experiences now encountered by the servants of the King, when they go begging for money to do the Lord's work. The children of the King should never have to beg. The Church would move steadily forward to do many things which now are considered the dreams of visionaries. May the Lord help us all to dream dreams and see visions, and then to bring to pass the dreams, and to make our visions abiding realities.

Bodi-Tone

The Bodi-Tone Company

wants you to try a full-sized one dollar box of Bodi-Tone at its risk and expense, so that you will get acquainted with this new scientific medicinal combination, which is going to become the foremost medicine used by the American People. We want you to send us the Bodi-Tone Coupon, giving us your full name and address, and the one dollar box of Bodi-Tone will be sent to you by next post, without a penny for you to pay unless it TONES ALL YOUR BODY.

Bodi-Tone

is just what its name means—A TONE FOR ALL THE BODY and we want you to try it and see what it will do for YOUR body. Bodi-Tone is a little round tablet that is taken three times every day. Each $1.00 box contains seventy-five Bodi-Tones, enough for twenty-five days continuous use, and we send you the full box without a penny in advance, so that you can try it and learn what it is, so you can learn how easy and simple it is to take, so you can learn how it works in the body, how it helps nature to tone every organ in the body.

Bodi-Tone

is a new remedy, but the ingredients which compose it are as old as the science of medicine itself. Its composition is not secret. Every one of the twelve valuable ingredients which go to make up Bodi-Tone are well known to all doctors of all schools; each one has a well defined, well known and thoroughly established place in the realm of medicine and is prescribed by physicians every day in the year. Among the ingredients which compose Bodi-Tone are Iron, for the Blood, Phosphate to help tone the Nerves, Lithia for the Kidneys, Gentian for the Stomach, Chinese Rhubarb for the Liver, Cascara, which restores tone to the Bowels and Intestines, and Peruvian Bark for the General System. We claim no credit for these ingredients, each of which has its own well-deserved place in the Materia Medicas of all the civilized world and are recommended by all modern medical writers and teachers—we simply claim credit for the manner in which they are combined, for the proportions used, for the remedy—Bodi-Tone, which they make and which we want to send you immediately, as soon as you write for it, so you can try it and learn how it acts.

Bodi-Tone

is no new-fangled, secret, mysterious, "discovered by accident," Egyptian, Indian, Chinese, Shaker or Quaker remedy. It depends upon no superstition or romantic story to make people believe in its efficacy. It is the scientific prescription of well known and competent doctors and chemists, and is compounded in one of the largest and best known pharmaceutical laboratories in the United States. It was conceived with the purpose, which we announce to all the world, to give the people a pure and safe household and home medicine, one that has medical authority behind it, one that doctors could sanction and approve, one whose composition could be boldly proclaimed and being all this, it is destined to become the foremost proprietary medicine of the century, a genuine pure food and drug medicine.

Bodi-Tone

though a scientific medicinal combination, is prepared from such remedies which the common people as well as the doctors KNOW TO BE GOOD, which they can place confidence in, which they know they can safely use, and most of all, is composed of things which make it a GOOD REMEDY. It is right all through, from the first to the twelfth ingredient, a remedy that knows its work in the body and does it in a way that satisfies the body-owner. It is a pure remedy that all the family, young and old can use. It contains no poisonous drugs, it contains no harmful drugs, it contains nothing that we are ashamed to tell all the world, it contains no ingredient that your own family doctor will not endorse and say is a good thing. It does not depend on drugging the body. It does not kill pain with opium or morphine. It does not excite the body with alcohol, but it tones the body with the remedies nature intended to tone the body, or that power would not have been given to them.

Bodi-Tone

offers its valuable services to you right now, right from this page, if you are sick, if you need medicinal help, if your body is not in right, natural and normal tone. That is what Bodi-Tone is for—TO HELP NATURE RESTORE TONE TO THE BODY, to help nature restore normal health, energy, vigor, strength and weight. If there is anything wrong with your Kidneys, Bodi-Tone helps to restore tone to the Kidneys, helps to set them right. If there is anything wrong with your Stomach, Bodi-Tone helps to tone the Stomach, helps to set the wrong right. If there is anything wrong with your Blood, your Liver, your Bowels or your General System, the ingredients in Bodi-Tone, which are endowed by nature with a special action in these parts, go right to work and keep on working day after day, exerting always a well understood, definite action that produces general results of the kind sufferers appreciate. If you have Rheumatism, Bodi-Tone, a splendid eliminant, helps to eliminate the Uric Acid from the system while it restores tone to the Kidneys, Stomach and Blood, thereby exerting a continual anti-rheumatic effect which makes it hard for rheumatism to obtain or retain a foothold in the system. Bodi-Tone should be used by all women suffering from any of the various Female Ailments, for its toning properties are especially valuable in such ailments.

Bodi-Tone

is especially urged for all chronic sufferers who have tried honest, reputable physicians at home and elsewhere without getting the relief and permanent benefit desired. If your local doctor is doing you no real good, if you have given him a real and honest chance to do what he can and the medical combinations he has used have failed, then give THIS SCIENTIFIC, MODERN COMBINATION of old-time remedies a chance to show what it can do for you.

A Trial of Bodi-Tone

is yours for the asking. You need not send any money—do not send any stamps. The Bodi-Tone Company wants to spend every penny of the trial's cost, wants to send the medicine to you, wants you to give it a trial for a full period of twenty-five days before you pay one single penny. Simply fill out the Bodi-Tone Coupon, mail it to the Bodi-Tone Company, Chicago, and let Bodi-Tone do its work for you.

Obituaries.

JOSEPH ENOCH CARRUTH was born April 18, 1841. His parents were Presbyterians, but he never united with that church. When but a young man, he united with the M. E. Church, South, at Adams. He spent four years in the Civil War, being engaged in many battles. A member of his company says: "He was as true a soldier as could be found." During the war he was converted in a meeting at some point in Georgia. Jan. 5, 1871, he was married to Miss Melisa A. Tarver. This union was blessed with seven children, three of these with the mother preceded him to the glory land. March 10, 1897, he was married again to Miss Mary Ada King. This union was blessed with six children; four of these children, with the mother, are left to mourn their loss. There never lived a truer, more loyal and consecrated member of the church than "Uncle Enoch." He could have said with the poet,

"For her my tears shall fall;
For her my prayers ascend;
To her my cares and toils be given,
Till toils and cares shall end."

For a number of years he had been secretary and treasurer of the board of stewards, recording steward, and Bible teacher in the Sunday School. He always found something to do. He was a natural leader, and people loved to follow him. I have never known a man that had more influence, and could command more men than did Brother Carruth. He was known for his piety, faithfulness, and liberality. The preachers of the Mississippi Conference as well as others in other Conferences knew and loved him. He was a true soldier of the cross. At Adams he could do more with the people than any other man. They looked on him as a man of prayer and good judgment; this he was, and what he said and thought had its weight. Back of every word and experience, there was steadfastness, with a holy life. He made mistakes, but was always ready to correct them. Not only was Brother Carruth useful in church, but in State, as well. He was popular in the affairs of county, being a member of the board of education at the time of his death. He was a Mason of the highest type. So much was he loved and appreciated by his brethren of the lodge, that from time to time, they not only permitted him to hold every office in the lodge, but since his death, there has been placed in the hall an enlarged photograph. He was a good man, a kind husband and father, a sympathizing, and helpful friend, a useful citizen, a self-sacrificing and diligent layman. He loved all, and worked untiringly for the salvation of all. His death was not unexpected, though none were ready for it. After confinement to his bed for three or more weeks, his spirit departed this life on the evening of Feb. 27, 1909. Sunday, Feb. 28, in the presence of a large congregation, after services conducted by the pastor, we laid his body away in the Adams Cemetery. His pastor,

Little LUCILE ANDREWS was born July 14, 1906; and died July the 29th, 1909. She was a bright child. Her chair is vacant, her little voice will be heard no more, and I am going to think of her as a little angel to guide papa and mamma home to heaven. Dear parents, think of her sweet life on earth! For three short years she was a source of pleasure to us. She never did wound our hearts or cause us pain, and to-day she is with Jesus, a tender bud plucked to bloom in a brighter world. May God soon heal the wound is my prayer. And may papa and mamma be ready when the summons comes.

GRANDMOTHER.

LEE CARLETON GRAVES, infant son of Rev. W. W. and Mrs. Nora Graves was born September 20, 1908, and died September 11, 1909. The cooing voice which was the sweetest music in the home is hushed in death. The baby smiles that brought sunshine into the home lie buried in the grave. The sweet touch of the tiny fingers will be missed so much by mother, but little Lee Carleton lives with God for "of such is the kingdom of heaven." We tenderly laid the little baby to rest in the Homewood Cemetery about four o'clock Saturday afternoon, September 11th, where it will peacefully sleep till the resurrection morning. A great concourse of people attended the funeral, and the little grave was literally covered with flowers, so appreciative are those good people of their pastor and his family. May the Lord bless them all.

CONFERENCE AT ALEXANDRIA.

I want to prepare a folder for distribution throughout Louisiana Methodism, containing information about the Annual Conference in December. In it I want to anounce railroad rates, hotel rates for visitors and whatever part of the program can be announced. I also want to publish calls for committees, etc., and wish the chairman would send announcements to me soon.

Suggestions to the Committee on Public Worship will be appreciated. With proper advertising there ought to be 500 visitors to the Conference.

Yours truly,
H. R. SINGLETON.

PORT GIBSON FEMALE COLLEGE, Port Gibson, Miss., offers to several young ladies who will enter before October 15th students' work, positions by which the expenses for the session may be reduced to a small figure.

REPORT FROM VERONA CHARGE.

We have held our three meetings. The church was very much revived at each place. We received eleven into the church, and baptized six children. We are greatly indebted to Revs. W. W. Jones, of Rienzi, and V. C. Curtis, of Coldwater, for valuable ministerial aid. They both preached the gospel in simplicity and effectiveness. May they live long to bless the world. Our prayer meetings at Verona are well attended, and are spiritual. Our Sunday schools are increasing in interest and numbers. The good women are truly loyal to their missionary societies and parsonage improvement (you know, we are especially gratified at the latter). Our school opened up last week, with fine prospects—twenty-four boarders. Our town is quite healthy, notwithstanding the longest spell of the hottest weather we have had in many years. It has been trying on our fleshy presiding elder, who has run like a streak over the district, almost, in the month of July, filling his entire list of appointments, and at some places preaching many times, giving us some new things all the time, especially in the way of illustrations; but he has some good old, hardy Irish blood in him, and he can stand it. We would like for him to come this way more frequently.

Our crops are cut short, but we have much more than we deserve.

Some of the boys seem to be much interested about the next General Conference, and some about the next Annual. I guess they are thinking about the starting point to the General Conference. I trust the Spirit of the good Lord and the suitableness of men will defeat all manipulations to elect radical or unsuitable men as delegates to the General Conference. We want no politics in our Conferences, schools or missions. We do especially want our school property to remain ours, to which so many Methodist preachers gave liberally, and gave without ever dreaming that "our household" would ever be divided as to whether we should own our own, or turn it over to secular hands. Surely, we will not do the latter. I trust we still have loyal element enough in the M. E. Church, South, to prevent radical legislation. She has been baptized with the tears of as good men and women, who have long since gone to their reward, as ever graced this earth, as well as having been baptized by the Holy Ghost. May she exist intact until the second coming of our Lord.

FIRST CHURCH, COLUMBUS.

Dear Advocate: While many others sought the breezes on the mountain heights or by the seashore, I tarried by the stuff. For several weeks I was the only pastor in town. I spent part of two weeks assisting Brother Mounger at Eupora and Maben, and all the remainder of the time looking after church affairs. I believe a preacher needs a vacation. It is true, the wise ones tell us, that the devil never takes a vacation, but we are not following his example.

Church matters are moving along in Columbus. Dr. M. H. Wells, the young man at Second Church, begins a meeting the third Sunday.

My own charge shows some life in the Epworth League and Sunday school. Truth is, we have the best League I ever saw. Our Sunday school numbers about 560, or more, on the roll. W. H. Carter is the efficient superintendent. Some of our people are blue over the crop prospect, but I notice that they do not deny themselves the ordinary pleasures they are accustomed to.

The brethren will be glad to know that Brother A. P. Leech is in fine health; has been preaching more than usual this year, and steps around as spry as a boy.

We still keep up our class meeting. Every Wednesday morning a number of elect women and occasionally a man meet and pray and talk about God's love and the spiritual condition of the city.

The Conference year is nearly gone. A little over two months, and the clans will gather at Okolona to meet Bishop Hoss. Much yet remains to be done. I hope all of us can report: "Had a good year, Bishop." T. W. LEWIS.

FROM ZION CHURCH.

Dear Dr. Boswell: The protracted meeting held by Revs. George Fikes and M. L. White, beginning Sept. 2, closed Sept. 9. Brothers White and Fikes, and the members seemed to be filled with the Holy Spirit the entire time. The meeting was interesting to all who attended. Brother White delivered sixteen fine sermons, each being better than the preceding one. He gave us two each day until the last day, when he gave us three. Young people who had never listened to preaching were very attentive. It was indeed a glorious revival.

Rev. James Moore, of Damascus, was with us on Sunday and Thursday, and conducted the experience meeting, and we had a very good meeting. People testified who had never testified before, and people prayed who had never prayed in public.

Revs. John Hays and Sam Ferguson were with us on Sunday. Quite a number of the Walnut Grove people attended, everybody being anxious to see Brother White and receive the great message he was bringing. We appreciated their presence, not only that, but their kind service while with us.

Brother White served us here on the Walnut Grove Circuit for four years, and the people would have been pleased to have him four more. He served until 1906. He had the Zion Church house constructed and organized in 1904. It was organized with a small number. The first protracted meeting was held in September of the same year, the number of members increasing to near fifty, and it has been steadily growing spiritually and financially ever since.

The church will accommodate a large congregation, but was not large enough to accommodate the many people who attended. This was the fifth protracted meeting held in the Zion Church, and probably the most profitable, the first and last being held by Brother White.

During this protracted meeting there were twenty-seven accessions to the church, twenty-three of whom were baptized. There was shouting and great rejoicing over the members, especially some whom a great many people thought were lost. Thirty-three little ones were baptized.

The committee for collection was composed of Misses Lottie Parker, Delia Mae Hamil and Winnie Brooks. Owing to the shortage here in crops, the collection was not what it would have been, although it was sufficient to defray Brother White's expenses and have a purse of considerable amount to carry away with him.

We all sincerely desire Brother White's help and presence in another meeting, it being God's will.

FROM OLIVE BRANCH.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Will you allow a few words from Olive Branch? I am just home from ten weeks' work in protracted meetings, somewhat tired and worn as a result of the continuous strain and oppressive heat and floating dust gone through with the summer's work.

My meetings have been very gratifying in results—a number of souls saved, a goodly number of additions to the church and my church membership greatly revived and made more aggressive in the work.

I have six Sunday schools and have only five churches on this charge. Have three prayer meetings, which are carried on weekly. I have now by far the banner Epworth League in our Conference, if not the banner League in Mississippi. I organized this League at Olive Branch, where some said we could not have a League, the past spring, and to-day we enroll over one hundred members. I have some very efficient and enthusiastic League workers in this League. I enjoy very much working with the young people. They are my truest, best friends.

My League at Kelly deserves special mention and praise, as this noble band of twenty-five, nearly all young people, was the banner League in Sardis District last year; and one of the best in its financial report in our Conference.

Everything goes well at Olive Branch. Finances about up to date. Nothing preventing, Olive Branch will report "in full" at Okolona.

I have a fine people, who are thoughtful of and kind to their preacher and his family. Forward we march.

Correspondents will please direct all communications intended for the Editor to 512 Camp St., New Orleans, La. Communications intended for the Business Department should be addressed to the Manager of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. Write with ink, and only on one side of the paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after two weeks, notify us, and we will make it right. Papers will be continued unless subscribers order otherwise.

There are three great exhibitions in full swing at this time in our great country. Mr. Taft, the President, is said to be swinging 'round the circle, and while he does not attract as many people in one day as do the other exhibitions, it is safe to say that before he gets back to Washington, he will have seen and spoken to more citizens, twice over than attended the Seattle fair which is about closing. That attraction has been on for three months or more, and has proved to be immensely interesting, and probably will prove to be of great practical benefit to the great Northwest. The third attraction is the Hudson-Fulton celebration in New York. Three hundred years ago Hudson with his little schooner sailed up the Hudson river, and a white man for the first time saw that beautiful stream. And one hundred years ago Robert Fulton steamed up the Hudson on his newly invented boat, the "Clermont"—the first craft to be driven by power other than oars and wind. It was a weak and slow boat, but the forerunner of water crafts that revolutionized the carrying trade of the world. The celebration now on in New York, eclipses anything in the way of display, parading and illuminating a city has ever seen in the country. The people greatly rejoice.

We are not sure that our neighbor, the editor of the Times-Democrat, was serious or only joking when in a recent article he criticised the president of a photographer's association, who in his annual address "demanded laws to protect the public from poor photographing." That he was poking fun at the president is evident. That he was jesting in his strictures concerning "the baby in the bowl" is not so certain. Whether so or not, the strictures are to the point. He does not see why a photographer should condemn poor pictures and at the same time be guilty of encouraging adoring parents in the silly custom of having their babies photographed naked in a bowl, or next to naked sitting on the floor, thus becoming "accessory before and after the fact" to a thing that will put a young woman or young man to shame in after years. The editor calls such pictures "cunning little atrocities perpetrated upon defenseless" little ones. And surely they are. But if it is out of order to photograph babies after the fashion named, it is just as much out of order to make a photo-engraving and print it in a newspaper. The paper that does it is certainly an "accessory after the fact." We hope to see no more such pictures in the "good old Times-Democrat."

Under the head of "Making a Farm Pay," the Washington Post has the following to say: "Southern farmers cannot fail to find much of interest and profit in a recent Department of Agriculture publication, "A Profitable Cotton Farm," by C. L. Goodrich, one of the government's experts. The farm in question is located in South Carolina, and in 1902, when its present owner took possession, it was in a deplorably bad condition, after having been under cultivation for about eighty years. Now it is fertile, well improved with fences and farm buildings, and is producing crops which yield the owner a handsome profit and a large income. All this has been accomplished by a deep and thorough cultivation of the soil, by the use of barnyard manure and some commercial fertilizer, by rotation of crops and by the industry and good judgment of the farmer himself. The farm is not an especially large one, containing only 132 acres, half of which are planted. The farmer has divided his tilled land into three equal fields, on which he raises corn, oats and cotton in succession. Before he took the farm it was producing only five to eight bushels of corn or about 300 pounds of seed cotton to the acre. The first year he made it produce one and one-half bales of cotton and thirty-seven bushels of corn to the acre. Now his yields per acre are two and one-fourth bales of cotton, eighty-five bushels of corn and eighty bushels of oats." That is certainly an object lesson. We commend it to all the farmers and farmers' sons who read the Advocate.

A wise judge out in Missouri had to pass on a divorce suit brought by a man against his wife, on the ground that she had "a high temper." He denied the man's petition, and dismissed the case in the following graphic and emphatic style: "Woman has a right to be high tempered if she wants, and her husband ought to be man enough to yield her that privilege. What, if the wife does fly all to pieces now and then and say mean things? Most good women have some spirit and they can't help showing it once in a while. A wife has just as much right to possess a temper as her husband has, and the husband's duty is to indulge her when she wants to express herself. This young woman here, the evidence shows, has borne four children; she does the entire work for the family, and does it well. Her work about the house is just as important as her husband's work in the fields. She raises the family; he looks after the crops and gathers in the money. Marriage is a reciprocity contract. The husband, because he is the stronger, has no right to lay down any more stringent rules for his wife to follow than he follows himself. Nine times out of ten, when a wife gets angry it is because her husband has imposed upon her. If you would throw arms around your wife and kiss her once in a while when she has been working hard and is red in the face from cooking over her stove for you and the children, perhaps you wouldn't find her high tempered. That is all I have to say now; you people run along home and go back to housekeeping."We do not give place to this to encourage wives to be fussy and rail out on their husbands, but to show how foolish and mean a husband can sometimes be.

The great gulf storm that swept the coast and adjoining country on Monday and Monday night, September 20, was the most extensive and destructive that has occurred within the memory of the inhabitants. Possibly the number of lives lost may be enumerated, but the damage to farms and crops and timber, to railroads and other public property can never be known. The value of the timber alone, now flat on the ground will count up into the millions. All will be a total loss except what the saw mills can use, which will be comparatively a small amount. Much suffering immediately on the coast is being endured, but the more fortunate citizens are helping the distressed, many of whom lost all their possessions. In New Orleans but little damage was done, save to large sheds and the roofs of houses. Exaggerated statements went out leading many not well informed to believe that the city was inundated and well nigh destroyed. In view of this false impression Mayor Behrman gave out the following to the Associated Press: "The City of New Orleans is absolutely safe. Situated 110 miles from the Gulf of Mexico, no tidal wave could reach New Orleans, either across the immense area of land between the city and the Gulf of Mexico, or through the Mississippi river. New Orleans, London and Hamburg are the three great seaports of the world which are completely safe from the possibility of tidal inundation. The storm while of great intensity, did no greater damage than to uproot trees, dismantle a few roofs and create other damage of minor character. Though New Orleans was for a time isolated so far as wire connections were concerned, our situation was at all times safe, and more apprehension was felt for us outside than inside the city. The storm served to prove that this city, with its landlocked river harbor is one of the safest in the world for shipping and for human beings."

One of the remarkable things in the stirring world of to-day is the change of attitude of so many Roman Catholics on the liquor question. For a long time there has been among them a strong "total abstinence society," but now, not a few, if we have not been misinformed, are prohibitionists, and recently the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America came squarely out in favor of local option, which is next step to prohibition—in fact, is a form of prohibition. The following resolution was passed by the Union: "We, the delegates of this convention, approve of local option, and we recommend that all our members make a vigorous fight for it whenever they can, on the principle of the American idea that the will of the majority should prevail, and the people be given the same privilege of deciding the existence of the saloon in a community as they have in selecting the police justice who passes judgment on the frequenter of the saloon—the drunkard who is the product of the saloon. We urge the necessity of educating the youth as to the danger of drink, and the administration of the total abstinence pledge to them in all parochial schools. We urge all members of this union to be active in Catholic societies in endeavoring to prevent the use of liquor at all gatherings and festivities." That indicates progress. When Roman Catholics and Protestants can "forget their jealousies and differences" as exhorted by Bishop McFaul, a leader among Romanists, "and unite and stand shoulder to shoulder" in a warfare against drink, the open saloon with all its woes would have but a short lease on life. New Orleans is as much rum-ridden and rum-cursed as any city in the union, and we suppose we risk nothing in saying that the business here is in the hands of Roman Catholics. What would be the result should Archbishop Blenk and all his priests earnestly endeavor to get their members to quit the trade? We feel sure an army of saloon keepers would soon seek another means of getting a living.

SOME THINGS THE HOME CHURCH CAN LEARN FROM CUBAN METHODISM.

By Dr. John A. Rice.

We have been in Cuba ten years and have made a very creditable beginning. The fact that it was a new field was in some ways an advantage. We had nothing to undo. We were tied to no precedents, hampered by no long-established usages and traditions. We were free to follow the leadings of wisdom in the light of experience in other fields and at home. If we were free to start over, here what would the ten years in Cuba have to say to us?

1. Attack the cities: We are rapidly getting entrenched in the cities there. Paul went where people were. So did Bishop Candler. So must we in the States. I hope to see the machinery of the whole church so adjusted as to be delivered with all its power upon our large cities. The teeming millions congested there are in as deep need as ever of the people we preach. The Christ is the only solution of the manifold problems of city life. And we can no longer be content with the small percent of this population now being reached. No man has a keener appreciation of the country and its importance to the kingdom than I, but its problems are not so pressing as those of the city.

2. Remove the time limit: Men are returned in Cuba as long as seven years, and then in some cases would do well to stay seven years longer, I have no doubt. It is recognized that the personal touch of workers who have been long enough in one place to have established characters there is an important element of evangelistic power. Continuity of administration is seen to be necessary to success in Cuba. Why not in America?

3. Change the term presiding elder to superintendent: When they were specially needed to preside over the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, the term suggested its real meaning, but now they are supervisors of the work and would better be so named. Think of there being no presiding elder in all Cuba!

4. Rearrange their work so as to save useless expenditure of money and energy: Let them be free to go wherever they may be needed, and not to every charge a given number of times. There are three superintendents on the Island. These men are all doing other work also. Some of them are killing themselves. But the home work could be so arranged as to make the oversight of the district a part of the duty of a regular pastor. If he happens to be on a heavy charge, provide helpers enough to carry on every phase of the work without overtaxing anybody. Or if he is to have no other work, enlarge his district to double its present size. Is it not somewhat out of proportion that fifteen to seventeen percent on the amount paid pastors goes to mere oversight? Would any business be run on that basis?

5. Stir up the spirit of personal evangelism: I asked several times how the missionaries were able to open new places and found that they were usually helped by those who had been converted and wanted their friends to find the Savior now so precious to them. When the preacher goes to a new field he usaully carries letters to people there and in many cases is preceded by converts that prepare the way. The trouble with many of our churches is that when people join they learn only one prayer: "Now I lay me down to sleep." The spirit of active aggressive evangelism is all too scarce. Religion is power only in passage to helpful service. The church is a force and not a field, an army in atttack upon the enemy and not a social club nor a mutual admiration society. What a wonderful experience it must be to get vital touch for the first time with the blessed Savior who has hitherto been only a hearsay, whose religion has been only meaningless, ritual and form? No wonder those converted on foreign fields are active. To many of us it is only an old story that we take as a matter of course. To them it is tremendously vital. City evangelism means, in the last analysis, the burning of the fire in the individual so intensely as to catch from heart to heart as of yore.

The archbishop of Canterbury is reported to have said recently that he was working seventeen hours a day and had no time to consider the labor problem or the affairs of the working man. The modern pastor is so busy running the machine and caring for business connected with the church that he has all too little time for personal work. Why could not he be relieved of all this and lead his flock in a constant effort to reach the great outside?

6. Push education: The way to the future generation is through the hearts of the children of this. Only a small percent of the men and women can be reached. The children are open. So the church in Cuba has done well to begin with the school. We have a fine location and a very good plant in Havana and so in other cities. The day I left Brother Bradwell told me that he had just received another application to take a boarding pupil which was exactly three times as many as he could accommodate. He has bought a beautiful lot of five acres half-way between Havana and Maryanao, a suburban town of several thousand inhabitants, some five miles from Havana. Here he will build for the higher classes of Candler College. This site commands a lovely view of the gulf on one side, an exquisite valley on another and the great city on another. Closely connected with the city by ample electric cars, it will be in a few years in the heart of the residence portion. The only regret is that he could not get twenty acres. It would be a splendid investment. He can easily command three times the pupils that he can teach. How different from the states! Here we send out agents to beg for pupils; there we turn them away all the time. We can get all we will provide for. It is a question of men and money. But if we would build as much better institutions here than those offered by others as we do there, we could command pupils easily also. Through these schools we are making converts all the time. The church here can get all the students we are willing to provide adequately for. And the number we train will go far toward determining our future.

7. The great city is ripe for the institutional church. The brethren with whom I talked are anxious to enter upon this phase of Christian work, feeling that the time is now. Our location in Havana is ideal: $300,000 put into a plant there would yield enormous returns. So in the other cities. The most surprising thing I saw in Cuba is the Clerks' Club, a magnificent building on the Prado, the principal street, beautifully fitted and furnished with all club appliances, with night school for the children of the members, with a hospital where members are treated free in another part of the city, nursing, medical attention, medicine, nourishment, everything that the modern hospital furnishes, and the total cost is one dollar and a half per month per member for all these privileges. They have twenty-eight thousand members. And another building, even finer, is going up a few blocks away. This shows a peculiar readiness to combine for amusement and mutual help. The church could utilize this social instinct, with sufficient means to provide what is needed. As I went through the elegant apartments and learned what they all meant to the working man, I coveted like equipment for work for my Lord.

IF I WERE CALLED TO BE A LAYMAN.

By Rev. John Tillery Lewis.

"It seems to me that somewhere I have read, in a periodical bearing evidence of having been published on this terrestial sphere, an article with the following "entitlement": "If I Were Called to Preach." Perhaps I did; perhaps I didn't. Anyway, I have an uncontrollable drawing to write on that great subject, "If I Were Called to Be a Layman." And since God has called me to preach, of course no one can say that I am a "bnsy body" when I write concerning my ideal of a layman, for I am just doing what God commissioned me to do. See?

Now, there are various occupations in which laymen serve in the world. I might write on what I would do as a layman in a general way, but it is my desire to be specific, hence I will confine my remarks to what I would do were I called to serve as a layman in the capacity of a lawyer. And, by the way, at one time I purposed to practice law, but being impressed that God wanted me to preach, I accepted the call. My daily prayer is that I may please God.

Now, were I a lawyer and a Christian, I would conduct my practice upon those principles that are advantageous to the highest interest of God's kingdom. I would ever keep before me the fact that while duty demands that I painstakingly see to it that my client be given a fair and impartial trial according to the law and evidence, still loyalty to and copartnership with Christ compels me not to take advantage of justice in the interest of my client, upon a mere technicality of the law. After all, it is not love for the client that causes lawyers to work the technicalities of the law in the interest of their clients, but it is greed for gold or a desire to establish the reputation that they are shrewd lawyers. Now, if I were a layman lawyer I would remember my obligation and vow to the State, as well as that one made in behalf of my client, and I would be as scrupulous in the interest of the State as in the interest of my client. Acting upon the above Christ-like basis there are many cases I would not take. For just as soon as the facts were laid before me by my would-be client, I would weigh his innocency or guilt and if by his own words he were guilty then I would tell him to go elsewhere for aid. And if he should misrepresent facts to me, and make it appear that he was innocent when he was guilty, he would have to suffer the consequences. For if in the midst of the taking of evidence it should develop by reliable evidence that my client was guilty, he having represented himself as innocent, I would in the midst of the trial inform the judge that my client would have to get him another lawyer. I would say further to the judge: "The defendant represented to me that he was innocent, and upon that supposition I took the case, butu according to the evidence before the jury he is in my opinion guilty. Believing that he is guilty, I cannot plead him innocent, my loyalty to the State prohibits such a procednre."

Nor yet would I stand for the packing of the jury. Instead of selecting men of that type that are employed almost universally as jurymen, men who can be bought with a few drinks of whisky or a few dollars, I would select the best citizens of my county; men who are so related to the material interest of the county that their own interest, as well as that of the county, demands that they execute jusice. And if conditions were such that men of that type are not summoned as jurymen I would then set about to create a public demand for such men, so that those whose duty it is to select men for jurymen would not dare select, nor yet want any save the highest type of citizens as jurymen.

And then as a Christian lawyer I would not demand an unreasonable fee. I would not take advantage of a fellow citizen and force from him a fee out of proportion to the service rendered. But I would remember the golden rule, "Do unto others as ye would they should do to you." So much for my duty as a lawyer.

Now, were I a layman, no matter what my vocation, I would be loyal to my church and to my pastor. I would seek to become thoronghly possessed with those lofty ideals for which the church of God stands. As far as my business would allow, I would devote my time and services to the church. When not providentially hindered, prayer-meeting nights would find me among the few at prayer-meeting and every Sabbath morn would find me at Sunday school and church, also Sunday evenings. My pastor would find in me a brother, and so close would I get to him that when he came into my presence he could but feel the lofty esteem in which I held him. He would never feel like he was intruding his presence upon me, nor yet would he have any occasion to feel that he was a beggar. I would not want him to live an salt, bread and water while I was enjoying the fat of the land. The spirit of brotherhood, which spirit all Christians have, does not act on that wise. I would not leave my church on Sundays either for business or pleasure, especially would I not make a habit of leaving home on Sundays and keeping others away from God's house, as well as doing the same myself. If I were a layman I would seek to fill a layman's place to the highest point of my ability for God's glory.

And last, but not least, if I were called to be a layman I would not attempt to give advice to those whom God has called to preach, but I would console myself with the thought that the majority of preachers are studiously attempting to do God's work. If there were a few hypocrites among them who think more of gold than of saving souls, I would leave them for correction to the faithful ones, not deeming myself worthy, since God did not call me to preach. And then, if I were called to be a layman, and expected the preachers to be wholly unconcerned about where they are going, etc., why, I would be wholly unconcerned about who I got as pastor, and would so act. But whoever I might happen to get would find in me a loyal and true layman, God helping me.

Brethren, if we will only look more deeply into our own lives, and follow more closely after God's spirit, we will find enough beams in our own eyes to keep us eternally busy, without our being so greatly concerned about motes in our brother's eyes. O God! please to deliver us from the egotistical and self-infatuated critic, and be thou pleased to fill his soul, whether he be preacher or layman, with the sweet spirit of "brotherly love." Amen!

ON PAYING THE PREACHER.

By Rev. J. M. Huggin.

In the Advocate of the 9th ult., we have an article by Hon. W. A. Belk, on Ministerial Support, to which I ask space for a brief reply.

The main thought of the article is given in the first sentence as follows: "Some preachers are better paid than others because they are worth more." The position set forth in this sentence, and advocated in the article, is that preachers are paid according to their worth. Is not this position highly complimentary of the many preachers of to-day who are receiving very small salaries, as well as some of the past, such as Paul, Bunyan, Wesley and Asbury? If preachers are stationed according to their worth in dollars and cents as Brother Belk would have us believe, it would be a great calamity to the church for all the preachers to be first-class, for then three-fourths at least of our charges would be without pastors. But perhaps Brother Belk would claim that we have many inferior preachers, and that they are necessary in order to supply all the people with the gospel. According to this claim, inferior preachers can be used, where first-class preachers could not. So Brother Belk's position involves the absurdity, that inferior preachers are superior to their superiors in the ministry.

But it is sometimes said that a first-class preacher would make a first-class charge of any work he might be assigned to. This assertion is gratuitous, if not preposterous. Some of our charges will never pay good salaries, without great changes in their circumstances, and the personel of their membership. I freely admit that there is considerable difference in the ability of preachers, but the superiority of one, or the inferiority of another, cannot be determined by their appointments. I agree with Brother Belk in all he says about our presiding elders and Bishops. Our presiding elders are the best perhaps that our Conference could afford, and our Cnference is as fine a body of men, as the planet on which we live can afford. But we all are in one respect like the high priests of old, "compassed with infirmity." Dr. Boswell is correct in saying that presiding elders are sometimes prejudiced. I heard of one once whose father was an illiterate local preacher, in a very hard country circuit. This old local preacher took the position that the people were giving too much attention to the education of their children, and that the "sun do move"—or John Jasper theory of astronomy was the correct one. He drew his pastor into a discussion of these questions, and of course the pastor could not agree with him and as he could not brook opposition conceived a dislike for the pastor. Sometime afterward, the above-mentioned presiding presiding elder said when that preacher's case was being discussed in the cabinet that his father was not favorably impressed with him, but did not give the circumstances. He might have been ignorant of some of the circumstances. If the whole truth had been told his representations would not have hurt the preacher.

Is it not true that the presiding elders frequently proceed along the line of least resistance in giving advice as to appointments. The one who with loud mouth proclaims his own greatness and obstreperously contends for place and power, is considered rather than the one possessed of gentle, manly instincts and dominated by the spirit of Christ, especially if the latter has been serving hard fields without complaint.

If St. Paul had been stationed at Corinth, and some of the Cephas faction had urgently asked for his removal, it perhaps would have been done, that is, if a form of church government had obtained similar to ours (I like our form of church government; prefer it to all others). But it is like all other eclesiastical governments, administered by men. Some of those Corinthians had said of him, his bodily presence is weak and his speech contemptible, II Cor. 10:10. I reckon some one told him it was "time to take his inventory" and so he gives it to us in the next chapter to the one from which I quote.

Now I want to submit to the consideration of Brother Belk, and others, some facts. There were 150 pastoral charges in this—the North Mississippi Conference last year. Fifty of these paid less than $500 each to their pastors, while 100 charges paid from $500 up to $2400 each to their pastors. The fifty preachers who received less than $500 apiece from their charges, notwithstanding the fact that they were not able to employ celebrated evangelists, reported an average of a fraction over thirty received into the church on profession of faith in each of their charges, while those who received $500 and upward received only twenty-four and a fraction on profession of faith each into the church.

Now Brother Belk says God's contract with preachers "calls for souls, not money." He evidently believes then as he has stated, that the chief purpose of the ministry is to win souls to Christ. Will he say that the class of preachers that was more successful in the chief purpose of the ministry, are worth less, yes, much less than the class that has been less successful. The declaration that some preachers are paid more because they are worth more is in my humble judgment little less than an aspersion of a large number of true and valuable ministers of the gospel. Whatever hurts the ministry, hurts the church. A minister who endures hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ, bears the burden instead of thrusting them upon others, denies self and family in his loyalty to Christ and his fellow-man, deserves better treatment at the hands of his brethren than that accorded by Brother Belk in his article. I am not writing this for the purpose of obtaining a better salary. Though I believe many preachers are dwarfed by insufficient salaries, I do not believe any of our preachers are paid too much, but some are paid too little. "Thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy neighbor and not suffer sin upon him." This I have tried to do. And I may say with love in my heart.

"ETCHINGS OF THE EAST.

By Dr. J. T. Sawyer.

The above is the title of a book of travels in the Orient, by Rev. John M. Moore, D.D., Ph.D.

Sailing from San Francisco on Jan. 30, 1908, and bound for Yokahoma, his steamer, the "Mongolia," of the Pacific Mail Line, made the 6039 miles in eighteen days. Having taken the southern, or long route, he was enabled to spend a short while in Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, where a stoppage of twenty-two hours was had. While away, Dr. Moore every week sent to the Nashville Advocate a letter descriptive of the lands, peoples and doings in the East. On his home-coming there was a general demand for the publication of those letters in book form, which was done by Smith & Lamar, Agents of our Publishing House at Nashville, Tenn. We have read the volume with unflagging interest, and have found it replete in valuable and accurate information in regard to the non-Christian countries, and the Christian mission fields and work. Dr. Moore has put into his 349 pages just what all live Methodists and other Christians want to know, and ought to know. The book is liberally illustrated, and the mechanical work put upon it is first-class. The author's style is of the best and all that he writes is couched in splendid English—strong, chaste and clear. We quote from the chapter entitled "Going up to Jerusalem." "A more glorious sight never greeted my eyes than that of my first evening, when in the gathering twilight, I could see the stern, grey walls, the outlines of the Tower of David, the Mosque of Omar, the Tower of Antonia, the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, the buttresses of the Damascus Gate, the place of the Gordon tomb, and beyond the Mount of Olives, crowned with its great tower, and farther still the mountains of Moab beyond the Jordan. There was a solemnity in the scene that made the soul turn to God and the heaven that seemed watching so near at hand. The deep-toned bells rang out from the various places of worship the earnest call to prayer, while the shrill voice of the Moslem in the minaret added the unusual note to this grave harmony. In the midst of the meditation in the failing evening light, the great orange moon, larger than all the moons that I had ever seen, more golden than any that I had ever known, climbed from behind the Moab mountains into the sombre sky and measured itself by the works of man on the Mount of Olives. In less than an hour its glory had fallen upon the City of David, and there lay before me in the hush of that gorgeous night the undisputed site of the most memorable scenes ever enacted in the history of the human race. Is it any wonder that more than once during the night, sleep released its grasp for a few moments, so that the traveler might again see the shifting of the shadows and catch new visions of the world's holy city?"

And this: "Fortunate indeed is that individual who has the privilege of a visit to Jerusalem, the holy city of the ancient Israelites and the religious capital of the world. From the standpoint of commerce, learning, political power, Jerusalem may be insignificant in this generation; but from the standpoint of human hope and destiny, the old city is possessed of an interest which neither time nor conditions can ever abate or destroy. The foundations of the world's institutions are laid upon corner-stones which were quarried from the deposits of this holy place. The hidden wealth of man and his world is being constantly revealed by the light which is maintained by the flow of truth from this ancient reservoir of heaven-wrought civilization. Mt. Zion is an eternal hill, no more ancient in history than it is secure in the devotion of all future generations. Jerusalem may suffer yet the ravages of many barbarous hands and be many times razed to the earth as in the past; but it can never perish so long as man inhabits this planet. To see this sacred place is to come in touch with the two eternities between whose peaks man walks in hope to the end of his day. To spend a fortnight in the ancient city is to have communion with the Divine through the means by which the holiest revelations have come to man."

Should our preachers and people generally purchase and prayerfully read Dr. Moore's "Etchings of the East," their missionary zeal and gifts for the saving of the lost millions across the seas would be greatly increased. In his fore-word, Dr. Moore expresses "the earnest hope that some new interest in the non-Christian peoples may be awakened and that some new missionary effort will be put forth as a result of the reading of these letters."

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The mid-year meeting of the Executive Committee of the Woman's Home Mission Society was held in the First Methodist Church in Alexandria, La., on September 16, 1909. Those present were Mrs. E. R. Kennedy, President; Mrs. J. H. Reville, Second Vice President, and Mrs. H. R. Singleton, Recording Secretary. The work of the Conference was found to be in a very healthy condition. Since March of this year, thirteen new auxiliaries have been organized with a membership of 212, and also five new brigades have been formed. We are always glad to record the new brigades, since it is through them we touch the young life of the church, and hope to raise up from their ranks our leaders of the future. The total membership of the Conference, including brigades, now amounts to 2,109 with 432 subscribers to "Our Homes." The statement of our Conference Treasurer for the first quarter showed the amount sent her to be $705.24, a gain over corresponding quarter of last year of $271.45. No statement has been received of the second quarter. The local work done during the two quarters from March to September, amounts to $5,020.75.

The Secretary read a letter from Miss Nita Tilley, a young woman from Rev. Martin Hebert's work, telling of her great desire for training in Christian work, that she may be fitted to labor among her own people in South Louisiana. Mrs. MacDonell has offered her a scholarship in the training school, but on account of the antagonistic attitude of her family toward her since her conversion from Romanism, she can expect no help from home, and has no means of providing for her traveling expenses and the necessary things while attending school. A letter was also read from Brother Hebert, in which he highly recommended her and asked that we help her. On motion of Mrs. Singleton, it was decided to pay these expenses.

The Secretary read a letter from Miss Bennett, in which she expressed the desire that Rev. Martin Hebert might be able to attend the Board Meeting and present the work of the French Mission. The committee decided to pay his traveling expenses to and from Savannah, Ga.

A letter was read from Rev. Paul M. Brown, saying a deaconess had been recently appointed to the Alexandria district to work in the mill towns, and he was expecting her on the eighth of September.

April 14-17 was settled on as the time of the next annual meeting to be held in the City of New Orleans. The program will be announced later. October 4-10 has been set aside as the week of prayer. Let every auxiliary observe it and place before our Father in Heaven the need for strength, courage and wisdom to carry on this great work for him. The offering this year goes to the Sue Bennett Memorial School and is sorely needed in enlarging the work there. May the collection be twice as large as it was last year!

HATTIE THEUS SINGLETON, Rec. Sec.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The W. H. M. S. of Main St. Laurel uses the local press freely to a great advantage. The subject for the June meeting was "The Boy." The week before the date of this meeting, the energetic press superintendent of that auxiliary sent to the paper an announcement of the subject for the afternoon, and invited every mother who had a boy to be present and have a voice in the meeting. The week after she reported the meeting and also sent a copy of an original paper "What Can the W. H. M. S. do for the Boy?" which was written by one of the members and used at this meeting. There is no wonder that these ladies are doing so much good, they are not selfish, they tell others of their work, thereby giving many helpful ideas.

A new auxiliary of the W. H. M. S. has been organized at Zero, Meridian District, with ten members. It is gratifying to us when after prayer and hard work, a new auxilliary is organized, but it is very gratifying when the ladies of the church write to the district secretary and ask her to come to them and organize a W. H. M. S. for them, as this one did.

The W. H. M. S. of Capitol St. Jackson, realizing that they must always be on the alert and have their eyes wide open in the work for our Lord, decided to have a lunch stand during the encampment in July. Their press superintendent writes, "Notwithstanding the warm weather, we spent many enjoyable hours working together, met some pleasant friends and realized the handsome little sum of eighty ($80.00) dollars."

The Magnolia auxiliary has done noble work for the Orphans' Home, a work others of us would do well to imitate. They had a church reception in connection with a "Linen Shower," served punch and cake and had a very successful entertainment. The invitations were in rhyme and very unique. The box which they sent the Home, contained sheets, pillow cases, table cloths and napkins, and many dozens of towels, some clothing for little Roy Miles and many other things. The box was valued at $60.

GOLDEN WEDDING ANNIVERSARY.

The following invitation was responded to by quite a number of guests who were very graciously received by Mrs. G. J. Bohin and Mrs. W. J. Kaiser: Mr. Robert Draughon Norsworthy and Miss Clara Eugenia Swayze, September 21, 1859, Jackson, La.; September 21, 1909, Natchez, Miss.; at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Jno. Barrows Ligon, No. 820 Main Street, from 8 to 11:30 o'clock."

At 8:30 in the presence of a goodly number of friends, Rev. John A. B. Jones, of Magnolia, in a very charming manner, recited a ceremony which renewed the marriage vows of fifty years ago. In the course of the ceremony, Mr. Jones drew from his pocket the original certificate of marriage which he, being the officiating minister, wrote with his own hand and in full. No two people ever seemed happier than these who had borne each others frailties and shared each others joys for a half century.

A beautiful poem, written by Mrs. Gunn, wife of the Episcopal rector, was read as a contribution to the occasion, by Rev. Robt. Selby, pastor of Jefferson Street Methodist Church, and he also read a telegram of congratulation from Mr. A. Trimble and wife from Hot Springs, Ark.,

Hon. W. C. Bowman as a representative of the Board of Stewards of Jefferson Street Church, in a very appropriate address presented in the name of the congregation, a heavy envelope which contained eighty dollars in gold. Besides this, other presents in gold were presented, and everybody wished this graceful couple many years yet of connubial bliss.

Mrs. Johnson of Meridian, a daughter of the couple was present, adding much to their pleasure and happiness. Rev. T. J. Norsworthy, a son, and pastor of our church at Malvern, Ark., was on his way to attend the celebration, but was detained by the storm of Monday night, arriving in the city the next morning.

A very remarkable incident in connection with the officiating minister, Rev. J. A. B. Jones, is that on Sunday, the nineteenth, he preached his semi-centennial sermon at Port Gibson on the fiftieth anniversary of his appointment as pastor to that charge.

Several present remarked on the uniqueness of this celebration in that the second ceremony was performed by the minister who performed the first.

These two unusually happy people are growing old gracefully and the wish of their pastor and friends is that when they put out to sea, they may see their Pilot face to face and be anchored safely where they shall have rest, eternal rest, from the storms and sunsets of this life. ROBT. SELBY.

Natchez, Miss.

REV. W. P. KIMBALL.

Rev. Whitmall P. Kimball was born in the State of North Carolina on the 26th day of June, 1829, and when quite a boy came with his parents to the State of Mississippi, where his father, who was a Methodist minister died in a few years. Here he received a fairly good education, grew to manhood, was soundly converted and joined the M. E. Church, South.

In 1858, he joined the Memphis Conference and after serving one year in said Conference was transferred to the Louisiana Conference, in which he labored very acceptably and successfully for a number of years. Against the wishes and contrary to the advice of his many friends, he felt impelled by financial pressure to ask a location, and the remainder of his life was a faithful preacher in that capacity.

In 1890 he removed to Lamar County, Texas, and there on the 21st of April, 1909, suddenly passed into his eternal home. In 1878, Brother Kimball was happily married to Miss Sarah A. Hawkins of Marshall County, Miss. To this couple were born five sons, two of whom became ministers, but have both passed over the river, and two of whom are still living and walking in the footsteps of their devoted but sainted father.

Brother Kimball was a good man and a faithful servant of God. I loved him as I have loved but few men, and expect to meet him again in the city beyond. T. J. UPTON.

SEASHORE CAMP GROUNDS.

Recent letters appearing in these columns from prominent ministers of our church, who attended and took part in some of the Educational and Christian Assembly work of Seashore Camp Grounds, are decidedly commendatory as to the character of work done last summer, and no less optimistic as to the outlook for future development.

The writer has watched with a great deal of interest, and almost enthusiasm at times, the growing sentiment in favor of utilizing this valuable and inviting spot for larger and greater things than we even dared to hope for only a few years ago. Such hopeful sentiments as to the future of "Old Seashore" are in no sense disloyal to the records and traditions of her glorious past. In the earlier history of the Camp Grounds, the annual camp meeting drew great crowds from far and near, whose opportunities to hear the Gospel preached by ministers of more than average ability, were not so good as we now enjoy. Hence, we had larger crowds to preach to, with a vastly greater percentage of unsaved souls, and a manifest desire to hear and appropriate the truths of the Gospel, when clearly and faithfully presented. But now we have a new order of things. Where we had but a few struggling missions, twenty-five or thirty years ago, stretching from Bay St. Louis to Scranton, we now have several strong self-supporting churches well organized and equipped for effective work in all the departments of modern Christian activities, such as the laymen's movement, Sunday School, Epworth League, Missionary Societies, prayer meetings, Baracca Classes, etc. Through these auxiliaries the church is not only training her young people for effective Christian service, but is bringing them to a saving knowledge of Christ, so that it is safe to say that three-fourths of all the additions to the membership of our church on profession of faith come through some one of these institutions of modern church life. So the old time camp meeting, good and effective as it was, has been supplanted by the more modern, and as I believe, more effective methods of present day organizstion. Is it any wonder then that we do not have the great seasons of "refreshing and ingathering of souls" that once characterized these annual camp meeting occasions on Seashore Camp Grounds? The truth is, if a census were taken of any typical congregation within recent years, I venture the prediction that ninety per cent. would be found to be professed Christians and members of some Protestant church. We are forced to the conclusion then that while the camp meeting as an institution has been on the wane, the preacher on his regular charge is becoming more and more effective, and has actually pre-empted the field, through the agency of organized movements to which the church is committed.

While I believe that the day of the old time camp meeting is past, I am in no sense committed to the policy of doing away with our annual camp meeting, but rather adapting it to our present needs. As long as there is a population of some five hundred people who live on the grounds for three months during the summer, deprived as they are, of their home church life, and some twenty-five thousand additional ones, easily accessible to the grounds, by means of the gulf cosst trolley line, extending from Biloxi to Pass Christian, there is no reason to believe that great good cannot be accomplished through a series of revival meetings, conducted by a strong evangelist of wide reputation, clean record and sane methods. To such a man, the entire control and management of the meeting could safely be entrusted, just as all Protestant churches in a city often unife in holding a great revival under the leadership of some prominent revivalist, with such splendid results. Under such a movement, the preachers and prominent laymen of all denominations along the coast could be enlisted, and through them the evangelist could direct his efforts in securing the attendance of nonprofessed Christians; and thus reach a class of people who never attend the services of the camp meeting, and as I believe, never will, as long as the regular pastors filling charges within a reasonable distance of the camp grounds are used to do the preaching. I mean no reflection on these preachers. Their preaching is good enough for anybody to listen to—be he a saint or sinner. I have no patience with a church member who requires the advent of some evangelist or preacher of wide reputation, before you can get him out to church. However, we don't run revival meetings primarily for church members. They are run to bring sinners to Christ, and in order to present the truths of the Gospel to them and convict them of sin; we must secure their attendance and enlist their interest through some means out of the ordinary. Moreover, we ought not to get impatient with people who demand something new. There is no more reason for running a camp meeting just as we did forty years ago, than there would be in adopting the same means of locomotion in getting to and from the ground which was in vogue at that time, to-wit: a farm wagon drawn by a pair of fancy, cloven-footed animals of the bovine type.

If the methods of conducting camp meetings had kept pace with the marvelous advance made in the regular pastorates, they would perhaps be as popular to-day as they were forty years ago. Notwithstanding the great advance in methods of warfare made by the regular pastorate, I am not contending that these, effective as they be in the home church, are adaptable to camp meeting purposes. We must put into the camp meetings something that the people don't get at home. If we use the same preachers and the same songs and the same prayers and the same order of service, with "no variableness, nor shadow of turning," year after year, the people are not coming to hear it. They can get that programme carried out perfectly every Sunday morning and evening at their home town, and therefore there can be no posible justification for a camp meeting unless we can manage to get out of that groove.

I am therefore pleading, not to abandon the camp meeting, but rather to put new life into it by adopting more modern methods, and thus preserve and project its former usefulness into the present and future life of that populous community. Seashore ought to and will be made, I verily believe, the center of the best religious thought and activities for the States of Louisiana and Mississippi and Alabama. The leaven is now at work in the auspicious beginning made last summer by the establishment of the "Seashore Divinity School" and the "School of Methods for Sunday School Workers." These, in addition to the sessions of the "Assembly for Christian Workers" inaugurated some years ago, are going to expand into most potent agencies for good to the church, to say nothing of the proposed Methodist Training School soon to be established on the grounds. These institutions, however, can never reach their full measure of usefulness till adequate buildings and other needed improvements are provided; and these improvements cannot now be made unless the New Orleans District Conference shall fall in line, at their next meeting with the action taken by the Mobile and Seashore District Conference last spring, in approving a bond issue of $20,000 to erect suitable buildings for the accommodation of the camp meeting and other Christian assembly work to be carried on during the summer months, and the Methodist Training School to be operated during the winter months.

When these things are provided, then the public will begin to see that the church honestly intends to develop and utilize this valuable estate for the purpose of promoting morality, education and religion, and we will hear no more of the vexatious subjects of "taxation" and "confiscation" that have obtruded themselves into our deliberations relating to the proper administration of the property.

W. L. ELLIS,
Rec.-Sec., Seashore Camp Grounds.

"A SERIOUS SITUATION."

Dear Doctor—The above quotation appears as a caption to your editorial in the Advocate of September 9th, in which you call attention to certain questions concerning titles to properties of our church. After certain quotations which you credit to Dr. DuBose in connection with Vanderbilt University, and reference to claims made by the trustees of Randolph-Macon College, you close your most timely warning by saying that "Verily the church is confronting a serious situation." After the report made by the Commission appointed to look into the charter and title to Vanderbilt property, we were surprised to read the statement, "that it is not worth the paper it is written upon." We, of the uninitiated, have been of the opinion that that commission was appointed to settle the question of ownership, and that such decision would be final, but now we read that such is not the case. Only a few days since appeared a long communication in the Commercial Appeal, in which statement was made that this would be one of the leading isues at our approaching General Conference, yes, and further stated that delegates would be elected to that body largely upon this issue. With the report of the commission before that body we cannot suppose that the General Conference will act in the premises otherwise than in the greatest interest of the church. Not reflecting in any particular upon the loyalty of any member of the Board of Trust of that Institution, I make bold to say that if the contention that Vanderbilt University is not in fee simple, the property of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, that all of our educational and eleemosynary institutions, as well, will suffer. Once establish the doubt in the minds of the masses of the church that such men as Bishop McTyiere and his associates were incapable of securing property with indisputable title and you raise the question as to the validity of title to all of our institutions.

Among the older Conferences in the connection, I doubt if there is an exception where there has not been wrangling over titles to properties of some kind which were thought to be secure to the church. By some technicality, or some reverting clause, property which has been supported by the church and which has received moneys upon the supposition that it was church property, and which would never have been given but for such idea, has been taken from us to the chagrin and hurt of the church.

With these local instances before us, every similar case will only deepen the distrust of the people in the ability of the church to manage its affairs, and confirm the statement made in your editorial, that "some boldly affirm that the church is not capable of running her schools." To this writer, the seriousness of the situation does not end with Vanderbilt University or Randolph-Macon College, but in the shaking of the confidence of our people.

That there has been quite an increase in the disposition to endow colleges and assist eleemosynary institutions among our people has been gratefully remarked, but this stream will cease its flow when uncertainty is thrown upon its final disposition. The burden of every college president and every manager of our Orphans' Homes, and all such church property, will be to convince the people that the institutions they represent are the property of the church, and that the Methodists of the land are not contributing to that which is questionable in its title, and finally to be diverted into some other channel. Aside from the properties referred to in your editorial; but as an abstract proposition, I am of opinion that you are wise in your statement that the church is facing a serious question.

Surely some action should be taken which will forever put at rest the question of titles to our Church schools and other institutions.

An exchange suggests the following, which one may easily test for himself:

To take a picture of your voice, it is only necessary to tie a sheet of thin, strong paper over the wide end of a trumpet. Hold it with the sheet of paper upward, take a thin pinch of white sand and place it in the center of the paper, hold the trumpet vertically above your face, and sing a note into lower end. Do not blow, but sing the note. Lower the trumpet carefully, and look at the sand. You will find that the vibrations of your voice have scattered the pinch of sand into a beautiful sound picture. Every note in the musical scale will produce a different picture, so you may produce a great variety of them. Some of these pictures look like pansies, roses and other flowers; some look like snakes, and others like flying birds. In fact, there is no limit to the vibration.—Exchange.

EFFECT OF MUSIC ON ANIMALS.

Says a writer in an exchange: Our good old dog, Bruno, lies down and listens contentedly when he hears us singing sacred songs; but let his young master take out his mouth harmonica and play Yankee Doodle and poor Bruno will raise his nose in the air and howl most piteously.

This recalls to mind a very interesting experiment which was tried recently at the New York Zoological Garden to determine the effect of music on different animals. A gramophone was taken about the garden, and selections, vocal and instrumental, were played upon it before the cages of the lions and tigers, elephants and camels, birds and monkeys, as well as the wolves. The wolves did not like it, but the tigers and lions were delighted. One lion rose on his hind legs and kept time with his front paws. The camels crowded round the instrument, and listened with rapt attention. They even stuck their noses in the horn to discover where the music came from. The elephants kept time to the harmony by flapping their ears, and would now and then trumpet their applause. The orang-outang listened in ecstasy, although a blue-nosed baboon was manifestly offended, and scolded all the time. A blue-coated macaw in the bird house actually danced to the playing of a lively Irish tune.—Selected.

HINTS ON READING.

Better let the soul of a few good books enter into you than to become an encyclopedia of facts or an authority on literature. If the latter, men will look upon you as a book of ready reference; if the former, you will be trusted and loved as one who incarnates life's best things.

The test of a book's worth is our desire to return to it and re-read it. Read to assimilate and appropriate rather than simply to quote.

Quotation can never substitute for eloquence, any more than the pianola or phonograph can substitute for the human touch or voice.

When a book helps you, pass it on. Give others the benefit of your reading.

Do not read a book simply because it is advertised. Know something of its worth first. Let others do the experimenting.

Do not think it necessary to know something about every modern novel. To be such a connoisseur is a good evidence of superficial intelligence.—Rev. J. T. Stone, in C. E. World.

WHICH WAS THE WISER?

"Two years ago," said a clergyman, "I conducted the funeral services of one of my parishioners. He had been a farmer. Forty years ago he commenced work with one hundred acres of land, and he ended with the same hundred. He was a skillful, industrious workman, but he had laid by no money in the bank. I understood the reason as I listened to the comments of his neighbors.

"'It was always a hospitable house,' said one. 'The poor man was never turned away. His sons and daughters received the best education which his means could command, and all are leading useful and happy lives.'

"Said another: 'Those children sitting there weeping are the orphans of a friend. He gave them a home. That crippled girl is his wife's neice. She lived with them for years. The young fellow who is weeping so bitterly was a waif that he rescued from the slums of the city.'

"And so the story went on—not of a miser who had heaped riches together, but of a servant of God who had helped many lives, and had lifted many of them out of misery and ignorance.

"On my way home from the funeral I stopped at the house of another farmer, who said to me in a shrill, rasping tone:

"'So poor Gould is dead! He left a poor account—not a penny more than he got from his father; now I started with nothing; and look here,' pointing to his broad fields, 'I own down to the stream.'

"And on the thin, hard lips were a wretched attempt to laugh. The house was bare and comfortless, his wife worn out with work, had long ago gone to her grave. Of his children, one daughter was still drudging in the kitchen; one son had taken to drink and died in prison. The other, a harder miser than his father, remained at home to fight with him over every penny wrung out of their fertile field.

"And yesterday I buried this man," continued the clergyman. "Neither neighbor nor friend, son or daughter, shed a tear over him. His children were eager to begin the quarrel for his ground he had sacrificed his life to earn. Of it all he had now only enough to cover his decaying body.

"Economy to a noble purpose is a virtue, but miserliness devours intelligence, religion, hope and life itself."—Herald and Presbyter.

TAKEN BY SURPRISE.

By Rev. W. G. Harbin.

It is a sentiment common to the heart of universal humanity to value the appreciation of one's own people above that of all the rest of the world. This notice is to express appreciation of one of the most delightful episodes of my whole ministry.

During the meeting just closed at Haynesville, La., my good pastor, Rev. W. T. Woodward, told me at the beginning of the service that he had a speech to make just before the benediction. Speeches from Brother Woodward are always good to listen to, so I very readily acquiesced in this statement. Just before the benediction I whispered to him that the time had perhaps come for his speech. He began by telling me, with great positiveness of manner, that I should sit in a chair in a very prominent position by the altar railing. With great wonder and some natural trepidation I did this. I could think of no reason for this except that the intense heat of the day had affected the preacher's mind. However, in a graceful speech, he soon made it clear that I was to be seated thus prominently in order that I might be the recipient of a very handsome 17-jewel, gold case, Elgin watch. This he soon produced, in its handsome velvet case, and turned over to me. It came as an expression of the appreciation of my pastor and the good people of whom, under God, he is the leader.

Such things are rarely surprises. This was. Until the watch appeared I was entirely ignorant of what it was all about. When Brother Woodward concluded his speech and sat down I was able only to stammer and stutter a bit, and thank my lucky stars that he hadn't done it before the sermon; for I should certainly have been unable to preach.

It is very gratifying that this delicate and beautiful expression took the form it did. On the train, in hotels, and in the pulpit, whenever, in the course of my work I shall have occasion to know the time, the golden hands of this beautiful gift will point beyond the moment and the hour to the best and dearest friends a man ever had.

A RELIGION WITHOUT AUTHORITY.

A religion without authority, we take it, is a religion self-conceived and self-imposed, and practiced because it is agreeable to reason and the individual's moral sense. Whether this is the true definition or not, it will satisfy all who deny the divinity of Christ and the divine inspiration of the Scriptures. Such a religion enthrones reason and conscience, and is therefore rationalism pure and simple.

Really, is there such a thing as a religion without authority? We have no doubt that what is intended by the expression is to rule God out of the thoughts of men as the author of a universal religion, and to get rid of the idea that the Bible is the will of God and the only rule of conduct. Supposing this to be true, does it not follow that if any other kind or form of religion is devised and accepted, it carries with it some degree of authority? That is to say, if a man rejects Christ's religion, and accepts another religion, whether of his own devising or another's, or whether for his own good, or his neighbor's, is he not under obligation to obey it? "The fool hath said in his heart there is no God." He is doubly a fool who makes his own God, and his own religion, and then deliberately refuses obedience.

If Dr. Eliot, who prophesies that the religion of the future will be "without authority," succeeds in so convincing men; and further succeeds in impressing them that his new religion is true, he brings them thereby under obligation to accept it and practice it. His religion is to him and his disciples a religion of authority. This reasoning leads to the conclusion that, if there were as many kinds of religion as there are men in the world, each one would be a religion of authority binding on the individual who entertains it. If there be a religion at all it must of necessity be a religion of authority.

St. Paul speaks of a class of men who did "not like to retain God in their knowledge." men whose knowledge of God and his laws hampered them in the exercise of their evil desires and passions. If they did not become outright atheists, they threw off all restraints imposed by their knowledge of God, and acted as if God did not exist. This, of course, cannot be said of Dr. Eliot, for he is a man of upright character and life; but take his prophecy as to the nature of the future religion, together with other statements made by him in the same connection, the conviction is forced upon us that the Christ of the Bible, and the religion of the Bible are stumbling blocks to his reason, and that he would rid Jesus of his Divinity and the Holy Scriptures of their supernatural character. And further, we are persuaded that his views will appeal to many men trained in the principles of evangelical religion, but who under the teachings of liberal preachers, and the schools have come to doubt the faith of their fathers, and would gladly be freed from its obligations. True, the teachings set forth are not new, but they were put forth under favorable conditions, and by Dr. Eliot, who had but recently toured the country and had been lionized by the schools, and boards of trade, and civic authorities as an oracle.

Why should men desire to adopt a religion that carries with it no authority? It would be more reasonable for them to reject the necessity of religion altogether. Why should they reject a religion that speaks with authority? To us it seems that, unless men hold themselves above all law, human and divine, and fully able to care for themselves—to direct their course, and shape their destiny, they would gladly hail a religion professing to come from God, even though it imposed duties in direct conflict with the desires and impulses of human nature, and especially, if like the religion of Christ it lifts men above sin, and out of sin, into favor with God.

A religion without authority to bind the conscience and control the life, can have no power to help—to sustain the weak, succor the tempted, comfort the sorrowing, or give assurance of rest beyond the grave. Such a religion is worthless.

A ROMANIST'S VIEW OF REVIVALS.

The great revival that stirred Boston some months ago attracted the attention of the editor of the Pilot, a Roman Catholic journal of that city. The Pilot says: "The revival spirit is all right. Every religion must use it in some form." But it concludes that "it is not worth the time and energy spent upon it unless enduring results are gained." That is freely granted. What surprises us, though, is that the Pilot thinks the Boston revival, conducted by Protestants, will prove a failure because "there is no organization to carry into practice the fine sentiments that are eloquently proclaimed." We wonder if the Pilot's editor ever heard of Methodism, as fine an organization as was ever projected to carry into practice the fine sentiments of the gospel. If Mr. Wesley had one faculty more fully developed than another it was his faculty to organize, develop and strengthen his converts. The contrast between him and Mr. Whitefield in this respect was remarkable. Mr. Whitefield was a more popular preacher than Mr. Wesley, and made more converts, but he did not properly organize and care for them. The result is that while the Whitefield Methodists are few in number and confined to the kingdom of Great Britain, Wesleyan Methodists are over the world and numbered by the million.

Methodism was seldom ever planted anywhere that it did not grow and produce fruit—all because of a strong, compact, working and governing organization, always carrying into practice the "fine sentiments" its preachers so "eloquently proclaimed." A nobleman traveling through one of the interior parishes of England lighted on a village where it was impossible for him to get a bit of strong drink. Meeting a laboring man, he hailed him and said: "My good man, can you tell me why I can get nothing to drink in this town?" The laborer straightened himself, and in a dignified manner replied: "Sir, about one hundred years ago, a man by the name of John Wesley came this way." That was all he said. The answer implied organization, strength, the power to put into practice the truths which Methodism teaches.

Methodism is well organized to-day, adding all the while to the number of the saved, the great majority of them through the medium of revivals. The fact that the numbers grow indicates that we have organization enough, and strong enough to take care of what the Lord gives us. The Boston Pilot must search for some other ground on which to base an objection, not specially to revivals, but to Protestantism in general.

THE ESSENTIALS OF PARLIAMENTARY LAW.

It is somewhat remarkable that the two writers who have recently discussed parliamentary law should both be preachers of Texas, and both have written well, being thoroughly informed. "The Essentials of Parliamentary Law," by Dr. E. W. Alderson, of Terrell, Tex., is a thorough discussion of the matter, not of the parliamentary usages of any special body, but for any body, conference, association, convention, or assembly that proposes to transact business in an orderly manner. As far as we are able to determine, Dr. Alderson treats the matter exhaustively. One who has mastered his treatise will have little need of applying elsewhere for information. The author is one of the learned and popular preachers of Texas, famed for his ability in defending the faith. His book will add to his laurels. We trust it will have a large sale. Now is the time to buy. Apply to the author, Terrell, Texas.

SPECIAL MISSION NUMBER.

After the Advocate was put to press last week, we received a telegram from Dr. Nelson, of the Mission rooms, asking us to postpone the Mission issue for a week. This we have done. It will appear October 14th, if nothing happens.

PERSONAL.

Rev. J. M. Henry of Baton Rouge, was in the city the early part of the week and spent some time in the Advocate's office. He reports matters connected with his charge in good shape.

Rev. M. L. Blauton, of Covington, was in the city on Monday, and paid a call to the Advocate. He is in robust health and good spirits, and likes Covington. The ozone, he finds, is an excellent tonic.

A young lady, leader in the League, writes that she enjoys the Advocate very much, especially the League Department. She always reads the League lesson as part of the programme for the devotional meeting. This is encouraging to our League editor in his work.

Rev. J. B. Randolph since finishing his course at Vanderbilt in the spring, has been doing fine work on the Myrtle charge, which includes our old home, Hickory Flat, Miss. His work prospers and he bears the Advocate on his mind and heart, and works for it. He succeeds.

During the sickness of Rev. C. A. Powell, Newton, Miss. (which has lasted three weeks) his appointments were filled by Rev. C. McDonald. The brethren of Newton have been attentive to the pastor during his sickness. Let the Church remember Brother Powell in prayer.

Rev. J. W. Price writing to the Advocate, says: "The Harperville Circuit seems to be taking on new life. Our meetings have all been real good—the church strengthened numerically and spiritually. We remember the Advocate and are doing some work for our good paper."

Rev. I. D. Borders of Holly Springs, if no providential hindrance intervened, is now engaged in protracted services, with Rev. C. N. Guice doing the preaching. Brother Guice is a good preacher and a gifted singer. We hope their services may be crowned with great success.

A note from Dr. W. B. Murrah in another column informs us of the opening of Millsap's College for the fall term of 1909. We infer that Dr. and Mrs. Murrah are home from their European tour, as the note was written from Jackson, Miss. We had not seen any notice of their arrival.

Brother R. A. Vaughan, agent of the Louisiana Methodist Orphange, writes: "The proceeds from "Work Day," amounts to date, October 1, to $1,066.83, with the mails bringing in returns each day. We are grateful to God, and feel that he will bless those who have responded to this call."

The work at Hub, Miss., moves smoothly under the pastorate of Rev. Hilary Westbrook, who is in the first year of his ministry. He has been blessed with good meetings at every church on his circuit. Numbers have been converted and added to the church, and several professed to be sanctified.

Dr. and Mrs. D. R. Richardson, of Iuka, Miss., will be "At Home" to their friends on the afternoon of October 12, from four to six; the occasion being the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage. So reads a notice in the town paper. May they live to enjoy many more years of happy married life!

Rev. J. H. Holder, Booneville, Miss., sends us a list of twenty-two subscriptions, old and new, and gives to that "elect lady," Mrs Tucker, mother of Rev. R. A. Tucker, credit for securing them. And Brother Holder says, "there are more to follow." We thank both the pastor and his faithful helper for their good work.

Mr. and Mrs. Josephine Farrow of Hawkinsville, Ga., favored us with an invitation to the marriage of their daughter, Ida to Rev. E. G. Mohler, which was arranged for Tuesday evening, October 5. Brother Mohler is the junior pastor of North Gulfport Charge, Miss. We wish the young couple all joy in their new relation.

One of our leading preachers who reads the Advocates, in a note to the office, says: "Tell 'Observer' to write again. Evidently he has kept his eyes open." "Observer" will please take notice. And this leads us to say, 1. Rev. W. B. Lewis denies writing the "Observer" article. 2. It was not written "by a layman." 3. More guessing is in order.

Rev. T. D. Lipscomb, Tront, La., is having success in his work. The church was blessed with an accession of twenty-eight members during the third quarter, making thirty-eight during the year. Brother Lipscomb adds: "We have a good report for Conference, and hope to improve on it during the remaining weeks of the year."

Rev. K. W. Dodson is closing his fourth year at Mansfield—the years have been pleasant and profitable. The charge is delightful because so many good people live in Mansfield. "The collections will be in full." Brother Dodson sends us eleven subscriptions. This taken in connection with the revival now in progress, is a good "wind up" of a quadrennium.

In a note of date, September 24, Rev. W. H. Lewis says: "The wife of Rev. J. A. Wells, the pastor of 7th Ave. and Vimville, has been in a very critical condition with typhoid fever. At one time her life was despaired of, but she is now improving and Brother Wells has resumed his work. His local preachers and exhorters did him good service while he was detained at the bedside of his wife."

Rev. C. J. Nugent, of the Kentucky Conference, was born in Opelousas, La., and reared to manhood in New Orleans. He is now classed among the old preachers, although he has been in the ministry only about forty years. Rev. J. R. Deering, his presiding elder, says: "He made the 'blue ribbon' report to the Annual Conference just had." We congratulate our friend and one time co-laborer in Mississippi and Arkansas.

We have received a copy of "The Baptism of Jesus by John the Baptist," written by Rev. John J. Random, D.D., of the Tennessee Conference. We have read it with pleasure and profit. The question is well and wisely handled. It settles some questions satisfactorily. With the exception of one short sentence (which possibly we do not understand), we heartily commend the leaflet to our readers. It may be had of Smith & Lamar, Nashville, Tenn., at 3 cts. per copy, $2.00 per hundred, postpaid.

A brother who fails or declines to give his name, sends us a communication based on the supposition that the name of our church will be changed at the coming General Conference, and suggests nine names that might possibly suit. He would like to know what name the editor prefers. We prefer Methodist Episcopal Church, South, above everything, but if conditions demand a change, then we shall choose, not one of the nine suggested, but some other name. We feel sure there is something in a name after all!

Rev. J. H. Fitzgerald, en route for his field of labor at Durango, Mex., spent an hour with us between trains. He was for ten years a missionary in Mexico, but on acount of a failure in health, about two years ago, he came home on a furlough. He has spent most of his time in this country at Ashville, N. C. We pray for him a rich service and great usefulness, and hope that even as his heart leads him back to his task, so may the King give him strength in body and spirit for the work that awaits him.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

Dear Dr. Boswell: The friends of our college will be glad to know that we opened our eighth session to-day, under conditions higthly favorable. Encouraging addresses were delivered by Gov. Noel and the Rev. Robert Selby.

With all of the members of the faculty in place, ready and eager for hard work, and a large number of students already on hand, we confidently expect a session of great prosperity. One notable feature of the opening exercises was the presence in the chapel of the largest senior class we have ever had.

Cordially, W. B. MURRAH.

September 29, 1909.

MILLSAP'S COLLEGE ENDOWMENT FUND.

Mr. Editor: I desire to call attention to the necessity of making payments on the Endowment Fund this fall. Quite a large number of those who subscribed to the fund, especially in South Mississippi, have not yet paid anything. "Hard Times" struck them, and they ask for time. With the approach of better times—cotton is a good price and the lumber market is improving every day—it is desired that our friends pay all they can by December 1, 1909.

My pastoral charge requires all my time and energy, but I am giving some thought to the work of collecting the unpaid subscriptions to this fund. I shall depend largely upon the pastors in the communities where subscriptions have been taken. If they will simply announce to their people some bright Sunday morning when they have a full congregation, that I am very anxious to collect these subscriptions, I will be greatly obliged to them. I am trying to employ some one in each community to take charge of the subscription lists, and if the subscribers will be ready to pay in November, it will greatly facilitate this work.

I am serving as agent without the hope of fee or reward, and I trust that all our friends will take due notice of this call and act accordingly.

MEMORIAL.

To have commemorated Miss Mattie Decker's death the Sunday following the first aniversary, 2nd of September, 1909, in the Caro (Texas) Church, where she had worked untiringly, and held up her beautiful character to the children in Sunday School, who loved her so dearly, to emulate, would have been a small expression of what we feel in the loss of her. On the anniversary of her death, her niece, Mrs. W. T. Whiteman, knowing my fondness for Miss Mattie, brought me some flowers of a night blooming cereus, and said, "I thought you would like to have them, and Aunt Mattie brought the plant to me from a cousin in Louisiana." As I looked long at the delicate tints which shaded kindly over the pure white petals, and looked into the unfolding spotless flower, I thought, what a perfect emblem of her life. Externally, all the tinted graces of the gentle woman, one in whose heart there was no guile, and mind that gendered thoughts as pure as the petal of those flowers—a true type of the once Southern woman, the world paid homage to. Although modest and reserved, she had decided opinions, was courageous and firm in her stand for right. A letter written to her aunt and cousin in New Orleans a few hours before she died, breathes the spirit she lived. "I have been at death's door, and thought you would like to know how I stemmed the storm. With a faithful doctor and five lady friends, excellent nurses and sisters Mollie and Sallie, I have pulled through. * * * I had the best of care and so much loving attention, for which I feel grateful. * * * Oh, I can't be thankful enough for God's goodness to me. I felt that I was going, and I wanted my house to be in order." Truly, her house was in order, it was swept of self and garnished with Christian graces. It seemed to have been God's plan that she should go to him without regret to leave loved ones here. His message came for her while she slept after she was convalescent. During her serious illness, she often expressed regret to leave the widowed sister-in-law, Mrs. M. E. Decker, whose home she had shared thirty-five years. She knew, if she was taken, the home that had blended into "our home" through their beautiful fidelity to each other would be broken up. The leaven her sweet spirit diffused into that home and the world cannot be measured until the end of time, when the works and influence of her well spent life roll upon the shores of eternity.

"Power for Service."
BY REV. J. B. LAWRENCE,
Corresponding Secretary, Board of Missions, Baptist Convention of Louisiana. Editor of Baptist Chronicle, Published at Alexandria, La.

This is a book of 270 pages, printed on heavy paper, and finely bound in cloth. It discusses in a clear and forcible way one of the great questions of the day. In these days men are preaching a practical gospel, impressing the fact that "we are saved for service." This book discusses "Power for Service," or the secret by which saved men do the work of the Lord. It is written in a pleasing style, and cannot fail to interest and benefit all who have any desire to become one of the Lord's co-workers. It is to the credit of the author that in the very first paragraph of the book he sets forth very distinctly and truly what our Lord meant when he said to the disciples: "Tarry ye at Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." This is the key-note of the book.

FROM GLENMORA, LA.

Dear Doctor Boswell: When I came to this work the 31st of December, prospects for a good year seemed discouraging. At two of my Quarterly Conferences my report on "spiritual state of the church" was rather like the wail of the prophets not, however, without some expression of hope. That hope was in God, in his goodness and willingness to hear and answer prayer, and in his power to awaken and save. The spiritual atmosphere is getting better here all the time. Our meeting at Glenmora began the third of June and continued till the seventh. Brother J. F. Waltman was with us and did some earnest, faithful, Holy Ghost preaching. It seemed a pity that we had to close just when we did, but owing to so much sickness around here we thought it best to close.

We began our meeting at Melder the fourth Sunday in July. Brother G. D. Purcell was with us and captivated the people with his plain gospel preaching. Sin was held up as a great enemy to be hated and forsaken. The necessity of a "clean heart" before God was preached in power. Jesus Christ, as the Savior from sin, was held up before the awakened and penitent sinner. Righteousness, and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost was stressed as being the religion needed.

Our meeting at Camp Ground Church began the 11th of August and continued till the 18th. The Lord was with us and revived his faithful people at that place. Brother Frank J. McCoy did the preaching and gave us the pure word of God. Brother McCoy deserves much credit for his great zeal and faith in his calling to preach and teach the love of Jesus Christ to a dying world. He also proved himself to be an interesting and successful altar worker.

Brother Brown, our beloved presiding elder, was with us on Saturday and Sunday during the meeting and held our third Quarterly Conference. He also preached two impressive sermons. On Sunday evening he preached a sermon to men only, on the importance of living purer lives, and teaching them that in the church is the place to rear their children.

Brother S. D. Howard was with us in our meeting at Forest Hill which began the second Sunday in September. I never heard better preaching in my life, and that was the decision of all that heard him. He captivated the people. The meeting was a success beyond a doubt. We had fine congregations at the eleven o'clock service, and at night the house was crowded with a hungry, thirsting multitude of people who were anxious to drink in his words of truth and wisdom.

As a result of these meetings the church has been revived, and the country at large blest. We have had twelve accessions, eleven on profession of faith and one by certificate.

I am laboring and praying for a great year for my Master. Brethren, pray for us. Satan yet has a strong hold in this country, and God is needed in so many homes.

Doctor, before closing, would like to say that our people have been very kind to us. So many useful things have been given to us this year, that help a small salary.

God bless the editor and readers of the Advocate.

G. A. MORGAN, P. C.

FROM THE IDA CHARGE.

We are now domiciled in Shreveport, having our name enrolled as a student of Centenary College, but still filling our appointments on the Ida Charge. The summer was spent in holding revivals at the several churches on the work, and the Lord abundantly blessed our efforts as some fifty or sixty were added to the church, and we had many conversions among those who were already members of the church.

We have made a vigorous mission campaign and will be able to report this item in full, and also hope to report everything in full. Finances have been much better this year on the work than last, but I believe this is a fact everywhere and at all times when the Spirit of the Lord moves on and in the people. It takes a man born of God to realize that, "The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof," and that the great mission and purpose of man is God's glory.

These good people continue to pound us, but I think we will be able to stand the pounding. Just a few days ago we received a large box from Dixie which contained a pounding that any preacher could appreciate. Those Dixie people are among the very "salt of the earth."

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property-holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property-holders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically not outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C Hartwell & Co., for a detailed explanation.

DOWNSVILLE, LA.

Dear Editor: We have held our meetings at Downsville and Pine Grove. We had with us at Downsville, Brother V. D. Skipper who did us some very fine preaching, which was both edifying and delightful to the people, and resulted in the addition of five persons on profession of faith. Brother Skipper is one of our most able men and has the credit of preaching the deepest and best sermon that was ever delivered in the Downsville Church. By special request, Brother Skipper is to return and preach this sermon again, at Downsville the fifth Sunday in October.

Our Pine Grove meeting was run but a few days as people were busy gathering their crops. We had a good revival, baptized ten children and received fifteen persons on profession of faith into the church.

We have received into membership this year, three by certificate and one hundred and thirty-three on profession of faith.

To God be all the glory.

M. H. HONEYCUTT, P. C.

SHUBUTA AND QUITMAN.

We closed an eight day's meeting at Quitman last Friday night, September 24, with twenty-one accessions on profession of faith and eleven by certificate. Brother J. J. Golden came to us on Monday and did all the preaching during the week. I have never had a more efficient help in a meeting, and the work he did in strengthening and building up the church will abide.

We have held the dedication service of our new parsonage and it was a most delightful and impressive service. Mrs. Dr. Hand spoke for the ladies, and told of their interest in the new parsonage, and what they with the ladies at Quitman had done to furnish and make their preacher's home attractive and comfortable. She made our hearts glad when she stated that the $100 set for the reception hall had been donated by the children and young people of the church. She was followed by Brother G. S. Weems for the building committee, who turned this splendid $3000 worth of property over to the trustees free of debt. Brother T. A. Ledyard, for the trustees, received the property and turned it over to the pastor who made a talk and led in prayer of consecration. Then after singing the Doxology and the benediction by Brother Philips, of the Baptist Church, everybody was invited into the dining room where the ladies had provided an elegant repast.

A WORD FROM WHITE CHAPEL.

Mr. Editor: The revival meeting at White Chapel was late coming this year, and was held by the pastor himself, Rev. A. W. Turner, and you know, Mr. Editor, how Brother Turner does things when he starts. He began his meeting last Saturday night, with Miss Fannie Hatfield at the organ, and preached twice a day from that on, and closed last night, the 16th inst. And such soul-stirring sermons as Brother Turner gave us it has not been the writer's privilege to listen to for some time. The weather was ideal and the church was packed to overflowing at every night service, with a good attendance in the day time, even the Catholics of the community attending regularly, they were so charmed with Brother Turner's preaching.

While there were no additions to the church (nearly every one in the community belonging to some church), yet the results of the meeting, as manifested and shown by the membership, will never be known this side of eternity.

At the closing night of the meeting almost every one in the vast audience arose en masse and testified they wanted to live so as to meet again the loved ones gone on before.

It was altogether the best meeting we have had here for several years. No excitement, but every one praising God. Brother Turner is in great love with his people here and is doing a good work.

This church is a unit against the lawlessness being carried on in Opelousas, and as a body of citizens, are willing to give their aid and influence to the suppression of the same, as is evidenced by several of the most prominent men coming up to Brother Turner and voluntarily giving their names for membership in the Law and Order League.

With best wishes, Mr. Editor, for the success of the dear old Advocate I was born in the family of, I remain, fraternally yours,

F. R. WHITE.

FROM GRENADA CIRCUIT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: On the fourth Sunday in April, 1908, our church at Holcomb, Miss., was wrecked by a storm. The church there is weak, numerically and financially, and did not feel able to rebuild at once. There is no other church or suitable place to worship in the little town. After more than a year of waiting and suffering our people determined to arise and build a larger and better house. They had a mind to pay and to work and have done nobly. Also, they have received some assistance from kind friends.

All available funds have been used and a small debt contracted, though the house is far from being ready for use this winter, the work is at a standstill for want of means. These people need assistance. Who will help them? Any friends wishing to help them will please send their contributions to Dr. C. C. Moore, or Dr. H. L. Hightower, Holcomb, Miss., and those good people will ever appreciate your help and hold you in grateful remembrance.

W. G. BURKS, Pastor.

Mr. B. G. Worth, Wilmington, N. C., writes: "I have been extolling Gray's Ointment for over fifty years. I am now 86 years of age and would not be without your Ointment for anything.

ONE CAUSE OF DISCONTENT IN INDIA.

Every year 15,000 students graduate from the universities, and $8,000,000 is spent annually for education. This means that many every year are looking for work to do, and posts to fill. And this young India, this half-trained, undisciplined India, is filled with the divine discontent of youth, and wants something, she hardly knows what, but more of freedom and independence. Why should England rule India at all? Why should poverty-stricken India furnish wealth and position for even a few of England's younger sons? Why should the Indian Empire be the reflected glory of the British Raj, and not shine a sun by her own light? The partition of Bengal furnished a pretext, the victory of Japan afforded an inspiration, but the time was ripe for a change in attitude toward the ruling power.—The Missionary Review of the World.

It was in this very cottage in Brookside, 15 miles from Birmingham, Ala., that three Italians nearly died of Fever. They had been sick 3 months. Johnson's Tonic cured them quickly—read letter below:

Brookside, Ala., May 4, 1903.

The two physicians here had 3 very obstinate cases of continued Malarial Fever. All were Italians and lived on a creek 50 yards from my store. These cases were of three months standing, their temperature ranging from 100 to 104. The doctors had tried everything in vain. I persuaded them to let me try Johnson's Tonic. I removed all the printed matter and let the medicine go out in a plain bottle as a regular prescription. The effect in all three cases was immediate and permanent. They recovered rapidly and there was no recurrence of the Fever.

TOPIC FOR OCTOBER 10, 1909.

THE FORGIVEN UNFORGIVING.

Matt. xviii:23-35.

It seems to be a part of human nature to seek revenge, and to hold malice against those who have done us wrong. It has often excited the wonder of men, and even raised doubts, when some sweet-spirited Christian forgives wrong. Yet the Lord has made it one of the chief essentials of his kingdom, that we forgive if we expect to be forgiven.

We have a lesson that condenses this story of mercy essential, into a few words. A ruler finds one of his officers in default for a vast sum. When it is apparent that the man can never repay the debt, he orders that the debtor with his family shall be sold for the debt. But at the cry of despair and plea for mercy, this man is forgiven.

But, the man who has had a vast debt forgiven, goes out into the highways and lays hold upon one of his fellow servants, who owes him a small sum, and uses the law to exact all that is due. The mercy shown in his own life, produces no result, when he seeks what he considers his rights.

When the ruler hears of this lack of mercy, he arrests again the servant that he had released from debt, and exacts the utmost penalty from him. He shall not come forth until he has paid the uttermost farthing, he shall languish in a hopeless slavery.

The application to our lives of this parable, apparently leads to a startling conclusion; if we from our hearts do not forgive all our enemies, then every message of mercy shall be void, and the uttermost penalty shall be exacted from us for all our sins. The Lord has taught us to pray "forgive us our sins as we forgive." The man who treasures wrath in his heart, then is praying that the Infinite One, shall punish all his sins, and remember them against him forever.

Who is there among us that dare hold malice against another. He fixes his own eternal doom.

WISHED FOR DEATH

Terrible thing to be so sick, that death would come as a welcome relief from suffering!

How much, then, must one be thankful for a medicine that relieves such misery and brings one into a less desperate state of mind.

Cardui, Woman's Relief, has done this for many women, and may be expected to do so for many more.

Thousands of ladies have written to tell about their suffering, and how it was relieved by the use of Cardui.

Among this long list of letters written, stands forth Mattie Campbell, of Ratcliff, Texas, who says: "Two years ago my health was bad. I suffered untold misery. I ached all over. Life was a burden to me. At times I wished for death, to end my suffering.

"At last, I decided to try Cardui. I took one bottle and it helped me. I took 12 bottles more and now I can say that Cardui has stopped my suffering and made life worth living.

"I would not be placed back where I was—not for this whole world rolled at my feet."

Try Cardui. It contains not one grain of dangerous mineral ingredients, but is purely vegetable, and a safe, reliable remedy for young and old.

Sold everywhere.

LESSON FOR OCT. 10, 1909.

PAUL A PRISONER—THE PLOT.

Acts xxii, 11-24.

Golden Text: "I will say of the Lord He is my refuge and my fortress, my God; in him will I trust."—Psalm xci, 2.

All Jerusalem was in a great state of excitement over the presence of one man; but that one man had aroused the people at every place where he had been. Some had been awakened to realize the need of salvation; that was the work of the Holy Spirit. Others had been aroused to fiercest opposition and antagonism, and that was the work of Satan. The kingdom of God was being firmly established in the hearts of men, and Satan, knowing this, was putting forth all his power to check and counteract a movement that meant the better condition of mankind, both present and future. The throng of listening Jews paid close attention to Paul's words of defense, until he spoke of the Gentiles being included in God's plan of salvation; then bigoted prejudice burst forth in a howl.

The military officers could not understand why the mob was so enraged, as Paul spoke in the Hebrew language. So it was commanded that the usual method of examination be resorted to, and that the apostle be bound and scourged. While they went about to prepare Paul for his torture, he asked those so engaged whether it was lawful to bind and scourge a Roman citizen. Hearing this question, those attending to the preparation stopped at once, and went to the chief captain and warned him to be careful of how he treated one who claimed Roman citizenship. Then they were all at a loss how to proceed, and set the apostle free.

The incident had become so very important that the commanding officer called the Sanhedrin together, with the hope that a trial before that body would bring forth a charge that would overshadow even the claim of exalted citizenship. Paul was perfectly self-possessed as he appeared before this council; he used great tact in his speech before them, adroitly alluding to a subject that never failed to produce a wrangle between the Pharisees and the Sadducees—the question of the resurrection. The turmoil thus precipitated between the two parties became so fierce that Paul was rescued from among them by soldiers sent there from the castle.

This was an anxious time for this servant of God; he was alone in his sorrow; the church could not help him. So, after the day full of danger, came the night in the castle, surrounded by soldiers. It was then that his heart was ready to sink for what he feared was before him yet to suffer. As the night passed, when the noises around were stilled, there came another blessed vision to Paul: The Lord came again, and stood by him, and spoke words of comfort that must have made the gloomy despondency shine with the glory of the Son of God. "Be of good cheer, Paul."

O the sweetness of Jesus' words, always ready to heal the broken-hearted. "Be of good cheer, Paul: for as thou has testified of me at Jerusalem, so must thou testify also at Rome." After that there was peace in the prisoner's heart, even if malignant plots were being prepared at that very time; plots to take Paul's life. The word had gone forth: Paul must testify of Christ at Rome; all the conspirators were powerless; Paul must live; God would bring all things to pass to that end.

Just see how plainly, how naturally was the plans of the conspirators brought to naught. Paul's nephew overheard them as they spoke to one another of the part they were to take in killing Paul as soon as he was brought out of the castle. Of course, the boy went to his uncle at once and told him all he had heard. The boy must have followed the conspirators to their conference with the chief priests and the elders, and was thus enabled to give a full and connected account. This was not strange for one so young, when we reflect that God was using him as a means to a promised end. Paul was satisfied to trust his nephew with so important a matter, and sent him at once to the chief captain.

Note the kindness with which that official received the boy; he took him by the hand and led him aside to some retired place, so that he could deliver his message undisturbed by the surroundings. See how strange is the result of this interview; this great man, from information given by a little boy, was aroused to immediate action. Preparation was made at once for a great military escort to convey Paul to a place of safety.

At the last moment, when the plot was ripe for execution, deliverance came. Paul's extremity was God's opportunity. Paul's faith never failed; he was so sure that a way of escape would be made that the manner in which it was made seemed to follow, event upon event, as in a regular ordered plan.

So it is with God's way. Each of us can recall wonderful tokens of his care over us. Why should we ever doubt God's promised care for us? God uses the means nearest at hand, and children have their part as humble instruments of providence; they are God's, the lambs of his flock, and he tenderly cares for them. Unless we humble ourselves and become as one of these little ones; there is no place for us in his kingdom. We follow on along the path of persecution that marked the road Paul took at the command of the Master, and we rejoice to know, for a verity, that even the most humble servant of Christ is led, comforted and cheered, as was Paul, the apostle to the Gentiles.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

MONEY BACK CATARRH CURE.

Catarrh is caused by germs.

The way to cure catarrh is to kill the germs; no one will deny that.

Stomach dosing, sprays and douches won't kill catarrh germs; they don't get where the germs are.

But Hyomei, the pleasant antiseptic air from the Eucalyptus forests of Australia, when breathed over the germ infested membrane, will cure catarrh. If it doesn't, you can have your money back.

A complete Hyomei outfit, including hard rubber inhaler at any druggist's for $1.00; or direct, all charges prepaid from Booth's Hyomei Co., Dept. 11, Buffalo, N. Y. Send for sample and booklet, "Booth's Famous People," free to you.

Hyomei cures coughs, colds, sore throat, croup and bronchitis.

FROM WALNUT GROVE, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Permit me to say to you and the readers of the Advocate that we have spent a very profitable year, so far, among the good people of Walnut Grove and surrounding country. We have just wound up our protracted meetings on the charge, which was six in number. We had good preaching help at each place, and good congregations and truly the Spirit of God was in every service throughout the charge.

There have been fifty-eight persons added to the church this year, and forty-seven children baptized.

I would like especially to call attention to the meeting at Zion Church which began the second of September and continued eight days, the results of which were twenty-seven added to the church by profession of faith and two by certificate and thirty-three children baptized during the meeting. Rev. M. L. White, of Prentiss, Miss., did the preaching; he preached sixteen able sermons. No man is held in higher esteem and love in this section than Brother White. About four and one-half years ago he built the church at Zion with only a few members; to-day there are 104 active members. He served this work four years, and did a great work while here. Brother White's name will ever live among this people for the good he did them while here.

Well, Doctor, the Conference year is fast coming to a close and I am praying and working to make a full report despite all the conflict, and short crops in this section.

God bless you in your work.

G. P. FIKES, P. C.

NOTHING HARMFUL IN COCA-COLA

The past few years has seen a remarkable growth in temperance ideas in all parts of the United States. And as a consequence there has been considerable falling off in the consumption of spirituous liquors. One of the chief substitutes for intoxicating beverages which has brought about this change of front is Coca-Cola.

It is counted as one of the chief auxiliaries of the temperance movement, largely on account of the increased use of Coca-Cola, a perfectly harmless beverage, the soda fountain has supplanted the saloon in many places. Coca-Cola is now not only made by the parent company in Atlanta, but also by branch houses in Philadelphia, Chicago, Dallas, Texas, and Los Angeles, Cal.

In the fall of 1907 the War Department, upon representations that had been made to it, issued an order directing that the sale of Coca-Cola by Army Post Exchanges be discontinued. The Coca-Cola people naturally objected to this ruling and the War Department turned over a sample of Coca-Cola to the Bureau of Chemistry of the Agricultural Department for analysis. From the chemist's report it appears that the beverage contains no appreciable quantity of alcohol; that it contains no cocaine and but a small quantity of caffeine. The result of the investigation showed that the original order of exclusion was unjust and was at once revoked.

Perhaps the most conclusive evidence that Coca-Cola is a harmless beverage is the action taken by the authorities of Pennsylvania. Dr. B. H. Warren, the Dairy and Food Commissioner of the State, caused an analysis to be made and reported as a result of careful analysis: "No cocaine detected."

Dr. W. B. Burney, of the Chemical Department of South Carolina College; Dr. W. H. Taylor, of Richmond, State Chemist of Virgina; Dr. Louis Schaeffer, President of the Schaefer Alkaloid Works, Maywood, N. J., a chemist of world-wide reputation, and many other eminent chemists, agree that Coca-Cola is absolutely harmless. It is not only harmless, but is genuinely good to the taste and an aid to digestion.—The Baptist Standard.

ABERDEEN CIRCUIT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: We closed out our series of protracted meetings for Aberdeen Circuit here at Greenwood Springs last night, continuing eight days which resulted in thirty additions on profession of faith and quite a number of renewals. The little town is wonderfully wrought up. We began our revival meetings first Sabbath in August running on continuously to third Sabbath in September, except one week, resulting in seventy-three additions on profession of faith and quite a lot of renewals—some family altars organized, and others renewed.

The Lord has blessed our feeble efforts really beyond beyond our expectations—have had good revivals at all of the churches; have had no ministerial help, except a young Brother Broyles from Columbus, who gave us good assistance for a few days in two meetings. He bids fair to come to the front some day. He is a fine young man.

Have collected and paid off nearly all of our Home and Foreign Mission assessments, and hope to be successful in the balance of the collections ordered by the Conference. Praise the Lord! L. T. SARGENT.

Greenwood Springs, Miss.

A GREAT REVIVAL IN SOUTH McCOMB.

Our meeting for South McComb began on the second Sunday in September. The first two sermons were preached by Rev. Clinton Foreman, of Gloster, Miss. His sermons made a profound impression on the large audience and proved first-class as a foundation for the great revival that followed.

On Monday, Brother H. M. Ellis, of Brookhaven, took charge of the meeting and preached twice each day with telling effect, till the following Monday. I am sure that the Lord sent him to us. I have never listened to more appropriate revival sermons. His sermon on Monday night resulted in fifteen or twenty conversions.

Rev. D. E. Kelly came in on Monday and preached four fine sermons which resulted in fifty or more conversions. We have more than one hundred that pray in public and that do personal work in our meeting. Glory to God! "Salvation is rolling on."

ARE AMERICAN COLLEGES UNDERMINING CHRISTIANITY?

Following the recent series of articles in the Cosmopolitan Magazine on the above subject, the Christian Statesman, the magazine published by the National Reform Association, showed that these articles dealt with the situation in not more than a score of institutions, while no attention was given to the more than five hundred smaller colleges of the United States, and promised to secure a report from this larger field. This work lies within the proper field of the Christian Statesman because, in its defense of our National Christianity, the National Reform Association withstands the de-Christianizing of the State Universities as well as of the common schools. A carefully prepared letter was sent to the presidents of nearly all colleges and universities in the United States. The response has been prompt, and the letters full of valuable information. A careful analysis and summary of these replies, with many of the letters in full, will be published in the November issue of the Christian Statesman, (already by the middle of October) together with the findings and conclusions, which are sustained by the evidence. The importance of these conclusions, and of the whole subject, is self-evident. More and more our State Universities and larger colleges are determining the character of our whole educational system, and our educational system is molding the character of the Nation. Single copies of this issue can be obtained for ten cents, postpaid, and six copies for fifty cents at the office of the National Reform Association, 209 Ninth Street, Pittsburg, Pa.

Obituaries.

Mrs. SARAH R. MYERS MARTIN, wife of Brother A. T. Martin was born in Tennessee, Sept. 13, 1844. She moved to Mississippi, and was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South at Strong River Church, now Clear Creek, under the pastoral charge of this writer in 1858. She was married to A. T. Martin, July 31, 1872, and departed this life July 15, 1909. After she was married to A. T. Martin her membership was transferred to New Prospect Church, from thence to Lodebar Church where her name remains recorded. She lived in all good faith and practice, so this writer is informed up to the time of her departure for the Church triumphant. She was loved by all who knew her more intimately. She had no enemies; she leaves a husband and two sons, also ten grandchildren to be sad over her departure. We should not mourn as those who have no hope. Husband, sons and grandchildren, follow her as she followed Christ. Rest under the shadow of the tree of life, departed loved one, until we meet again.

R. A. SIBLEY, Sr.

From Fayetteville, Ark., two of the purest, sweetest spirited Christians that it has ever been my good fortune to know went home to be with their Master. On April 24 Miss Alice, on May 3 Miss Lucy Myers, sisters. They had recently moved from Rolling Fork, Miss., to live with their sister, Mrs. Coker, and to seek a healthier climate. Rolling Fork had been their home, where they have three brothers living, and where they had let their lights shine in the church, Sunday school and the home and social life of the community. Always cheerful and happy, never robust, but never complaining to outsiders, they made one feel more cheerful by their association. They counted all who knew them among their friends; to know them was to love them. Their love for one another was unbounded; considerate of one another, their home life was beautiful, and out of this life came lives consecrated to the Master's service, always ready for any work where they were needed in the church. Miss Alice took her mother's place. Miss Lucy was the youngest, and yet it seemed they could not be separated even by death. They live together now, and wait the coming of the dear ones who weep, but who with hope are pressing on to their home in the skies. We shall see them again.

Mrs. LUCINDA FRANCES McKNIGHT was born in Pontotoc County, Miss., Dec. 9, 1855, and died in Texarkana, Tex., Sept. 3, 1909, at 3:30 p. m., She was the daughter of Henry Bachman and a sister of Rev. G. W. Bachman, of the North Mississippi Conference. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Hunter's Chapel in 1871, under the pastorate of Rev. B. B. Brown. Sept. 18, 1872, she was married to John I. McKnight. To them were born five children, three of whom, Boswell, Milburn and Mrs. Onnie Banks, are living, and were present when their mother died. One brother, Rev. G. W. Bachman, and one sister, Mrs. Robert McKnight, were also with her. Brother and Sister McKnight moved to Miller County, Ark., in 1889. She was a consistent member of the Fairview M. E. Church, South. She was sick and suffered a great deal for several months, but manifested a marked degree of patience. Hers was an exemplary Christian life from childhood. During her last sickness she testified of the blessings of God upon her, and spoke of her willingness and readiness to go. Brother McKnight seems resigned and submissive. She was buried in State Line Cemetery, Texarkana, Ark. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth * * * that they may rest from their labors." Her pastor,

Mrs. MARY CROWELL HAYS was born in McLenburg County, N. C., Sept. 30, 1830, died in Shannon, Lee County, Miss., Sept. 2, 1909. She was raised in Clayton County, Ga., joined the Methodist Church when quite a girl. She was married to S. B. Hays, July 22, 1858 by Rev. Josiah Smith in Jonesboro, Ga. She had no children of her own, but proved herself a true mother to the motherless, and raised thirteen orphan children. Three of those were her husband's sons, two of whom, with their father, had crossed the mystic river before she did, ready to greet her after the long waiting. Sister Hays was a faithful, good woman. Little children loved her, and esteemed it a great pleasure to visit "Grandma Hays." Old people honored and respected her. Her's was a sunny, bright soul, she seemed to be able to see the sunlight when all the skies were full of clouds. She lived in Amory, Miss., and was on a visit to Mrs. J. P. Wiygul, Shannon, Miss., when she received the summons to come up higher. She loved her church and it was her very great pleasure to attend the services, especially Sunday School. When her strength would not permit her to attend she wanted her Sunday School book sent to her. We who had the pleasure of knowing her, feel that she made the world better by being in it. Good-bye dear, old "Grandma," we hope to meet you by and by.

Her pastor, W. S. SHIPMAN.

In the parsonage home at Rocky Springs, Miss., Mrs. LORAINE CARRINGTON WHIDDON, on the 20th day of May, 1909, passed to her eternal home. The resolutions in a recent issue of the Advocate, adopted by the excellent women of the Rocky Springs charge is some small indication of their great esteem for her. As her pastor, the writer of this gladly testifies of her Christian, womanly life. In the quiet welcome extended, one felt, rather than saw the depths of her gracious hospitality. A great pleasure it was to be acquainted, but a deeper one to know her. It was no surprise when her bereaved husband wrote that she feared not to die. But did she want to die? No, oh! no. There was too much that called her to stay. The boy, bright, sunny little fellow, that he is, needed her; the baby-girl, only ten days old needed her. Her husband, whom she loved so deeply, needed her; her father, now grown old, and loved ones all needed her. Yes, she wanted to stay, but the good God called, and she was willing. And so she closed her eyes to things of the present, fleeting momentary, and opened them on the eternal. Our sister was born Aug. 16, in Rankin County, Miss. Her father, Bro. Barksdale, of Goshen, Rankin Co., married her to Rev. E. L. Whiddon at Basin, Miss., in 1904. Of this union there are two children, Slater E. and Carrington V. Whiddon. She died May 20, 1909. These are the brief annals of our sister's life. The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away. Here awhile, the dear ones left behind, will linger. The burden, because of her absence will often, often grow heavy; the aching brow unsoothed, will suffer long, it may be for the touch of the vanished hand, and the saddened, troubled heart sigh for the comfort of her presence. But, with it all, sweet, sweet will it be to reflect that with her, it is well. Oh! our Father comfort the heart of her loved ones, with the comfort which only thou can'st give.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas Almighty God, in his infinite wisdom, hath seen best to take from our midst, WALKER CONRAD, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Fomby, and whereas, we deplore the loss of our young Christian brother, and lament with his friends and relatives, be it resolved:

First, That we extend to his bereaved parents and loved ones our heartfelt sympathy. We mourn deeply with them in this, their great hour of trouble, and words are inadequate to express the depth of grief we share with them, but, we can only point them to the one who has promised to comfort those who mourn, and prepare them to look forward to, and prepare for the great reunion in heaven.

Second, That we request that these resolutions be spread on the Sunday School record, and that a copy be sent to the New Orleans Advocate and to the Homer papers.

Signed by Mrs. G. B. Hefley, Mrs. J. T. Otts, Mr. Edmond Moreland, Committee.

VICTORY WON.

Dear Editor: Please allow me a little space in your good paper to make a report of my work.

We began a meeting at Calhoun City the fourth Sunday in July, with Brother James H. Felts, our presiding elder to do the preaching, and it was well done. The meeting continued for ten days with increasing interest. The church was wonderfully built up. The Doctrines of the Methodist Church were forcibly preached and treasured up in the mind and hearts of the people. There were forty additions to the Methodist Church as the result of this meeting.

We went next to Derma, the Second Sunday in August, with Brother L. W. Cain, our pastor at Houston, to do the preaching. Brother Cain did some fine preaching. My people were delighted with his power. This meeting lasted eight days with seven or eight conversions and one addition to our church. It was a good revival in the church.

We have not finished our splendid new church at Derma, but hope to be in it before Conference.

We then gave battle to the enemy of souls, at Big Creek, the third Sunday in August with Brother W. L. Graves, of Itta Bena, to preach for us. Brother Graves captured the people of Big Creek. There was a considerable revival at this place, and much good was accomplished.

Brother E. G. Kilgore, of High Point, N. C., did a good deal of the preaching to the edification and satisfaction of his many relatives and friends. He was also with us in the Calhoun City and Derma meetings.

The meeting at Big Creek continued for ten days with many reclaimed; ten or twelve professions, and eight additions to the Methodist Church.

We continued the fight at Pittsboro the first Sunday in September, with Brother W. S. Lagrone, our Conference Evangelist, to do the preaching. Prof. H. W. Butt, of Eskridge, Miss., led the choir, and Brother B. S. Elliott of Winona, Miss., a consecrated, godly layman, to persuade and talk and pray, and with these men, with the Holy Spirit to lead, there was no such thing as a failure.

Brother Lagrone did some of the old time gospel preaching that was honored of God and carried home to the hearts of the people by the Spirit. The work was earnestly and faithfully done, with the following results: twenty professions; seventeen additions to our church; and the general interests of the Master's cause built up, also, the organization of a law and order league with thirty-eight members. No man will make a mistake in securing the aid of any of the above brethren to assist in meetings.

This is a good people that I serve, with great possibilities. This is a good country, but undeveloped. We have received over one hundred members this year; expended five or six thousand dollars; everything going well, and all the claims will be paid. A clean sheet at Conference is our motto.

To God be all the glory, dominion and praise.

THE WORLD-WIDE MISSION OF THE CHURCH.

By the Editor.

The Church is not only "the pillar and ground of the truth," but the divinely-appointed agency for its propagation. Its mission is world-wide. The Lord's command was: Begin at Jerusalem, and go ye into all the world. Preach the Gospel to every creature. The work, involving the destiny of untold millions, was one of immense magnitude to be laid on a handful of disciples who but a short time previous, at the first approach of danger, "forsook him and fled." But conditions had changed. The Lord had triumphed over his enemies, and endued his followers with power. From then on they were neither ashamed nor afraid to go before men with their message. To the utmost of their ability they obeyed the command: "They went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them and confirming the Word with signs following."

But persecution followed, and holy Stephen gave his life for the truth. His blood proved to be fruitful seed; for though the disciples were scattered, they carried with them the spirit of the Master; and remembering the example of Stephen who defied his enemies, and met the favor of God, they boldly preached the Word, and men took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus. "The Word of God grew mightily and prevailed."

In due time, Saul of Tarsus, afterwards known to the Church as Paul the Apostle, who consented to and witnessed the martyrdom of Stephen, was converted, and joining his fortunes with the infant Church, was set apart as the apostle to the outer-world, the Lord saying unto him, "Depart (from Jerusalem), for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles." Whether Saul of Tarsus took the place of Judas instead of Matthias, which we believe, is a matter of small moment compared to the fact that in obedience to the Lord Jesus, he acted as missionary to all "the regions beyond."

Possibly the early Church did not fully understand the Master when he said, "Go ye into all the world." If not, they were excusable to some extent, thinking as they did, that Judea comprised the whole world, or at least the world the Lord had in mind. They were yet under the influence of Jewish prejudice, which held the Jews to be the people of God, and the only people to whom it was possible for the Lord to show any peculiar favors. Peter cherished this prejudice, and evidently thought that his business was to offer the Gospel only to his own race. It is remarkable though, how readily and with what unanimity the disciples surrendered their prejudices when they saw that the Holy Ghost fell on the Gentiles as he had fallen on the Jews at the beginning. Then the Church assumed its militant character, and went forth on a war of conquest.

If the spirit of missions ever left the Church, or the opportunity to give the Gospel to the whole world ever slipped out of its hands, the spirit is now revived and mightily stirs the hearts of men, and the opportunity is such as never before was given to a faithful and willing people. The spirit is all-pervading. Nobody now asks: Is it obligatory or expedient to give the Gospel to the heathen? The day for such inquiry has passed, at least among professed Christians. The churches now recognize the universal brotherhood of the race, and are vieing with each other in efforts to give the Gospel to all men. Now and then we find a commercialized man who rejects the whole business as a waste of money, or the fad of fanatics, but his objections are unheeded, and the work goes on. The Church choses rather to obey the voice of God.

In the prosecution of the work, well-nigh the whole world has been reached—few countries remain untouched, though all are not saved. Some of them are barely touched. In China, for example, there are perhaps three hundred millions of souls who have not yet heard of Jesus. The same may be said of millions in India, and Korea and other far-off nations. Japan, possibly more fortunate, still has millions of souls in idolatry and superstition. But the work—only just begun—will go on until these and all other kingdoms shall become the kingdoms of our God and his Christ.

But it has come to pass that home mission work is about as important and imperative as missions abroad. This is true because our great cities have become the dwelling places of myriads of men and women who either know not God, or care not for their own souls; not a few of these people are natives. The greater number are foreigners who though mostly from Christian lands, know little more of Christ, and true religion than men born in the heart of Africa. This foreign population is rapidly increasing, both in the city and in the country. The godless natives in the city are likewise multiplying at a rapid rate, and as great cities are the centers of both population and influence these people are becoming a menace to the morals of the whole country.

What the Church does in behalf of these foreigners and abandoned natives, must be done quickly. We must save them, or be unwilling witnesses of the demoralization of our kith and kin. They are multiplying at too rapid a rate to be let alone or neglected. True, the vast majority of them are Roman Catholics. But Protestants know what character of Christians these were in their old European homes. We do not want that kind of religion transplanted to our soil. This will inevitably be the case unless they become Protestants, or take on a better form of Romanism.

The whole Protestant world now looks upon our cities as mission fields, and, as never before, efforts are being made to evangelize them. Methodists cannot afford to be behind others in their efforts. And, God willing, we will not.

OUR HOME MISSION POLICY.

By Rev. John R. Nelson, D.D., Secretary Home Department, Board of Missions.

Home Missions of the M. E. Church, South, is a divided interest. The Board of Missions has charge of "Foreign Missions and all others not provided for by Annual Conferences." Annual Conferences are charged with the burden of Home Mission work, both in initiation and administration. The Board of Missions appropriates to Conferences occupying needy fields, but does not in any manner interfere with their work. Annual Conferences have appropriated this year to the home field $286,838, while the appropriations of the General Board of Missions amount to $63,690.

Segregating the Church into Annual Conferences has resulted in each Conference taking care of its own territory. The field varies with the methods and work of individual Conferences. In one Conference, "Immanuel's lands" have been cultivated while in another just across the boundary line the "waste places of Zion," are in evidence. Hence the territory of Southern Methodism presents the appearance of Jacob's cattle, "being streaked, speckled and spotted."

The administration of Home Mission work in an Annual Conference is centered in a Board of Missions, which "appoints its own officers," regulates its own affairs, and has absolute control of the missions it may establish, with the consent of the president of the Conference, and "the funds raised for its support." Although the creature of the Conference and auxiliary to the parent board, this Board is independent in its operations and submits reports, for information, and not final adoption. The constant influx of new members and consequent change of administration of a board materially interferes with any well defined and consecutive plans of work.

Some Boards of Missions are progressive, lead their Conferences in missionary matters and are doing a magnificent work, while others have meager results.

Many of the Conferences have not had adequate funds for their Home Mission work. While none of the strong Conferences have had more domestic mission money than was needed, the weak Conferences have waged an unequal contest for lack of means. Relatively the greater the resources of a Conference, the less its missionary territory, and the less a Conference's income, the greater its demands.

Last year, the South Georgia Conference, leading the Church in contributions to missions, raised $17,313 for Home Mission work within its own bounds, occupying the southern half of the Christian State of Georgia, while the Florida Conference adjoining, had only $6,231 domestic mission money to evangelize the entire State of Florida, including an important gate city in the north, and great foreign colonies in the south. The Virginia Conference is spending this year $14,459 for her own Home Mission work, while the Western Virginia Conference had only $1,344 Home Mission money with which to give the Gospel to mountain whites, foreigners and mining population. The Mississippi and North Mississippi together, last fall, appropriated $14,993 for rural missions in the prohibition State of Mississippi, while the Louisiana Conference, covering the entire State of Louisiana, had only $5,651 domestic money for mission work among the State-wide rural population, a quarter of a million French-speaking people, and the greatest city in the South. Each Annual Conference, of course, has a right to use its own funds for work within its own bounds.

Our purpose is to call attention to a system which makes it possible for the mission work of the Church to prosper in one Conference and in another to live at a poor, dying rate, and for Home Missionaries in one State to have enough and to spare, and in another perish with hunger. The demands of the Home field were never greater in the history of the Church. Every Annual Conference is taxed to the utmost with its regular Home Mission work. Of our 6500 pastoral charges, 1,828 are receiving missionary appropriations. If the funds were available and the men could be had, at least that many more missions could be carved out of unoccupied and promising territory. The larger cities, foreign immigration, factory districts and mining towns are new phases of Home Mission work that call for skilled workmen and outlays of money that are out of the question with our present policy. Conditions have grown worse, year by year, until in many of the Conferences the situations are serious, and in places, critical.

What is needed and we must have is a connectional Home Mission policy like that of Foreign Missions, strong and aggressive, whereby the whole Church will evangelize the entire land. Conference Boards of Missions co-ordinated with the General Boards making a unit of administration, will enable the strong churches and Conferences to bear the burdens of the weak in doing mission work. A general fund collected from a per cent of the Domestic Mission money raised by Annual Conferences and administered by a Central Board, will insure a balancing of forces and a more uniform development of territory.

It is the business of the Church at large to evangelize every part of the country. Like the mystical body of Christ, Methodism is not one member, but many members. The little Illinois Conference beyond the border is as truly a part of the great Church as is a solid block of Middle Tennessee Methodism.

The membership of the whole Church is vitally related to the Home Mission work of every Conference. From the new and developing mission fields come a large per cent. of her annual increase, while unoccupied and partially developed territory are waste places, whose annual drainage materially cuts down the membership of the Church. With the present drift of the population, thousands of country Methodists are lost sight of in the great cities and in the Great West. Our loss is often the gain of sister denominations who occupy the field—often; alas! the great number do not identify themselves with any church.

Every Annual Conference in the connection has sent members into New Orleans, St. Louis, Baltimore, and San Francisco, and therefore can well afford to make liberal contributions for the intrenching of Methodism in these cities, if for no other reason than to conserve their own people.

Methodism has come into her kingdom for such a time as this. What Annual Conferences could not do by reason of their local situations a connectional church, can and will do. When the city of New Orleans and State of Louisiana could not cope with yellow fever, the U. S. Government stamped out the plague that walked in darkness and wasted at noon-day. When States and Territories in the West were prostrate in the embrace of the great desert, the Federal Government backed by millions, struck the shackles from their resources and converted the arid waste into garden spots of the world by establishing irrigation projects. When the nations of the earth had no faith to try, the U. S. Government dared to cross the purposes of God in separating two continents and uniting two oceans by digging the Isthmian Canal. Like the United States, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has a centralized government, with power to deliver on a given point. This power is now being delivered on the difficult Home Mission situations of the Gulfcoast, in the mountains of West Virginia, in southern Florida, State of Oklahoma and other points throughout the far West. The last General Conference awoke to the issues of the hour, put tremendous emphasis on Home evangelization and took the initial steps of a connectional Home Mission policy by creating the Home Department of the Board of Missions and charging a secretary with the responsibility of this work.

FOREIGN IMMIGRATION TO THE SOUTHERN STATES.

By Rev. B. F. Lewis.

One of the grave questions engaging the attention of the sociological and political economist for years is that of foreign immigration. Latterly it has been brought forcibly to the notice of others than specialists. Recently, the church, after carefully investigating the subject, has entered the field as a remedial agent. It would hardly be too strong to say—as a saving agent.

The questions involved are of tremendous import, striking at the existence of our most cherished institutions. These people come to our land every year by the hundreds of thousands, ignorant of our language, our customs, our laws, and often with the most perverted ideas of liberty, making the problem of aiding them most difficult. Congress could not stop foreign immigration, if it so desired, without serious international complications. The best it can do is to pass laws regulating the influx, debarring as far as possible the "undesirables." Remedial agents must then get in their work. These all have their origin in the Church of Jesus Christ.

Last year 782,870 aliens, of forty different nationalities, landed on our shores, the smallest number in several years. Of these, 112,148 were under 14 years of age, and only 40,051 were over 45 years of age. Of the 670,722 mature persons entering, 172,293 could neither read nor write, and 2310 could read but not write, showing that 26 per cent of these alien immigrants were illiterates.

Of the 783,000 aliens entering the United States last year, 14,904 came through our gulf ports of entry, as follows: Galveston 8529, New Orleans 6270, Mobile 97, Gulfport 8. In addition to these registering, stowaways were found as follows: New Orleans 26, Galveston 18, Mobile and Gulfport 1 each, total 46—a grand total of 14,950. Supposing the same proportion of children to be maintained, two thousand of these were children. These people landed at our gates, passed our doors under the shadows of our churches, and breathed our atmosphere pregnant with eternal possibilities. What impression was made on them for America, American institutions and American Christianity, time only will tell. But time will tell. What impression will be made on those coming, we can and should control.

Another fact more seriously affecting us is, that last year 18,130 foreigners settled in the four States having ports of entry on the gulf, as follows: Texas 10,128, Louisiana 5804, Alabama 1774, Mississippi 424. During the month of May this year, aliens settled in these States as follows: Texas 72, Louisiana 62, Alabama 15, Mississippi 14, these in addition to those already here. They have come to stay. This is home. Soon they will ask for citizenship, and our lax naturalization laws will give it to them. Then they can vote, and each alien vote will count as much as that of the native born American who loves his country, her history, her legends and her institutions.

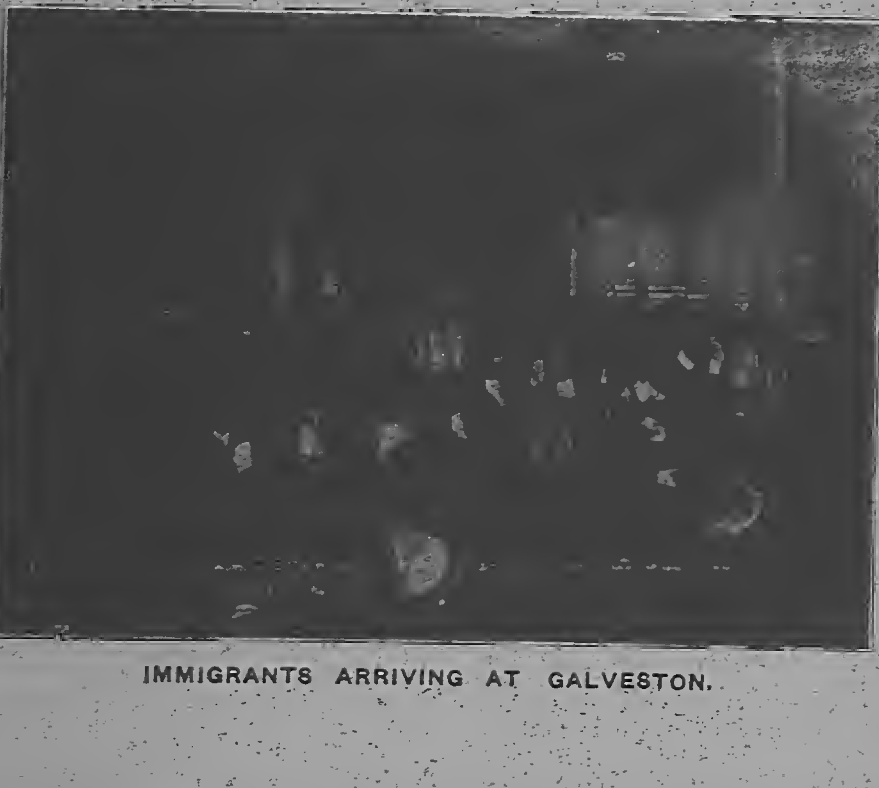
But another factor entering into this problem not to be overlooked, is deserting seamen. Last year 1659 alien seamen deserted at our gulf ports, as follows: New Orleans 782, Gulfport 393, Galveston 264, Mobile 220. While no doubt many of these reshipped, a reasonable percentage deserted to remain in this country, are scattered among us, and must be reckoned with in considering this problem.

What is the effect of this people among us? I have space to mention but one fact, and that in but two of its phases.

It has been demonstrated that the foreign population of our land is 50 per cent more lawless than our native white population; that the sons of the alien are twice as lawless as their fathers, and three times as lawless as the native whites. Criminologists have announced that there are 100,000 criminals in confinement in the United States, costing this government $200,000,000 per annum. The lowest estimate yet submitted is, that there are five times as many criminals at large as in confinement, costing the country $400,000,000 per annum. This is a total of 600,000 criminals, costing us the enormous sum of $600,000,000 per annum, the largest item in our financial budget save our military in time of war. But this financial exhibit is the smallest item in the original budget with which we have to deal. Crime wages a ceaseless war against all law, all property, society, everything, in short, that we hold dear. All depends upon what holds crime in check. If crime ever gains the ascendancy, we are as certainly doomed as were the empires of the past, and as are some of the present. The differentiating feature in favor of America is the vitalizing and regenerative agency of the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ. If this regenerative agency is not effectively applied to our alien population we can but faintly prophecy the future.

But, again, in spite of the almost irresistible onward march of prohibition, there are yet thousands of licensed saloons in our land. The United States statistics show that four-fifths of the saloon-keepers are of "immediate foreign parentage, and a good part of the remaining fifth are unquestionably of the same stock." These saloons are found only in our cities now, and herculean efforts are being made by the distillers to entrench them there. In most of these cities they hold the balance of power. Dr. Josiah Strong, an authority on such questions, has shown that if the present growth of our cities continues, within the next thirty years there will be 21,000,000 more people in our cities than will be found in the rural sections. Then the cities will "snap their fingers at the country," and do as they please. When this comes to pass—the cities in control of the country, the saloon in control of the city, and the foreigner in control of the saloon; again we can faintly prophecy the future. Cato was wont to close all his speeches with the ringing sentence, "Rome must destroy Carthage, or Carthage will destroy Rome." So "we must Christianize these aliens, or the aliens will heathenize us."

How shall we do it? We are working in the right direction now, but we need more momentum. We need to realize that these problems are not merely national problems, not State problems—they are community and individual problems as well. At Galveston the Woman's Home Mission Society has opened an immigration home and seamen's bethel. This home has been open only a little over a year, yet has housed and aided over 4000 immigrants and seamen. The Sailor's Rest at Gulfport has been opened only nine months, yet has provided a home for hundreds of men far from family and friends. The St. Marks Hall, in New Orleans, opened within the past twelve months, has reached and impressed hundreds of foreigners in that cosmopolitan city. The work recently reopened at Biloxi, is dealing with a tragic situation there. But we need more of this kind of work, and must have it to save the day.



IMMIGRANTS ARRIVING AT GALVESTON.

OUR OBLIGATION AS CHRISTIANS TO THE STRANGERS WITHIN OUR GATES.

By Rev. A. F. Watkins, D.D.

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Whatever the interpretation that in the past the Church may have put upon this gracious statement, it is to-day the inspiration to, and the expression of, the "world-wide vision." The eye of the Church is fixed upon the farthest man. Standing upon the mountain-top, it has "lifted up its eyes," and, across the continents and seas, marks the humblest, the lowliest, the most degraded, man, and says: "He also is the object of divine love, the subject of divine redemption, and we must carry the glad tidings even to him." And this is well: "for God so loved the world that whosoever believeth should have everlasting life." The growing sense of its responsibility for the immediate proclamation of the Gospel in the remotest limits of human habitation is the most notable and inspiring fact in the activities of the modern Church.

But is it not possible that with our eyes upon the "sky-line," we have failed to see the things that lie at our feet?

Filled with concern for the Chinese in China, the Japanese in Japan, the Koreans in Korea, the Italians in Italy, the Mexicans in Mexico, the Negro in Africa, have we not overlooked the Chinese, the Japanese, the Koreans, the Italian, the Mexican, the Negro, in America—at our doors—in our homes?

If this is true, in whole, or in part, is not our oversight the very essence of unwisdom, since these who have come to our land, surrounded by the influences of our Christian civilization and standing upon our very thresholds, are more easily accessible to the preaching of the Gospel than their fellows across the seas and saturated with the very life of their pagan or heathen faith? Nay, must it not be well-nigh fatal to our success, since it reflects upon the single-mindedness of our purpose and convicts us of using methods unworthy of success, when we hurry to the west coast of Africa to evangelize a Guinea Negro and leave to his fate another Guinea Negro working in our cotton patch, or pour out money like water to convert a Chinaman in Changchow while we look askance at the almond-eyed Celestial who washes our clothes.

If our Lord really purposes the evangelization of the nations, what more reasonable than that he should do two things: (1) send the message to them, borne on the lips and lived in the lives of his chosen witnesses, to whom he has said: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature;" and, (2) bring great masses of these nations into the closest contact with his people in the home lands of the Christian Church?

If the Church earnestly desires the evangelization of the nations, what more reasonable than that it should do two things: (1) send out the witnesses from among its bravest and its best, that they may tell the story in the very fastnesses of superstition and ignorance; and, (2) welcome with holy zeal those who come among us, and with devotion unexcelled bring them to a saving knowledge of our Lord?

Alas, that with our provincial narrowness and unchristian prejudice, we should protest against their coming or deplore their presence, fearful lest they rob our children of their heritage and overthrow our civil and religious liberties. There is a peril in their coming, a menace in their presence; but it is a peril that lies in us rather than in them. The peril is that the Christian Church in America should, in its folly and blindness, fail of doing its duty to God and the nations.

If the heritage of our children be lost and the liberties of our people be overturned, it will be, not because of the coming of the alien, but because the Church of the living God is disloyal to its Lord and unmindful of the high vocation whereunto it has been called. Jesus Christ is the author of our liberties and the giver of the heritage of our children. There need be no fears for our children or the institutions of our country, if only the Church of Christ be willing in the day of his power. It is not for naught that God placed the nations of the earth in the hands of the people of highest Christian enlightenment and zeal, nor that there are flocking to the shores of Christian America the hordes of the Occident and the Orient. Their presence is the Church's glorious opportunity; their evangelization, the coming of millenium.

The race problem is the problem of human redemption. Its solution is the salvation of the races through the atoning blood of the Son of Man.

BIRDS-EYE VIEW OF BUSINESS SECTION OF NEW ORLEANS.

ENTRENCHING METHODISM IN THE CITIES.

By Rev. J. A. Rice, D.D.

I am asked to write an article on "Entrenching Methodism in the Cities." This refers, of course, to methods of approach to the modern city. Let it be understood at once that no method can take the place of life, the life of God actually in the souls of men. No amount of organization and equipment, no maneuvering is of any avail where the Spirit of God does not dominate everything. One of the most touching pictures of the impotence of the godforsaken soul in the Old Testament is Sampson's going out and shaking himself. He vainly thought by shaking himself to bring into action the power that, alas! had left him. It is pitiable to the last degree to see the church shaking herself as a substitute for the saving power of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Let it be understood also that the church's business is first of all evangelization and then edification. Our note is a divine one, our business is to present God to the human spirit. The old idea of the priest was that he was to carry men to God; the new, that he is to carry God to men. The question of the 18th century with reference to Christianity was "Can it be made to square with the human reason?" The question of the 19th was, "Can it be made to square with the results of scientific research?" The question of the 20th is, "How can it be made useful?" We are not so much concerned with defending the faith as with using the faith. The faith will defend itself if we use it right.

There are those who think that Christianity has to do only with the individual's relation to God. We are feeling more and more that there is no Christianity until the third party is brought in and relations established with him. The dominant note is social rather than individualistic. There can be no flow of life without contact. The best things are "caught and not taught," and the only way to get that contact is to go to the outsider; he will not come to us. The great commission knows no geography. We are to go, not simply over the sea, but across the street and down the alley, and up the boulevards and through the parks, and into the dens of vice and marts of trade and industry; into the palaces of the richest and the tenements of the poorest. We are to go and not wait for the crowd to come. How shall we do it?

(1) First of all, we are hampered by the four years' limit. No man who has any great reserve power can mobilize the forces and direct the energies of a city church so as to call out that power and accomplish permanent results in that time. Indeed, men of vision cannot even enterprise work of far-reaching importance, especially such work as involves new methods, when they know that they will have to move before their plans are worked out. Only small men with meager resources can deliver their whole message and complete their work in the throbbing life of a great city in a single quadrennium.

(2) And only strong men with vision, and the courage of that vision, will be heard above the din and strife of the modern city. Men who get their message fresh from God; who have a powerful hold not only upon vital spiritual truth, but upon God as the only and sufficient source of personal and social salvation; men thoroughly familiar with the great currents of modern thought, sympathetic with the modern man's viewpoint, open on one side to the perpetual inflow of the enlivening Spirit of God, and on the other to the overflow and outflow of that Spirit into the personal and social vacuums around them; men who are leaders, not only in the thought, but in the activities of our complex civilization—these, and these alone, will be able under God to command the city. And the work of these will have to be re-enforced by deaconesses and other trained workers in large numbers. In our approach to the city the deaconess is going to be more and more an indispensable factor.

(3) The spirit of unity and co-operation must prevail henceforth more than hitherto, not only within the individual churches, but in the relations of the churches to each other. Our Methodism must be one—so intensely one that the smallest failure of the weakest church in the community must be felt by every other. Some years ago I was going through a cotton factory and noticed a series of reels, each of which was winding 642 threads around itself. While I was looking at one of the machines a tiny thread snapped and instantly the whole machine stopped. Every one of the other 641 threads seemed to say: "Our fellow has fallen, and we will not move till he is given back his place among us." So delicate are our church relations that each one should feel the weal or woe of the other. The spectacle of a group of Methodist churches in the city at each other's throats is not only pitiable, but contemptible, and any pastor who would foster such a spirit thereby declares himself unfit for the service, and should be removed. Paul's figure of the body of Christ holds here as well as in the larger conception of the kingdom. What affects one member affects all, and there should be no more competition than there is between hands and feet.

(4) In order to unify the interests and efforts of Methodism in the city it is necessary to have some sort of organization, some kind of central board, that shall have more or less control over the situation. The present City Mission Board is doing a great work at this point; but why should the church put upon our women the sole responsibility for all our social efforts? Why not saddle a part at least of that responsibility upon the men also? The City Mission Board has shown that organized work is practicable and desirable—why not go further and organize a central board of control, composed of men and women? Let them do such things as the City Mission Board now does, but give them large additional powers. Let them determine where new work shall be opened and what kind of work. Let them say when and where new churches shall be built. We are wasting our energies in some cities by putting our churches so close together as to be in each other's way. Let them vise the plans and specifications for church buildings. Give them power to prevent architectural botches and blunders. Put into their hands the direction of city mission work in all of its stages and make them a general committee of ways and means. But even this board would not be able to grapple with the tremendous problems of the city alone. The time has come, it seems to me, when the machinery of the whole Church must be put behind our home mission work. It ought to be possible to combine all our forces in one great board, composed of men and women. The unparalleled skill our women have evinced in managing home mission problems shows what could be done if their work and that of the Church Extension Board and the Home Mission Department of the Parent Board should all be united under masterful leadership in a unified approach to our cities. This general board should be provided with ample means and should co-operate with local city boards. The organization should be reduced to the last degree of simplicity, but so directed as to deliver the whole power of the whole connection upon any city at a time.

(5.) There should be in every city so far as possible, a great commanding central plant, where such institutional features as may be needed can be worked out and applied. There should be connected with it a Deaconess' Home. It should be so related to the life of the city as to be of the greatest possible service to the largest possible number of people. Work similar to that now done by the Young Women's Christian Association could be carried on there. Thousands of working girls are going down yearly under the temptations of the cheap boarding houses, and for lack of proper home conditions. My heart has been made to bleed many a time as I have gone into these unattractive places and breathed the befouling atmosphere there. Surely the Church has a mission to young girls orphaned from home, friendless, and struggling alone for daily bread. There might be separate apartments for each race where there are foreigners. But I will not go into details.

(6.) A couple of years ago, feeling keenly the call of the great outside, and restless under the limitations of my regular work, I rented a house in a mill district of New Orleans and opened club work there. I had no idea what would come of it. It seemed to me that if a score of young people could be gotten there and the religion and culture of the Church brought into touch with their lives it would be worth while. This Church is made up almost entirely of cultured people that have very little contact with the factory element, and this is the case in many of our churches. We can't bring the masses to them. Indeed we have been running away from the masses for ten years or more, moving out from where the masses are, and have no right to expect that they will follow. Yet, if we are to give them the advantages of our culture and religious experience we must somehow get in touch with them. "The secret of power is nearness." How shall we get to them? We cannot reach the Gospel to them across yawning, social chasm. They do not want alms, they want friends. The little dirty missions are neither respected nor respectable. How can we get the children who are becoming the men and women of to-morrow? Our experience with these clubs have suggested a means of contact with the boys and girls of the street. We have had this year one hundred and seventy on our roll. Some half a hundred of our best people have helped in this club work. It was the success of these clubs that prompted me to write to Dr. Nelson, proposing that he furnish an Italian and that we open work at once among foreigners. Here again, we were astonished at the results. Right under the shadow of the great St. Louis Cathedral, in that part of the city which is interlocked with Catholic Churches, monasteries, convents, nunneries, where mediavelism reigns absolutely, in a stone's throw of the administrative center of Catholicism, we were able to get together as many as a hundred and fifty Italians at a single meeting. In two months after the first meeting, which consisted of two people, we had touch with a fair per cent. of the Italian colony. All this has shown me that we can get to the great outside through some method of social service. I haven't the least doubt that if we could ring the crescent of New Orleans with well-appointed centers under the control of a sufficient number of trained workers we could in a few months be in touch with thousands of young people that will never otherwise come within sound of a Methodist note. St. Mark's Hall which is the outcome of the work opened by Dr. Nelson and myself, ministered to twenty-five hundred attendants during the month of July just closed. These are all people that Methodism would never have reached. There is room in New Orleans alone for fifty such centers. If a military man were to undertake to storm the city he would at least study every possible approach and occupy every strategic point. Should the church do less? By opening up night schools, social, economic, and industrial clubs, all connected with a great central institution, and each church having one under its special care, Methodism can make herself felt in a short time in any city on the planet. Think what it would mean to the future if the boys and girls of the street, to whom the sweetest ministries of religion never go, could be touched every night in the week by trained workers filled with the Spirit of the Master!

(7.) These clubs would touch the souls that make up the slums and that furnish the "down-and-outs," at the beginning of their career, and would preach effectively the Gospel of prevention. But in spite of all Christian effort society will cast off "many a fragment as rubbish to the void." Shall the Church not go after these also? Is there really no Gospel for the socially lost? Shall the Church confine her efforts to a small per cent. of the respectable? Her greatest service is in saving men and women before they are lost. Has she no commission to gather up the fragments also? The Salvation Army seems to be doing the work that was first committed to Methodism. We can never claim that we are entrenched in any great city where we have no ministry to the "down-and-outs."

(8.) There is yet another class to whom the Master is never carried, namely, the churchless rich. The story of early Methodism reads like that of Apostolic times in no respect more than in the fact that the center of many a church was in the home of the well-to-do, and many of these had been anything but religious. Is there no way to get into such homes now? It seems to me that the growing interest in modern Bible study may yet open many of these doors to us. A live, scholarly preacher who has been in a community long enough to have an extended acquaintance and a vitalizing influence might be able after a while to approach the Bible on the literary side and organize clear outside of his flock centers of Bible study and make them so vital as to attract many who have no interest in the forms of religion. The Bible is nothing, if not a Book of Life, quivering with the pulsating passion of the infinitely divine, in touch with the infinitely human. Many people do not read it because they have not a vital approach to it. Is it expecting too much that the future will see the churchless element in society interested as never before in this greatest of all Books of religion? When I was in Montgomery, Ala., I had a class of twenty, mostly non-Methodist and non-churchmen, who spent a part of one afternoon every week through an entire winter in my study, reading together the Old Testament. I was able through this class to get to a few of the great outside, and what was done in Montgomery can be done anywhere. I should like to see an effort made to organize such classes among the intelligent people entirely outside the Church. For who that ever once comes under the spell of this matchless Book can ever entirely escape its thraldom?

(9.) And larger use can be made of the Sunday School, particularly of the extension features. Some years ago workers in my church went regularly to the fire engine houses, street car barns, and other places where idle men congregated and went over the Sunday School lesson with them. Much can be done in this way, and a great deal more can be done to bring children into the Sunday School. We now have here in Rayne, Jews and Catholics. Last year while visiting the Sunday School scholars, I found a group of our children whose father was a Jew and mother a Catholic. I took the oldest of them into the church shortly afterwards. Some people are willing for their children to go to Sunday School to get rid of them during that morning, and others, not themselves interested in religion, do not object to their going where they can learn something and be associated with good people. We can command thousands in childhood who will never afterwards cross our threshold. Of course, we need a thorough equipment, up-to-date in every respect.

(10.) We can never entrench Methodism in the cities without properly appointed plants. Some situations cannot be met without the architectural appeal. Methodism has not yet made, except in a few places, adequate use of the esthetic. Art in all of its forms, if suffused with religious emotion, has a telling message. It would be absurd for us to build a log cabin on St. Charles Ave. New Orleans, and expect people to respect us as a denomination. It would be equally absurd to put up a gorgeous building on the river front. Not only the architecture, but the finishings and furnishings as well as the type of service must be such as to make cultured people feel at home if we are to hold them. In some churches the music ought to be to the highest degree artistic, but always deeply religious. It's a sad day for Methodism when our young people of wealth have to go elsewhere to find congenial surroundings and to feel the esthetic appeal of religion. So that the adaptation of the plant and its appointments to the particular needs of each location is a necessary part of an indispensable equipment for the city.

(11.) But when all has been said about our entrenchments the fact remains that thousands of by-standers will not be attracted. Is there no other way by which they can be reached? Have we nothing to say to the tens of thousands that throng our parks, boulevardes, and streets on Sundays, fill the cheap theatres, and never hear a Gospel message? I should like to see an organized campaign in every city every summer in an effort to reach by street preaching or by some other means not now used the religiously-unemployed and uninterested.

I am fully aware that some of these items will be regarded as impractical and visionary. That may be, but if we do not look ahead of where we now are and see the invisible so clearly as to move toward the impossible heroically, how shall we ever advance? And not a single item here, sketched is much more than what Mr. Wesley actually accomplished. Present-day Methodism will go a long way yet before even our leaders dare to undertake many things that were commonplaces to him. Let us have, at any cost, and by any means, a genuine revival of Wesleyan faith, Wesleyan experiences, Wesleyan courage, Wesleyan vision, Wesleyan industry, and, above all, of the Wesleyan spirit. Then, and then alone, will Methodism be permanently entrenched in the cities.

PHASES OF MISSIONARY WORK IN NEW ORLEANS.

By the Assistant Editor.

Recently, for a reason in itself amply sufficient, the Methodist Churches of the city held a union service. One who studied the audience closely, concluded that the time had forever past when a real union service could be held in the city of New Orleans. The pastors and a few members from each church helped to swell the congregation of the church in which the service was held, until to the careless observer, it was a great service. As a matter of fact, it meant that nine-tenths of the several congregations were either deprived of attendance upon the house of God, or else worshiped with other denominations. The reason is not far to find; New Orleans is too large a city to be able to bring all its people together.

No more can any one enterprise, nor any one type of church life cover the varied and complex problems and differing communities of this great city. In First Church is found the great down-town church. It is handsomely built and to a limited extent equipped. It has the difficult task of reaching the passing strangers, who tarry in the city but for a few days, and who may bear its message of life to the ends of the earth; it must find and interest the multitudes, who are lost to home life, and to some extent to church life, in the boarding house district; and at the same time hold a deep enough bond upon substantial Christian people of the city, that they will retain their membership, no matter to what part of the city they move and provide the means to carry on the work of the church. Withal it must bind these diverse elements into one. Its work must ultimately develop many "institutional" features.

REV. MARTIN HEBERT,
Superintendent of French Missions in Louisiana.

Rayne Memorial represents another fine type of church, one that has been well called the "family church." Its problems are such as are common to all churches situated in the midst of homes. The only particulars in which there are any special features about the New Orleans problem, lies in the temperament of the city, which makes it so easy for the stranger to be lost track of, and that makes both pastor and people take it for granted, that all strangers are confirmed in "Romanism" and the added fact that the rapid growth of the city, has outstripped the growth of Methodism.

In every city, it has been common for the older churches to enterprise Sunday Schools in new neighborhoods. After a time a limited amount of preaching would be provided by local or supernumery preachers. When it became at all possible, some young man would be honored with the glory of a city charge, and a close shave from starvation with this fledgling church. At length would come the era of genuine self-support, when the experienced preachers would be sought and the church would begin to come into its own. Every detail of this process may be seen in New Orleans; from the Sunday School to the church which aspires for the leading position. These churches have mostly developed along the lines of the so-called family churches.

A great city lies below Canal Street, and there is much about it, that makes it seem more than a few blocks distant from the resident sections lying farther up town. In this city of upwards of 150,000 people, Methodism, until recently, had but one church and that one not very strong. Now the General Mission Board has established a settlement home, that is intended to become an institutional church, when the time is ripe for it, and the proper auditorium can be secured. As this work is treated in a special article in this issue, we refer you to the able things written there for the great things it is doing. It is handling one distinctive phase of missionary work, that we are beginning anew, the effort to reach the strangers within our gates. The great incoming throngs, the moving nations are upon us, and we must win them for Christ, and lofty conceptions of his service, or our cizilization and our Christian ideals must suffer.

One other great phase of organized effort we are bordering upon, the effort to reach a factory town. The Mary Werlein Mission is situated in a section of the city, where in easy walking distance there are eighteen factories, employing a very large number of women and children. Besides these a great host of men work in this section. A startlingly large percentage of this vast throng live in walking distance of these factories. In this territory is the Kingsly House, purely a social settlement, doing a great work, but on some of the lines of the Hull House in Chicago. The work is so broad that Jew and Gentile, Protestant and Catholic find no trouble in uniting in it. Methodism feels that it has a distinctive message to deliver and work to do. The Mary Werlein Mission is practically a settlement in the midst of this territory, inadequately equipped for its task. It has a number of consecrated workers, and the results of its work are almost incalculable. If all the Christians who have found Christ in this mission, and all whose lives have been quickened to effective service were assembled in one place, they would be a great throng. The point which the church has been slow to realize, is that this charge has a distinctive work to do, that cannot be done for this section of the city by any church or mission, situated anywhere else. The lines of work that bring success in a typical factory town, will produce like results here. The especial complication, lies in the relics of past glories. There are no worse rookeries than some old mansion whose glories have departed, and whose architecture has been perverted to uses for which it never was intended. Some of these factory workers live in homes far less sanitary than the cave dwellers of old.

This church needs the full time of an experienced pastor, who perhaps should be a man especially trained for this work. By using the resources already available, it is possible that the additional expenditure needed would produce larger results than a like sum spent in any other way in this city. Be it as it may, the time is rapidly approaching for superior quality, uniform excellence and all-around goodness. It is giving satisfaction everywhere. In one week recently we received four orders for solid carloads of this coffee—30,000 lbs each. In one day the sum total of the order amounted to 92325 lbs. LUZIANNE COFFEE.

when there must be a forward movement, both in the time that some consecrated men shall give to this section of the city, and in the equipment with which the Master's servants shall work. The work for this section of the city must be done there, and cannot be done anywhere else. We must maintain the present work and develop it into larger things than many now dream of, or we must abandon the work we are doing there. It is not a day to look back, but to lay plans for larger things.

These are some phases of the work we are doing in this great city, in no line of which are we beginning to measure up to the tasks before us. In all of which this city needs help from the great Church, which should endeavor to make this one of its strongholds.

Some phases of needed work are as yet practically untouched. We need, as Methodists, to plan and provide for the throngs which come to this nation, seeking refuge and homes. We need to make distinctive plans for the immigrants.

We have no distinctively slum work. The Mary Werlein is not a slum mission; it is rather a church with the problem of the factory town resting upon it, and this problem complicated by the difficulties of a great city.

We need to provide a door of hope, through which fallen women may find their way back into respectable life, and gain some hope of the life eternal. In addition to the work that others are doing, there is room for a Methodist Helping Hand Mission on behalf of the unemployed.

And, finally, we need some agency through which the united Methodism of the city can act, and through which it can project its concentrated strength and wisdom upon one project, and carry that through successfully, and then lay as definite plans for the next task.

WOMAN'S BOARD OF CITY MISSIONS.

By Mrs. John B. Parker.

The first recorded effort of an organized attempt by the Methodist women of New Orleans to meet the responsibilities and opportunities in the evangelization of the ctiy, is found in 1896. Realizing that changing economic conditions were forcing many girls from the country to leave the shelter of their homes to seek employment in the city and that the meager salaries received made it difficult, if not impossible to secure a comfortable room, and wholesome board in a decent neighborhood, a plan was projected to open a boarding home for working women. In furtherance of this object each Auxiliary was invited to send delegates to form a board of managers. The first meeting was held in Carondelet Street Church, and Mrs. W. W. Carre was made permanent chairman. A house was rented and comfortably furnished, but the working girls, suspicious of charity, and jealous of their independence failed to give it sufficient support to justify its continuance after the first year. As a home for working women the scheme was a failure, but inasmuch as it brought into closer personal touch the women of the various Methodist Churches, and was the beginning of that correlation of forces which afterwards became known as the Woman's Board of City Missions, it was an unqualified success. In January, 1894, an Industrial School had been organized on Tchoupitoulas Street. This work was conducted in an old-time warehouse that had recently served as a saloon, in one of the most vicious and depraved neighborhoods of the entire city. This strip of territory, which is known as the Irish Channel, is a district of factories, mills, workshops, laundries, sailor's boarding houses, and grog-shops. The houses are are ill-ventilated and unsanitary, saloons are numerous and at the time the mission was started the neighborhood was terrorized by a body of law-breakers, known as the "Shot-Tower Gang." No field more deeply in need of mission work could have been found. In six months the work had become so important that at a District Meeting of the New Orleans Auxiliaries of the Home Mission Society it was decided to engage a city missionary, and Miss Susie Burbank consented to undertake the work. She co-operated with Mr. Hatley Harriso[illegible] superintendent of the mission, and so successful [illegible] their work that in another year, at the earnest solicitation of the Home Mission Society, Dr. J[illegible] Sawyer, P. E., organized a church from the [illegible]on converts, and Rev. J. M. Henry was appointed pastor. The same year through the courtesy of Dr. Black, the editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, one issue of the paper was edited by the Woman's Home Mission Society and the proceeds made the nucleus of a fund for a permanent house of worship for the Tchoupitoulas Mission. After closing the boarding home for working women the board of managers decided to concentrate their energies on the Tchoupitoulas Mission. They undertook to raise the rent of the building and the salary of the city missionary, and also assumed supervision of the work which was being done under the auspices of the society in Gouldsboro and Gretna. Through the generosity of Mrs. Christian Keener, Miss Mabel Fuller served the board for several years as a missionary in these towns, laboring zealously. The church at Gouldsboro is in a large measure due to her efforts. In 1897 Miss Burbank resigned and Mrs. Lillie Meekins was appointed in her place, and for twelve years she has most acceptably served the board. Although not a trained worker in the modern acceptance of the term, her life is wholly consecrated and is spent in ministering to the poor and needy. Day by day,

> "In haunts of wretchedness and need,

she brings the glad tidings of Jesus—redemption and release. In the spring of 1900 the board co-operated with the Board of Church Extension in the purchase of the building 1026 Tchoupitoulas street, for mission purposes. The City Mission Board paid about two-thirds of the purchase-price, as well as the cost of repairs. In recognition of the valuable and untiring service of Miss Mary Werlein during the early days of the work, the name of the Mission was changed to Mary Werlein Mission. A large room on the lower floor served the purpose for church meetings and schools. Pleasant rooms up stairs were set aside for the missionary and her family, while the rent of other rooms brought in an income to help pay expenses. The work grew steadily; Mrs. Meekins and her volunteer-assistants spent many hours each week visiting the sick, holding cottage meetings, giving practical messages from the Word, or helpful talks, such as one woman can give another; food and medicine were furnished the sick and hungry, garments given to the needy, though later on it was found more practical to sell the garments at a nominal figure, except in cases of extreme poverty. Many were the discouragements encountered. Some years yellow fever thinned the ranks of the workers, while making the needs greater. Times of financial depression threw many out of employment, just at the time it was most difficult to relieve them. Yet in spite of all difficulties and discouragements the work grew steadily and the Mary Werlein Mission is now a thriving little church. Too much credit cannot be given to Mrs. Meekins. The touch of the life of this strong Christian woman upon the lives of those around her can never be measured. The purification and social uplift in this center of work is largely due to her efforts. In 1907, Mrs. W. W. Carre, who has been president of the Board since its organization planned a large industrial work for the Board. At her request the Board was given the use of the basement of the new First Church, which was planned for institutional work, but feeling that the work as outlined required the leadership of a trained worker and a larger equipment than the Board could afford, Mrs. Carre attended the meeting of the General Board of Home Missions and secured the services of Miss Ethel Jackson, deaconess, and a donation of $600. Under the supervision of Miss Jackson, industrial schools and boy's clubs were conducted in First Church. About this time the Church at large seemed to awake to the importance of mission work in New Orleans. Not only was there a large foreign population practically without Protestant influence, but immigrants were arriving at the rate of many thousands a year. Moreover with the opening of the Panama Canal, New Orleans must assume a strategic importance that could not be overlooked. To meet this growing demand the joint commission of the Home Mission, and Church Extension Board, and the Woman's Board of Home Missions decided to start work on a large scale. Two adjoining buildings on Esplanade Avenue were rented and equipped for sewing and cooking schools, boys and girls clubs, free baths, games, stereopticon lectures, a free clinic, and all the features of a modern mission in a large city. Rev. N. E. Joyner was sent as superintendent. Miss Margaret Ragland, head resident; Miss Daisy Duncan, district nurse, and Miss Alberta Keithly, house mother. The enterprise was christened St. Mark's Hall, and the City Mission Board transferred its schools from First Church, but still maintains the work at Mary Werlein Mission. It is the special province of the Board to furnish and repair the building, to provide teachers and supplies for the schools, to keep up a well-stocked linen closet for the use of the district nurse, and in every possible way co-operate with the superintendent. It is only a few months since St. Mark's Hall was opened, but there is great promise of successful work to be accomplished and the Woman's Board of City Missions is rejoicing in this new movement for the city's evangelization.

REV. N. E. JOYNER,
Superintendent of St. Mark's Hall, New Orleans, La.

ST. MARK'S HALL.

By Rev. N. E. Joyner.

St. Mark's Hall is an innovation in our Church activities. It is the expression of a conviction that has in recent years been forcing itself upon the leaders of our Church, a conviction that the concerted strength of the entire Church must be brought to bear on the city problem. In 1907 a movement was begun in New Orleans to secure the aid of the General Boards of the Church in behalf of the weaker congregations of the city. The following year a joint commission was appointed, representing the Board of Missions, the Church Extension and the Woman's Home Mission Society, to have charge of all Gulfcoast mission work, including Galveston, New Orleans and points in Mississippi. A special committee visited New Orleans, considered the field carefully and recommended the establishment of a city mission to be jointly controlled and supported by the Boards represented.

An old, double, three-story, brick dwelling was rented in the heart of what is known as the "downtown" section and in touch with the Italian colony. The building was named St. Mark's Hall, for much the same reason that many other churches and missions have been named for saintly people, living or dead. Two deaconesses, a house-keeper and her assistant were assigned to St. Mark's, and at the request of the commission the writer was appointed superintendent by Bishop Seth Ward. Extensive repairs and the installation of necessary equipment caused delay. We were not able to occupy the building until March, when the residents took possession.

An Italian mission already begun was invited to the Hall for its club work and devotional meetings. March the 20th, a sewing school was opened for the children of the neighborhood. The 29th of the month a night school was inaugurated for foreigners who wish to speak and write English. On May the 7th, a boy's club work was begun, one of the boys making with water colors a large display-card announcing the meeting for organization. The yard, paved in an irregular way with flag stones and surrounded on three sides by the building and on the fourth by a high wall, became a play-ground and gymnasium and, on ocasion, an outdoor auditorium, a large awning being used to screen it. A double front room was admirably adapted for the purpose of parlor and reading room, while a smaller room to the rear was set aside for the exclusive use of the men's club.

As the opportunity afforded, music and fancy-work classes were organized, and during the hot summer months the girl's club took the place of the sewing school.

An important feature is the work done by the nurse-deaconess. At first she confined her efforts to visiting and carrying patients to hospital or dispensary, as was needed, and arranging rooms in the Hall for dispensary work. We now have a free clinic three times a week for women and children, with a competent physician in charge. A druggist in the neighborhood has very kindly offered to fill all prescriptions at reduced rates.

The rapidly-rising temperature of the early summer made evident the need of better bathing facilities. It was impossible to accommodate the increasing throngs of children with a couple of bath tubs. So shower baths were provided with suitable dressing rooms. The patronage has amply justified the wisdom of this step. The only problem has been the boys who wanted to bathe three times the day the showers were opened. Their enthusiasm does not seem to wane.

From time to time we have had lectures, socials and other gatherings for the people of the various departments. A lecture under the auspices of the Anti-Tuberculosis League drew an audience of 150, the limit of the capacity of our out-door audience room. Sunday evening we have a religious service, when in addition to songs, Scripture lesson and prayer we have a stereopticon and social feature. We use both English and Italian in this service, but the audience is composed principally of Italians.

The average attendance is between fifty and seventy-five, men predominating.

In every way the success of this venture, St. Mark's Hall, has been remarkable. The first four months showed seventy-five enrolled in the night school. Ninety-six in the sewing school, thirty-five in the men's club, more than 400 in all the departments, and a total attendance, or total number of visits made to the Hall, of 5421. Nor does this include nearly 500 visits made by the nurse-deaconess and other residents to the families of the neighborhood. The work already done, however, is only a part of what is included in the opening of St. Mark's Hall. Many other features will be added as we have opportunity, especially of an evangelistic type. The field is broad and ripe unto the harvest. An employment bureau, a wood-yard where needy men could be given work and temporary relief looking to permanent help, popular Sunday evening services and many other things could be undertaken at once but for lack of funds. Plans are already taking shape for a summer camp next year, and a lady has offered us a fine two-story building at the Seashore Camp Grounds. Our present quarters were leased for two years beginning January, 1909. We need much larger and better equipped buildings. For the Sunday evening evangelistic services, we ought to have a commodious and well located auditorium.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR THE GOSPEL AMONG OUR FRENCH NEIGHBORS.

By Rev. W. Winans Drake.

It is time for Louisiana Methodism to ask in a thoroughly earnest and practical way, "Who is my neighbor?" Judged by our missionary work and investments, our answer to this question has been defective where it ought to have been most emphatic. If we will study the map of Louisiana, which is peculiarly the territory committed to our charge, we will find that the Southwestern half of the State contains as an influential, if not the predominant element of its population, an interesting people of French descent and speech, for whose evangelization we have, up to this time, done almost nothing. Roughly speaking, this French element constitutes nearly one-third of our entire population. Outside the city of New Orleans, which is largely French, there are about eighteen parishes, with a population of over 300,000 in which the French are in a large majority, and in some, almost the only inhabitants. In seven or eight other parishes, with a population of 250,000 there is a large proportion of French people, though probably not a majority. In several of these parishes, there is no Methodist Church, and perhaps no Protestant Church of any kind. In several others, Protestantism is represented by one or two churches, Episcopal, Presbyterian, or Methodist, in the chief town of the parish. These people are not foreigners but descendants of the earliest settlers of Louisiana. In their veins flows the blood of men who have won distinction in the history of Louisiana, in peace and war. In every sense of the word they are our neighbors.

If we are to determine our duty as neighbors by the spirit of the good Samaritan our relation to them is further emphasized by their religious needs, and accessibility. While they are nominally and traditionally Roman Catholic, large numbers of them are not in practical touch with that Church, and hence are without any religious instruction of any sort. Often the extent of their connection with the church, particularly in the rural sections, is an annual visit on some special occasion, and an occasional call upon the priest to perform the rite of baptism, marriage or burial. Many have drifted away from any allegiance to the only form of religion of which they have any knowledge. Priest and Levite have passed by on the other side. There are many indications that these simple-hearted children of the Acadian settlers may be reached by our Gospel. Here and there in Southern Louisiana are devout and spiritual Christians in our churches, who are of this French people, were reared in the fold of Catholicism, but were converted through the regular ministrations of our established charges. In some sections, as in the Lacasine neighborhood in Calcasieu Parish, whole communities of French people have received our Gospel, and nowhere can be found more sincere and devout followers of our Lord according to Methodist teaching and experience. This community has not only given us our French missionary, Brother Hebert, but has started others into Christian work and missionary effort. Our French Mission work in St. Mary and Iberia Parishes, which has been operated with some intermissions for a number of years, has gathered some sheaves from this field, and proved that our Gospel is not powerless in the French tongue. In Terrebonne and Lafourche Parishes, where our work began a little more than two years ago, the starting-point was found in a company of people who had already drifted away from Catholicism and were ready to hear the Protestant message gladly. Within that time a church of about sixty-five members has been organized, a house of worship erected, and opportunities created for the preaching of the Word in neighboring communities. In the town of Houma, the center of that section, a church has been organized and is already showing signs of activity and promise. One church has been organized in Vermillion Parish, and one or two others are in process of formation. Within about two years, three or four new churches have been organized with about 125 members, with other communities gladly hearing our Gospel, through the efforts of our French Mission workers. From this new territory we have received at least one preacher who is now assisting in the work, by appointment of the Conference. These are only some of the indications that these neighbors of ours can be reached by the preaching of men who have caught the missionary vision and give themselves seriously to the evangelization of this people. In fact, they are probably more accessible to our preaching than are the Mexicans and Brazillians, to whom we are rightly sending some of our best men, and they are so near us that an additional obligation is present in their case.

THE FRENCH CONGREGATION, AT LYDIA, LA.

Another fact worth noting in a discussion of the opportunities of the Gospel among our French neighbors, is that the public schools, employing many Protestant teachers, and teaching the young people the English Language, are destroying the prejudice that has in the past, prevented many of these people from hearing the Gospel as preached by Protestants.

But we need not suppose that the French people are to be reached and saved by a mere temporary effort. The facts above cited merely show that they can be saved by the preaching of the Gospel just like other people. We must take hold of the problem of their evangelization in a large and adequate way. We must plant ourselves in the strategic centers of population in this French country, or we can hardly expect to win any permanent hold on the outlying rural people. We must lay our plans to occupy the thriving towns, such as Houma and Thibodaux, which are bound to have an increasing influx of Protestant people from outside.

In considering the opportunities offered by this promising field of labor, which we are just beginning to touch in an adequate way, it is worth while to remember the importance of this section of the State. This French section is perhaps the wealthiest, and politically, the most influential portion of Louisiana. So that, not only does the complete evangelization of our State demand that we assume the responsibility imposed by these opportunities; but if the ideals for which our Gospel stands are to control the life of Louisiana, they must leaven the section in which till now contrary ideals have had full sway.

INCIDENTS IN THE LIFE OF A FRENCH MISSIONARY.

By Rev. Martin Hebert, of the French Mission.

Under the above caption, we undertake to say a few words through the Advocate to its readers though what we have to say may not be in keeping with the heading.

We have hardly reached the point where the history of the French Mission can be written for it is still very much in its incipiency, and unless something can be done to more generally arouse the Church to the need of this special field, and of giving it more definite and permanent encouragement, it is in danger of remaining in the incipient stage for some time to come.

It is true that the history of the French Mission in a tentative and hap-hazard way, reaches back some thirty years, and over nine years of my eleven years of ministerial life has been spent in this field. Yet we are just now getting well started.

When I was read out for French Mission, from the Conference which met at Crowley, in 1898, where I was admitted on trial, I was very much elated, for though I was willing to go anywhere, I had asked to be sent to the French, and immediately upon receiving my appointment, I conferred not with flesh and blood, but started on my way to my new and first work.

I could then speak little French (having studied it but three months in school); I had about two sermons on very difficult themes, but I knew I loved God, and had a passionate desire to save the French.

There was not a great deal to report the first year. I think I had received two on profession of faith; we had built a neat little church at Lydia, where the most of my efforts had been directed, but the most notable achievements, as I look back upon it now, was the fact that during that year, I married the best woman in the world, and succeeded in paying living expenses and feeding a horse on the stupendous salary of two hundred and ten dollars. Probably for this or some other meanness; it was thought fit to remove me from the French Mission for two years. Since then, I have had but one appointment, and have become so accustomed to being read out to French Mission, that I would hardly know how to go anywhere else.

For the first five years I tried the intensive method of cultivation, which was good as far as it went, but it did not go far enough. Since thenIa have tried anything that would work.

Not quite three years ago, through a proveential opening and call, we began operations in Terrlatonne and LaFourche Parishes, since which we hate organized two churches, one of them having been organized this year by Rev. C. V. Briethaupt. We have built one commodious house of worship, and Brother Briethaupt has already above six hundred dollars subscribed toward the building of one in Houma.

I think the happiest day of my life, with probably one exception, was when after having labored about three months where our Bourg Church is now located, and where possibly a Protestant minister had never been seen before, I opened the doors of the church, and received sixty-four applicants.

Prior to that time, we had been talking and praying about openings. Since then it has been a question of how to evade those we could not fill. Since then, also, the Church at large and the Mission Boards in particular, have taken more interest in our work; the General Board having taken up my support, and the Home Board is partially providing for the support of two assistants.

Last Fall we were honored by a visit from Dr. Nelson of the Mission Board, which has not failed to bear fruit. Through his help a boat was purchased and turned over to our missionary at Houma soon after he reached the field, and through his encouragement, Brother R. E. Martin, who was then a local preacher, was persuaded to come into the Conference on trial, was given a work this year as assistant missionary.

Our field, if we could cover it, is equal to about one-third of the territory of the State. A conservative estimate of the population would be about two hundred thousand. We are expected to cover this territory and reach these people with three men; Rev. R. E. Martin, Rev. C. V. Briethaupt, and myself, and though we have not covered the entire territory, nor converted the entire population yet the Lord has already blessed our labors this year.

Brother Breithaupt moved into Houma where we had nothing. He has organized a church there and has purchased four lots, valued at $1,500 and has over $200 towards a church building.

At Bourg, the forces have been better organized, and a few members added; and a very promising work has been opened at Montegut, a point several miles below Houma, where another church building is needed. Brother Breithaupt has already received some eighteen or twenty members.

At the western end of the work where Brother Martin and I have been putting in our time the opportunity is equally as great.

We have organized two new Sunday Schools and have held our second protracted meeting and have already taken in forty members on profession of faith.

Our meeting which was held at Henry, yielded very gracious results. Brother Briethaupt assisted in this meeting and did some good work. Almost the entire community was stirred. No exact count was kept of the number of conversions and reclamations, but it was unusually large and at the close, twenty-one choice persons came up to assume the vows of the church. Of this number over half were Catholics. Among the recent converts is one who promises very much as a factor in the evangelization of the French. She comes from a Roman Catholic home, and speaks both English and French fluently. She has a bright mind, but best of all, she has been gloriously converted and is ready to respond to a call, which she says she feels from God, to do missionary work. She will gladly go to the Scarritt-Bible Training School if arrangements can be made for her.

I held a meeting in a dance hall in a solid French Catholic community, to congregations, ranging from forty at the first to 150 at the last. While there was a number of conversions, we wait for another time to organize a church. At Esther, we held a ten day's meeting in a school house which would hold about 150 and at times had the house full, with twice as many unable to get in. We received seventeen into the church, most of whom were grown and heads of families. Two or three young men have been called to preach, and one has already commenced.

For long years our French Creole people have groped their way in ignorance, superstition and sin, and the domineering Romish priesthood has largely succeeded in keeping them in check, but to-day they are awakening from this long slumber and are asking for education, and they are sending their children to the public schools. They are asking for light, and are buying the colporteur's Bibles at the rate of from two to three hundred copies a month. They are asking for the Gospel, and shall we fail to give them that which is the only hope of their salvation?

Our first great need is the earnest prayer of all the readers of the Advocate. Our second need is money sufficient to support one or two more missionaries. Our third need is about two thousand dollars for a church at Houma, and some help for a building of one at Montegut, Esther, and Kaplan.

May God raise up friends who will help us in this great work.

THE TERREBONE STORM A DEPLORABLE FACT.

By Rev. C. V. Briethaupt.

Down along the four or five bayou's, where the houses could be seen by the hundreds, where the sweet scent of the orange blossoms was wafted to the pleasure-seekers who were making their way to the coast for a day in the surf, where the babe was born, the child developed into manhood, woed and won the hand of the native maid, fought the simple battles of life, found at this writing, altogether different conditions.

The day was one that is never to be forgotten. The wind blew a gale that caused the look of awe, and fear to impress itself upon the face of the oldest fisherman, caused the weak to tremble, and the women and children to scream with fear as they clung to those who were the stronger, looking to them and their knowledge of the treacherous waters for protection; but alas! the tide came in waves that were mountainous high to those whose lots were cast in their path. Houses that had upper stories were gained where it was possible, and in these places could be found fifty and sixty people huddled together looking into the faces of each other, with hearts chilled with fear as they were in a number of cases driven from these places of refuge to the house-tops in order to escape—the angry waters which had taken the second floors.

The stories that are told are enough to make tears trickle down the cheeks of those who have hearts of flint. We see this man coming up the street, who stayed with the roof of his house until the angry waves swept it from the walls and as he, with his family, were carried on the billows clinging to the shingles, the father and mother counted the children one by one until the five were gone. Here comes another who with the wife clung to a tree that their roof had been swept against, the water dashing over their heads, and as they hung on, death staring them in the face on every billow, he looked to the wife and the cruel switches had whipped the face until the blood was seen to trickle from the wounds. Above the waves he heard her cry for help, the blood was being forced from the nose and ears, he caught hold of the skirt of her whom he would give a thousand lives for, when she can hold on no longer, and her hold is torn loose by the onrushing tide. He clings to that lifeless form till another and another wave rolls over his head, he feels that the weight of the body is gone, and looking to the hand that was holding to her whom he loved, he sees a part of the clothing that he had been hanging onto left in his iron grasp while the rest of it had gone with the body to be found somewhere after the sea had spent its force and returned again to its original abode.

The work of the day is done, insofar as the angry waves, and the howling wind is concerned, the face of the deep is as calm as the burnished heavens and as the crippled luggers are steered by the surviving ones back to the sacred spot that was once home; happiness, all; there is nothing left to show that ever a house stood except the upturned roots of the few trees that tenaciously clung on to the ground into which they had been planted by the owner of the little spot. If there be an occasional gust of the wind it drives to the heart of those who feel its gentle touch the thought of death; death all about us. Without a morsel of food we waited till the tide receded and we could follow the piles of drift to search: yea, we looked here for this loved one, and as we look we feared lest we should find.

We see this man out here to himself, what's the trouble? He was gone from home when the storm came, he comes back and finds that his wife and five little ones are gone. Yes, he has found the wife and one of the children and with his own hands he digs the grave and puts them away.

The search goes on, loved ones are looked for that are never found, hearts are wrung with grief until the wretched seeker is almost crazed by the bitter anxiety, and in the event they are discovered, decomposition, mutilation and mud have disfigured the body till it is almost beyond recognition.

During these hours of horror was there no one to say, let us pray, was there no one to say let us sing, "Jesus lover of my soul, let me to thy bosom fly, while the angry waters roll, while the tempest still is high?" No; where there was any religion at all it was that that would have one, to go to the place where the twigs were kept that had been blessed by the priest on Easter Sunday, and cast a piece of the twig into the water hoping that this act would check the oncoming tide; or to get the holy water, and use it as is the custom, or to pray the prayers that are to be found in the prayer book; and few of these prayer books, little of this holy water, and less of the blessed palm was to be found in this lower-coast country.

To go to them in this hour of trouble and offer your services as a minister to bury the dead in the section of the country I mention would have been offering your services to those who had never heard the name of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South repeated. As the writer, in the launch placed at his disposal by our good folks, came in touch with these people, saw their sufferings, the regret that we had not had men in this section of the State to teach the people, who have no opportunity of availing themselves of any church affiliation, could be expressed only as they were at the time, in shedding tears of godly sorrow that such a thing does exist in our State.

Yes, we had a little church in this Parish, and the growth of it has been almost unprecedented in our State, but it was not in the section where the loss of life was, and now it has to be built again; our church is down, the only one we had in this or the adjoining Parish.

It was a little house in the country, but it was all we had, and now this Parish is as five others of this section of the State, they all have none.

None but us who are here in Houma, or are down at the little country church house about nine miles from here, know the efforts that have been put forth, the prayers that have been offered, the letters that have been written, the fond expectations and the bitter disappointments that have been our lot as a congregation here in Houma.

The salary has come by the heroic appeals of the Boards and the liberal giving of the good people, but, alas! the salary of the one man down here in the field is one of the least items. $1,500 worth of land has been bought and paid for by us who live here, and as we stand and behold the vast opening, the crying need of a church here as a basis from which to work the country, having given almost our all, we are forced to our knees, and longingly, lovingly, tenderly, we cry, Father, from whence shall it come? It must come.

This article goes to the "Mission Issue" of our paper, but it is a personal letter to you. Take it as a message from God. We are not begging. In the name of God we ask you to give unto the Lord that which is his in order that his cause might be furthered in this part of the land.

Do what you can so that it can be said, "to-night when the gold of the sun unfurls, far in the dreary desolate west, I know that God looked out on the world, and said good-night, you've done your best."

OUR MISSION WORK ON THE MISSISSIPPI SEA COAST.

By Rev. M. L. Burton.

This territory has been in the possession of the white people 210 years. More progress has been made in the last ten than in the other two hundred.

The territory south of parallel 31 has been the undisputed property of English speaking people since 1812. The immigrants from the States settled along the rivers and creeks north of the coast. Early in the 19th century we hear of the circuit rider along the Chickasawhay and Leaf rivers, reaching down as far as Red and Black creeks. It was not till 1845 that the Conference sent Andrew Day, a young preacher, to the Biloxi circuit, although Willianm Jordan, a local preacher, preached there about ten years earlier. The next year we find Thos. Y. Armstrong appointed to the Pascagoula circuit, preaching at a point near where the town of Scranton is now situated. Handsboro, a town one mile north of the beach, had preaching about 1840, by W. G. Evans, a local preacher. It was not till 1859 that Handsboro appears as the basis of a circuit, when J. W. McNeil was appointed preacher in charge. The next year Pass Christian appears as a part of the Handsboro circuit, left to be supplied. Pass Christian disappears from the minutes until about five years ago, during which time there was only an occasional sermon by a Methodist. Rev. David Ayers moved from Texas, and settled at Ocean Springs. He was a man of some financial strength. A lot was given by a German shoemaker, and through the energy and liberality of Mr. Ayers a neat house of worship was built some time in the late sixties. Ocean Springs does not appear as the basis of a circuit till 1872. In 1861 Gainsville Mission was formed, which included the village of Shieldsboro, now Bay St. Louis, and J. W. McNeil was appointed preacher in charge. Some time in the early seventies there was a house built, called the "Protestant Meeting House," which was used by all denominations until N. B. Harmon, in 1895-96, built our present church.

Mississippi City depended on Handsboro for church privileges until about twenty years ago, when two earnest women determined that Methodism should be represented by a church building. Their labors were successful, and our congregation now has a neat church. Long Beach, which was first known as Scott's Crossing, was the home of Henry Ware, a layman of means and devout consecration, who gave the land and the first church building. Ben Jones was the preacher in charge. There was one other Methodist family, a Mr. Capers, who, with a few others, constituted the first membership. Gulfport was brought into existence by the building of the railroad from the beach to Hattiesburg. Hon. T. M. Evans, the son of one of the first preachers to preach along the coast, was instrumental in getting the present lots on which our Twenty-fifth Avenue Church now stands. N. B. Harmon was pastor. Failing to get the property they desired, by the liberal offer of the railroad they accepted such concessions as the railroad would make, and located where they thought wise. R. L. Bennett, now of Hattiesburg, furnished the money to pay the difference in the two properties. The building was erected during the pastorate of Rev. J. S. Parker.

Biloxi, in common with the "Sons of Temperance," owned for many years a two-story building on what was known as "cow alley," which served as a place of meeting and shelter for the little flock, till the present handsome brick building was planned and started in 1904, under the leadership of H. W. Van Hook, preacher in charge. In 1905 the Oak Street Mission Church was built also by him. The basement and classrooms of the Main Street Church were finished in 1906. When the auditorium is finished, which is now contemplated, Biloxi will have a most comfortable church.

J. L. Sells was preacher in charge of Long Beach and Pass Christian in 1905, when the present churches at Long Beach, Pass Christian and Sunshine Chapel were built, and the church at Twenty-ninth Street, Gulfport, was organized. The church building of Twenty-ninth Street was erected in 1906, during the pastorate of W. B. Jones. Scranton has had more trials in the matter of churches than any other along the coast, having had two burned. We now have a creditable church building.

Ten years ago we reported seven churches, valued at $8,800; two parsonages, valued at $1600; with a total membership of 636. In 1908 we reported twelve churches, valued at $51,550; five parsonages valued at $12,000, with a total membership of 1854. We have several pastoral charges and but two of our pastors have to live in rented houses.

The opening of Gulfport and Pascagoula ports, and the development of the oyster industry presented a new problem to the Church. The sailors had no provision for their spiritual or social well being, and the hundreds of Bohemians were almost entirely neglected, no special effort being made by any church for them. During the administration of the late Rev. T. L. Mellen as presiding elder of the Seashore District he tried to secure co-operation for the sailors. It was not till June, 1906, that official notice was taken of the work, when Dr. Lambuth spent several days along the coast, studying the needs. At the annual meeting of the Woman's Home Mission Society of the Mississippi Conference in 1907 Miss Minnie Boykin was employed to do home mission work in the town of Biloxi. Her labors met with great success, and while many of her cherished plans were never realized, still her work abides.

A commission was appointed by the Board of Missions to co-operate with the Woman's Home Mission Board and the Board of Church Extension to investigate the needs and make suitable recommendations, and on their recommendation at the last session of the Mississippi Conference W. T. Griffin was appointed to take charge of the Coast Mission, to begin work for the sailors at once, whose article appears in this issue, setting forth present conditions and needs.

The hindrances to our work have been the summer visitors from the cities, who bring with them their lax ideas of Sabbath observance, or indifference to religious work, and the natives, the descendants of the original settlers, who are Romanists by inheritance, and indifferent to all efforts at evangelization. The progress that has been made recently has resulted largely from the coming into the territory of permanent settlers, whose interests are local and who have a desire for moral development. The only enterprise that Methodism has ever undertaken was the inauguration in 1872 of the Seashore Camp Ground, which has resulted in much good in the moral uplift of the people. During our efforts along the coast every kind of preacher has been tried, the young and old, the experienced and inexperienced, men strong in the pulpit and men strong in the pastorate. Erasmus R. Strickland, J. J. Millsaps, Henry T. Lewis, B. B. Whittington and R. J. Jones are among the men that labored in the early days of Methodism along the coast. R. B. Downer has known the coast life more intimately than any other preacher living, having lived on the coast at different times for a period of nearly sixty years. With the proper distribution of men and means the Seashore may become morally as well as materially the garden spot of Mississippi.

SOME EXPERIENCES OF A PORT MISSIONARY.

By Rev. W. T. Griffin, Superintendent Gulfcoast Mission.

Having been in this work only a few months, my experience has not been very thrilling or varied; and the most important is that of my own heart, as I have come in contact with an entirely different class of individuals from any I ever served.

The first question to be settled was whether there was sufficient love for the souls of men. That settled, other results would follow. The proof of this could not be given in words. Then how to reach the class of men to whom we are to minister must be settled largely by experience. That they will and do respond is beyond question. Giving myself to them by night and by day; visiting the ships, climbing rope ladders; finding my way into the captain's cabin and heart; then the chief; then the engineers in the fire-room or "stoke holes;" then to the "forecastle," where the sailors eat and sleep—meeting and talking with all. Only occasionally does one meet with a rebuff, if it is known he is from "the mission," as most of them call our house of rest and services.

Their necessary isolation causes them to appreciate any interest or favors shown; as the captains say, when we visit the ships, it is to do something for the men, and not to get what we can out of them. This they know, and they will confide in us, seek information and advice; so that one feels that he is recognized in a measure as their pastor or chaplain.

When met on the streets, most of the men are very cordial, and raise their hats. On leaving the Bethel, they, one and all, bid you "good night," and graciously accept the invitation: "Come again." Thus a fast friendship is established, and often letters are written back from foreign ports and the hope expressed that they might return; but too often they never return, and, if ever, it may be years afterward.

The reading-rooms are places of rendezvous, where they meet and talk over their trials and triumphs, special hard trips, with much "nasty weather," loss of cargo; tell of their home and country, how long absent and how long before they will see the old folks again. Many expect to "quit" the sea after awhile. The average sailor life is only twelve years Very few old men and a few boys are found among them; mostly from 18 to 40 years.

While some will not come formally into gospel services, most of them can be drawn in by making them feel easy; not paying too much attention to them; and by having good music and singing. Singing is the most attractive feature of the service, and most of them take part, if a book is put in their reach and the numbers given out distinctly. It is surprising, how many hymns they know; and how they can sing these old-time hymns (the best we have). Occasionally they will call for some hymn made popular by some noted evangelist. It would do many of our congregations good to hear from fifty to one hundred of these brawny men singing "What a friend we have in Jesus," "When the roll is called up yonder," "Throw out the life-line," etc.

Many tears come unbidden when we talk to them of the influence these songs have had over their parents, and their homes. Mother, home and heaven will awaken the deepest interest, and they gladly and reverently listen to the gospel of our Lord.

Often they are singing in German, Scandinavian and English the same words and tune, and seem to enter into the same spirit. Occasionally a service is held by a Norwegian pastor, or Scriptures read and prayer in German, as opportunity presents itself, and all pay marked attention and are respectful. No better opportunity is given to impress them with our Christianity.

One young man wrote of his conversion after leaving here. Another that he had the victory over drink, saying, "when I am tempted, the song sung in the mission, 'Yield not to temptation,' comes to me, and I can stand up to my resolution and leave it alone."

REV. W. T. GRIFFIN,
Superintendent Gulf Coast Mission, Gulfport, Miss.

After one of our services one of the boys came and said he was so anxious to go and be with his mother again, and never leave her and his Church.

Many of these foreign-born feel that the Church is only for the rich, and not for the laborer; therefore, the greater the need for us to make a different impression upon them and save them from skepticism and sin. They can be reached by the practical application of our holy Christianity, and by approaching them on the tender side of life. When the question of mother, her Bible, her songs and her prayers, her influence, is brought before them, they are open to exhortation, and many are the promises for better lives.

The Portuguese and Italians, who cannot speak our language, are glad to get portions of Scripture and tracts and booklets in their own language. They come to the reading-rooms, and follow us up when on the ships with expressions of appreciation.

The question of denomination seems not to enter into their minds. They feel that all of these missions are for them, and many are deeply influenced by them. One intelligent officer recently said that the seaman of to-day is not the seaman of a dozen years ago; and the missions that almost ring-fire the globe, are proving their right to live. Thus we are scattering bread beside all waters and, in many days it shall be gathered by the Lord of the harvest.

"Soon will the season of rescue be o'er;
Soon will they drift to eternity's shore."

Then let us "throw out the life-line and save them to-day."

PUSH THE BATTLE.

By Dr. John T. Sawyer.

Yielding to the divine momentum thereto, we should lay heart, and head, and hand, and purse to the mighty work for God and souls that is just ahead, demanding of us the best we have. Face to face with the perishing millions of heathendom, and feeling the awful weight of our responsibility for their salvation; realizing God's endorsement of our cause and the plentitude of his proffered power to aid us; we should, with conscience thoroughly aroused, heart profoundly stirred, and our soul aflame with love, ask the question: What is now to be done? and answer it by a vigorous missionary campaign throughout our borders and a forward movement, never to know retreat, all along the line. There should be a more earnest and devotional study of the Scriptures touching missions, and diligent and intelligent reading of books on the subject, accompanied by intense and persistent personal effort for the saving of our fellowmen. Our presiding elders and pastors should take on new life, and should push the cause of missions more earnestly and determinedly than ever before, preaching often on the subject, planning and holding missionary institutes and mass meetings, circulating mission literature and seeking, as the Discipline has it, "in every way the education and inspiration of their people concerning the salvation of the heathen."

Our pastors can solve the missionary problem, for they are the leaders of their people, holding the key to the situation. According as they think and work and lead will be the results of the Church's efforts for the evangelization of the world. They should awake to the fact that the privilege and responsibility are mainly theirs, and that therefore they should be wholly possessed of the missionary idea, the foreign work of the Church becoming a passion with them. The great charge, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," is not only general as to the Church, but particular as to individuals, nothing less than a personal imperative to every minister of God. By Church authority the pastor receives a special field for work, but his divine call to preach is in its very essence a call to a world-wide ministry. He is not, therefore, to confine himself to his "pent-up Utica" in the home field, but, if not in person, certainly in thought and prayer and effort, he should go abroad into all lands in his hearty sympathy and ample support of those at the front. It is said that all the soldiers and sailors of England's King are enlisted for foreign service, and such also is the case even with the yeomanry. So every preacher of the Gospel, and all laymen and lay-women, if truly converted and rightly instructed, should count it their highest honor and privilege that they are enlisted for the foreign service of their Savior and King.

Those at home should keep their hearts at the front while they stay by the stuff. During war the nation at home is in the battle in its soldiers. We that are at home must press the battle through our missionaries in the foreign field. God holds us responsible for a missionary conscience, a consuming love of souls, and a lavish expenditure of our substance in this good cause. He is speaking to his Church in language not to be misunderstood. God's command is this: "Go forward." Obeying his command, and responsive to the heart-beats of infinite love, as with quickened step and the swing of certain victory we move steadily on; we shall have God with us all the way, until in the fullness of time his promise shall be fulfilled, and the Son shall "have the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession."

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE MEETING.

The Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate will meet in annual session in the office of the Christian Advocate, 512 Camp Street, New Orleans, on Wednesday, October 27, 1909, at 11 a.m.

J. T. MURRAH,
For the Committee.

OUR MISSIONARY ISSUE.

This issue of the Advocate is in the interest of the Home Mission work of our Church. For the pleasure and profit to be derived therefrom our readers are indebted principally to Dr. John R. Nelson, Assistant Secretary of the Board of Missions, who suggested the importance of such an issue, and who procured the special communications.

Our readers will observe that the matter is in small type. This was necessary in order to get in the contributions asked for. Even then, one was crowded out for lack of space. We may use it in a future issue.

PERSONAL.

The presiding elder says: "Rev. W. E. Dickens and his people at Chunkey, Miss., are closing out the year very hopefully."

Rev. T. M. Bnley, of the Plaquemine charge, was in the city a few days ago and made a pleasant call at the Advocate office.

We thank Rev. W. P. Whatley, Palmetto, La., for some good work in behalf of the Advocate. He adds six names to our list.

Friends who have favored us with communications must bear with us. Their favors are all on file—some to be printed next week, and some the week following, and some, we cannot say when.

Rev. R. T. Nolen continues to send in subscriptions. In his last note he says: "I hope to send in at least fifty-two, which will be an average of one per week." Up to date he has about averaged that number this year.

Mrs. Julia Kendall, widow of our lately deceased Brother, Rev. Amos Kendall, who has been sojourning at San Antonio, Texas, for several months, has returned to her home in Houston, Texas, 1009 Tuam Avenue.

Dr. T. P. Bell, one of the leading Epworth League workers of North Georgia, has moved to Algiers, La. His wife was Miss Sallie Lee Riley, one of the consecrated Leaguers of the Epworth Leagues of New Orleans.

We are sorry to learn of the serious illness in the family of Rev. T. B. Cottrell, Scranton, Miss. Besides being sick himself, and missing two or more Sundays from his pulpit, other members were ill. As many as five were in bed at one time.

Rev. Robt. Selby, of Natchez, Miss., we learn, spent Sunday last in the city, and preached morning and evening for the Carrollton Avenue congregation. We risk nothing in saying that the people heard good gospel sermons, and were both pleased and benefited.

Rev. Briscoe Carter, Commissioner of Education for the Louisiana Conference, occupied the pulpit of First Church last Sunday morning. We presume he talked in the interest of Centenary College, which he specially represents. With what success we have not learned.

Rev. O. L. Savage, of Iuka, Miss., is at this time engaged in a meeting with Rev. L. C. Wilson, at Amite, La., with the prospect of a good revival. A note from Brother Wilson on Saturday last informed us that the indications were favorable. We trust great good may be accomplished.

Rev. J. M. Alford, our pastor at Bogalusa, La., was in the city on business last week, but took time to report at the Advocate office. Bogalusa is a flourishing mill town, and Brother Alford is earnestly looking after the spiritual interests of the people, and is meeting with a good measure of success.

Rev. Geo. H. Thompson, of Hattiesburg, Miss., in closing a business letter, containing the names of nine subscribers, says: "The work at Court Street moves on well. One hundred and eighteen have been received into the church this year. We are in the midst of a revival now, which is being conducted by Brothers W. T. Griffin and W. J. Ferguson."

A pithy paragrapher, signing "Steward" at the end of his piece, but whose handwriting, like Peter's speech, "betrayeth" him, says: "Brother John Tillery Lewis wrote a good piece. But in the paragraph wherein he says, 'I would not attempt to give advice,' he puts himself into conflict with our Book of Discipline. See page 85, Section xv, Paragraph 190."

Rev. J. R. Jones, of the Jackson (Miss.) District, is nearing the end of the year with a glad heart. "The District is coming up quite well, perhaps will pay everything in full." He informs us of the illness of Rev. W. W. Morse, who has been sick about six weeks. He is with his son, at Tylertown, Miss. May a kind providence soon restore him to his usual health.

The Woman's Home Mission Society of the Algiers Church in this city, held its annual week of prayer October 4-8, having with them as their speakers Rev. F. R. Hill, D.D., Rev. John A. Rice, D.D., Rev. John F. Foster, Mrs. John M. Parker, and Mrs. S. A. Montgomery. The meetings were very enjoyable, well attended and calculated to increase interest in the local society.

Rev. H. C. Edmondson, of Slate Springs, Miss., reports success in his meetings the past season. At Slate Springs and Spring Hill he was assisted by Rev. J. T. McCafferty, who did some fine preaching, left the churches on "higher ground." There were sixteen conversions. Rev. W. S. Lagrone, Conference Missionary Evangelist, will be with him the first week in November.

Rev. W. G. Harbin arrived in the city on Monday evening last, and is now engaged in a meeting at Carrollton Avenue Church, with Rev. H. T. Carley. This is Brother Harbin's first appearance in New Orleans as a revivalist. We know him to be a sound and zealous preacher—we commend him as such, and trust that he may be instrumental in accomplishing much good.

Brother J. R. Abels, one of our active members at Ponchatoula, La., gave us on Monday last, as we rode with him to the city, a list of twelve new subscriptions, and two renewals. His aim is to put the Advocate in every Methodist home in his church. And, "in as many more homes as possible." We thank him for his work, and also for the words of encouragement which accompanied his list of names.

Rev. T. J. O'Neil, presiding elder of the Newton (Miss.) District, in a card to the editor says: "I ask prayers for Brother C. A. Powell, of Newton, Miss., who has been out of his pulpit four weeks in succession on account of sickness, and for Rev. J. E. J. Ferguson and wife, whose little girl is sick of typhoid fever at Chunkey, Miss." This request came last week, but too late for insertion in the Advocate. We trust by this time the afflicted ones are on the road to recovery.

Rev. H. G. Hawkins, of Port Gibson Female College, always provides for an "outing" of his teachers and pupils about the middle of the fall term. This year, on Nov. 11 and 12, about eighty teachers and students of the boarding department of the college will be in the city of New Orleans. The college opened its 70th session Sept. 22, and the purposes of this two days' visit in the city are to gain instruction and also to gain recreation and relaxation from the ordinary run of school duties.

Rev. C. F. Staples, of the Coushatta (La.) Charge, in a note to this office says: "We closed a gracious meeting at Clarence on Friday night, the 8th inst. There were twelve bright conversions and accessions to the church. The Holy Spirit was manifest in great power. We had a good meeting at St. Maurice. We have had twenty-eight accessions to the church this year and baptized twenty children. We expect to hold some more protracted services before Conference. To God be all the glory."

The church enterprises thrive at Winona, Miss., under the care of Rev. J. A. Hall—"everything moves along all right." The ladies have paid out something like $700 on the church for plastering, painting, carpet, etc. The house is now beautiful on the inside, as well as the outside, and the pastor and people are happy. By the way, Brother Hall recently furnished "The Mississippi Union Advocate," a farm journal, with an original sermon which is sound reading, and will no doubt help many tired farmers in an hour of leisure.

Rev. J. B. Randolph, of Myrtle, Miss., has closed his round of meetings, and reports, as the result, an addition of seventy-eight members, since he took charge in July—eighty-three in all this year. The "deep well" contracted for some time ago is completed and paid for, and affords an abundance of good water. Brother Randolph hopes to pay off the debt on the parsonage, and meet all claims in full at Conference. When he first took charge of the work he did not think he could secure one club of ten, but he has secured two clubs, and will probably add more names.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Brethren of the Mississippi Conference who have money for the Church Extension Board will please send it to the secretary, Rev. L. E. Alford, Longbeach, Miss., who will also act as treasurer of the Board until Conference, the office of treasurer having been vacated.

W. B. LEWIS,
President Miss. Conf. Ch. Ex. Board.

LAYMEN'S CONFERENCE.

There will be a called meeting of the laymen of Protestantism of New Orleans, October 15, 7:45 p. m., in the Y. M. C. A. Hall, to take up and consider the holding of an Interdenominational Laymen's Missionary Convention, under the auspices of the Central Office in New York, of the Interdenominational Laymen's Missionary Movement. The New York office is planning for a campaign of fifty conventions from the Atlantic to the Pacific, to culminate in a great convention in Washington, D. C., in 1910. If one of these conventions is decided on for New Orleans it will be in February next. Secretary W. B. Stubbs, of Nashville, Tenn., is at the head of the movement in the southern section of the United States.

Only a Dago! Only an Italian! Only a descendant of the ancient Romans! Only the child of a race that has produced some of the greatest men of earth, and reared one of the most wonderful empires that existed among men. Who shall limit his future if the transforming grace of the Lord Jesus Christ find a place in his life.

AN APPEAL FOR HELP.

Dear Brethren: We, the Committee of Collectors for purposes of building our Methodist Church, are appealing to our Methodist people for help, through our Advocate. Brethren we are so much in need of funds to complete our church. The contract has been let and will take all we have subscribed and in bank to start, and it will take eight hundred dollars to complete, and we can't possibly see our way through. We have been using the Masonic Temple for worship, and we think we have imposed on Masons long enough and we want a church. We hope and pray our readers will not treat us with contempt, but open their hearts and help us. We church people are anxious for a church, and every denomination is building and makes it hard on us by having so many to build, and we are forced to go on the outside for help, and as we have adopted every plan we can think of to raise this, and now we are forced to ask for help from our people. Any amount will be thankfully received. May God add his richest blessings to his good work is our prayers. You may send contributions to the Advocate or to our Treasurer, O. H. Gaugh or myself. Very respectfully,

MRS. J. P. GAUGH.

Meadville, Miss., Oct. 4, 1909.

TO THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

My Dear Brethren: Let me call your attention to the importance of full collections of assessments for church extension. Since I have been on the Board, we have never been able to supply half the money asked for by worthy applicants. Already, some urgent needs have been brought to my notice that will be presented at the approaching session of our Board. Besides these home needs, the great West calls loudly for our help. If our people could only see the golden opportunities open to our church in that field, they would surely come to our help at once with means sufficient to meet the emergency that is upon us.

One other matter I beg you to consider. It is probable that our church extension anniversary at the approaching session of our conference will take place on Thursday night. It is important that our Treasurer be prepared to submit his report at that time. This he cannot do without early collections. If each of you brethren will settle with the Auditing Committee on the first day of Conference, as the rules of our Conference require, the treasurer can be ready with his report in time.

The general Board will be represented at our Conference either by Dr. McMurry, or by his assistant, Rev. Geo. S. Sexton. W. B. LEWIS, Chairman, Miss. Conf. Church Extension Board.

MISS DAVIES' APPOINTMENTS.

The following is the list of Miss Davies' Appointments in the Mississippi Conference, October 7-21: Yazoo City, Oct. 7-8; Natchez, Oct. 10-11; Port Gibson, Oct. 12; Brookhaven, Oct. 13-14; Laurel, Oct. 15; Hattiesburg, Oct. 16-17; Gulfport, Oct. 18-19; Moss Point, Oct. 20-21.

Delegates from the respective Districts are expected at all the above places except Port Gibson and Laurel where the engagement is for one service, only.

MRS. A. F. WATKINS,
Corresponding Secretary.

"Power for Service."
BY REV. J. B. LAWRENCE,
Corresponding Secretary, Board of Missions, Baptist Convention of Louisiana. Editor of Baptist Chronicle, Published at Alexandria, La.

This is a book of 270 pages, printed on heavy paper, and finely bound in cloth. It discusses in a clear and forcible way one of the great questions of the day. In these days men are preaching a practical gospel, impressing the fact that "we are saved for service." This book discusses "Power for Service," or the secret by which saved men do the work of the Lord. It is written in a pleasing style, and cannot fail to interest and benefit all who have any desire to become one of the Lord's co-workers. It is to the credit of the author that in the very first paragraph of the book he sets forth very distinctly and truly what our Lord meant when he said to the disciples: "Tarry ye at Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." This is the key-note of the book.

LAYMAN'S MISSIONARY MOVEMENT, M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH.

By J. R. Pepper, President.

The great uprising of men in all the Protestant Churches of America, and which has now taken hold in other countries as well, is nothing more than the ripening of one of God's providential plans, for calling out the reserve force of the Church, just as he has done in other directions, and for other purposes, during the past many decades of the Church.

The fact that there are eight millions of mature men in the Protestant Churches of North America, and the further fact careful investigation shows that for many years past, only about one-fourth of this great army of men has been doing anything of an active kind, in the work of the churches of which they belong.

Think of a great industrial plant, having on its roster say two thousand men, who are pledged to service, and who are being paid regularly for a stipulated amount of work, and yet only one-fourth of them really doing anything to increase the output of the plant, or to make more efficient its service in every way. How long would it be, before such an institution could possibly hope to declare a dividend to its share holders, and more serious still, how long would it be before the whole industry would go into the hands of a receiver, and final Because of God's care for his own, his church has not gone into the hands of a receiver, nor will it ever do so, not withstanding the fact, that it has had such lack of genuine service, from its great body of men.

Little wonder then is it, that by the great moving spirit of the Gospel, the seed has been planted in the soil of the heart of thousands of men recently, and is springing up into fruitful harvest, which gives promise of great yield in the near future.

The steps thus far taken are very simple, and without undue machinery connected therewith. At the Chattanooga Conference, 1908 a simple organization was effected by electing general officers, and an executive committee, to act in the interim of the bi-ennial Conferences. An Annual Conference leader, a district leader, a church leader with a committee on missions of five members, for each individual church of the entire connection. This constitutes the entire plan for practical work at present, and very much has already been done in nearly all of the Conferences.

It has been the earnest thought and desire of those having charge of this work to become genuine helpers, to our presiding elders and pastors. The fact that we are using in our Church at this time about seven hundred supplies, and it has been stated that fully three hundred more are needed, evidence the further fact that laymen who are of good religious character, and in good standing in the communities in which they live, can become very useful, under the direction of their pastors, in helping in many directions, if the work is intelligently planned for them.

Two of the war cries of this new movement are these, "Payment of all salaries and other claims upon the Church in full, every year." "A religious service in every church in Southern Methodism every Sunday." Both of these most desirable things can be accomplished if a carefully planned campaign is set on foot by each pastor in conjunction with his presiding elder. Such work is being done in many places this year, with the most gracious results, but, of course, it takes time to get any great work fully established, and with constant labor our pastors can increase their own results many fold, by putting their men to work and keeping them at it, by well-thought-out plans.

Weekly Individual Proportionate Giving.

This is another great goal that the Layman's Missionary Movement has set up, and which may be reached by continuous effort. It is the ideal plan of giving. It is the scriptural and right plan. Three important reasons, are outstanding for its installation in all of our churches.

First.—It is much easier to divide up the offerings of a year into fifty-two parts, than to give it into twelve parts, four parts, two parts, or all of it at one time.

Second.—It is far more worshipful to give some offering every Sunday, when we remember that our giving is as religious as prayering, singing hymns or reading the Scriptures, and it is as important as either one of these, if done in the right spirit. Surely no one would feel that a religious service in a church was complete if prayer was only offered once a month, once in three months, six months, nine months, once a year or not at all, during a whole year. Neither would it seem natural, if the singing of hymns or the reading of the Scripture, were omitted for each period so that when we put giving on the basis of the other parts of the service, it is of very great moment that an offering of some size be made every Sabbath day in order to conduce to personal religious growth.

Third.—"Weekly, individual, proportionate giving will certainly prevent our church treasuries from becoming depleted as they often are, under the hap-hazard manner of giving, in any way at any time, or not at all, as it may suit the caprice or whim of the average giver. Now all of this is being urged by the Layman's Missionary Movement, and scarcely anything would work such a revolution spiritually and financially, if it can be set on foot in our entire bounds.

A Great National Layman's Campaign

It is probably known to most people now, that a campaign covering about seventy cities of the United States, will be begun about the middle of October of this year, and run through six months, ending with a great culminating Layman's Congress in Chicago early in April, 1910, at which it is believed that fully five thousand leading laymen of this nation will be in attendance, representing all of the denominations that desire to co-operate in such a far-reaching campaign among the men of the churches.

In order to plan intelligently and vigorously for such a stupendous undertaking, six Layman's Training Conferences have been held covering a wide area, as will be seen: Hot Springs, Ark., August 10-12; Monteagle, Tenn., Aug. 13-15; Montreat, N. C., Aug. 17-19; Winona Lake, Ind., Sept. 1-3; Mt. Gretna, Pa., Sept. 4-6; Silver Bay, N. Y., Sept. 7-9.

These Conferences have brought together a very choice company of men, representing a big area contiguous to each of these centers, and they will prove very potential in carrying forward the campaign in the seventy cites, as there will be a coterie of trained men to help in each place. It is believed that the outcome of this great campaign will be the stirring to new life thousands of men in all the churches, and making great winners as it were of many scores, who are now standing all the day idle.

RESOLUTIONS BY THE BOARD OF MISSIONS ON THE DEATH OF BISHOP WARD.

Again the Church is called upon to mourn the death of one of her chief pastors. The Board of Missions, in whose immediate service he came to the end of his earthly labors, hereby places on record its sense of loss in the going away of Bishop Seth Ward, who died in Kobe, Japan, Sept. 20, 1909.

He was related to this Board's activities not merely as one of its managers and as a general superintendent of the Church, but by reason of four years of fruitful labors as one of its secretaries. His advocacy of the great cause of promoting God's kingdom on earth was marked by a seriousness and eloquence and a constancy which well became that noblest of all pleas. We had counted upon many more years of such service as he so well knew how to render. Bnt we bow to that hand which had ever led him and to which his own will was constantly in submission.

We rejoice at the word which came from his dying bed in a distant land that he was to the last sustained by Divine grace; and we place on record our satisfaction that, though so far from home, he did not lack those ministrations of friendly and skilled hands which soften the pains of disease.

To his sorrowing wife and daughter waiting anxiously in the darkened home, and to the son stricken with sorrow at his father's bed-side,—we extend our sincere sympathy. May the God of all grace not fail them in this, their hour of sorrow.

It was in this very cottage in Brookside, 15 miles from Birmingham, Ala., that three Italians nearly died of Fever. They had been sick 3 months. Johnson's Tonic cured them quickly—read letter below:

Brookside, Ala., May 4, 1903.

The two physicians here had 3 very obstinate cases of continued Malarial Fever. All were Italians and lived on a creek 50 yards from my store. These cases were of three months standing, their temperature ranging from 100 to 104. The doctors had tried everything in vain. I persuaded them to let me try Johnson's Tonic. I removed all the printed matter and let the medicine go out in a plain bottle as a regular prescription. The effect in all three cases was immediate and permanent. They recovered rapidly and there was no recurrence of the Fever.

It was in this very cottage in Brookside, 15 miles from Birmingham, Ala., that three Italians nearly died of Fever. They had been sick 3 months. Johnson's Tonic cured them quickly—read letter below:

Brookside, Ala., May 4, 1903.

The two physicians here had 3 very obstinate cases of continued Malarial Fever. All were Italians and lived on a creek 50 yards from my store. These cases were of three months standing, their temperature ranging from 100 to 104. The doctors had tried everything in vain. I persuaded them to let me try Johnson's Tonic. I removed all the printed matter and let the medicine go out in a plain bottle as a regular prescription. The effect in all three cases was immediate and permanent. They recovered rapidly and there was no recurrence of the Fever.

LESSON FOR OCTOBER 17, 1909.

PAUL A PRISONER BEFORE FELIX.

Acts xxiv:10-20.

Golden Text: "Herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offense toward God and toward men." Acts xxiv:16.

All night long Paul, and his military escort, traveled toward Caesarea, and by morning they reached Antipatris, some forty miles from Jerusalem from there the infantry returned, leaving the remaining twenty-five miles to Caesarea under guard of the cavalry detachment.

Why should so much care have been taken to preserve this man's life? Claudious Lysias would answer that it was because he was a Roman citizen; the real cause was, that according to God's plan, the Gospel was to be preached in Rome and Paul was to be the preacher, and whatever of events, and of duration of time, that may intervene, the end was still the same. The Church of the Lord Jesus Christ was to be established throughout the world, and its progress was first begun westward, and toward the west it continued through all the following centuries, until the whole world has been encircled with the glorious tidings of the salvation of man.

The struggle of God's chosen Israel against the supposed justification by the law, being displaced by salvation through faith, was strong and fierce! And Paul's attitude of exponent of the Gospel of free grace, was the cause of the bitter hatred of his countrymen. The result of the controversy could not be appreciated by any ruler sent from Rome, commissioned to administer Roman laws.

On the next day, probably in the early afternoon, Paul was in Caesarea standing before the Roman governor. The letter sent by Claudius Lysias explained the cause of the prisoner; he was no ordinary prisoner, he was a Roman, and he was being threatened by a people that required the presence of Roman soldiers to force obedience to the authority of their appointed ruler. The law required that there should be no delay in such cases, and that the accused and accusers must face each other before the tribunal. In the meantime Paul was not remanded to the common prison, but to be kept in one of the apartments of the palace, his Roman citizenship demanded such consideration. Claudius Lysias had given Ananias, and the other members of the Sanhedrian, to understand that they must also go to Caesarea and prosecute their complaint before Felix, the governor. After five days, they were all present, ready for trial, the Jewish complainants were represented by counsel. The name of their attorney was Tertullus, and it was his part to present the case. He began with a perfect shower of flattery, hoping to predispose the governor in his favor; following this was his statement of particulars chosen in an unskillful manner, for proof was lacking to all of the accusations. Felix was not much interested in the speech of Tertullus, for the prisoner's offense could not by any means be considered a breach of the Roman law, it being merely a case of heated religious controversy. Then Paul was permitted to speak in his own defense. Paul was learned in the law, and his manner of expression showed his superiority over the hired lawyer of the Sanhedrin. He used no flattery, but expressed his satisfaction in pleading before one who was prepared to render such a decision, as a knowledge of the country, and its people with their customs, enabled to be given with justice.

The apostles disclaimer was manly and honest, he indulged in no reply to the bare epithets applied to him by Tertullus; but presented his defense on the lines of facts that showed on their face that their proof rested on themselves. He gave the reason of his going to Jerusalem, and gave a full account of his movements there. He went there to worship, but that he was guilty of what his accusers were pleased to call heresy; however, he believed all things that were written in the law, worshipping the God of his ancesters, and had hope of a resurrection that even his enemies did allow; and that his faith embraced a duty to exercise himself "To always have a conscience void of offense toward God and toward man." He was even then, after many years, at the city of Jerusalem on a mission of mercy, for he came to bring alms and offerings to his fellow-countrymen—such an object speaking loudly in his favor—not being in or about the temple in any attitude of tumult or disturbance, but in every way living as he preached. It is intimated in the Scripture, that Felix knew of the doctrine that was the cause of Paul being so thoroughly hated by the Jews, and on that knowledge held the case in abeyance, until he could have the chief captain before him, thus exhausting all cause to be accused of haste or partiality in his decision. Thus was the prisoner again remanded, though with no restraint on him, and no hindrance to communication with his friends. It may be that Paul's speech and his appearance of sincerity, affected Felix more than he would allow, for after many days, which may have been spent in uneasy meditation concerning "that way"—the Christian way, he sent for Paul, that he and his Jewish wife might hear him "concerning the faith in Christ." This opportunity to preach Christ to a Roman governor would never have occurred under any circumstances but as they were, and they were as they were, by the providence of God.

Paul was ready and eager, he spoke as if he was speaking to a great throng of hearers. He knew Felix, and he adapted his words to suit, striking directly at the conscience. He reasoned, because his listener was a judge and would ask the why. He reasoned of righteousness, for if Felix had any desire to follow Christ, he must be shown that he was guilty before a law where Christ alone could justify him. The preacher knew to whom he preached, for the morality of both Felix and Drusilla was deeply shadowed by their conduct. He reasoned also of temperance—for there was no restraint on these two; their lives were given over to the gratification of extreme selfish desire. The high standing of his audience did not deter Paul from preaching the truth, and Felix recoiled trembling before the burning words. He was convicted, yet he was impenitent; he was near the kingdom of Christ, yet he would not enter. He, himself, had erected the barrier over which he could not pass. He persuaded himself that he would, not then, but at some more convenient season, yield to the spirit that would lead him to "ways of pleasantness and paths of peace." The greed of gain and the love of money was more powerful than Paul's preaching, and never again was he so near being saved, for not long after this he went to Rome in disgrace, and was barely saved, by the influence of a friend, from the fatal tyranny of Nero.

How often is the Gospel heard and rejected, for the same reason that prevented the salvation of Felix? Now is the accepted time, for "the Spirit of God will not always strive with men."

TO YOUNG WOMEN

You may be laying up for yourselves much future suffering, by not treating your ailments promptly, (before they have a chance to become chronic), with that well-known female remedy, Wine of Cardui,—about which you have so often heard.

Look ahead, and plan for a healthy, happy life, by preventing female trouble from getting a foothold.

Try if that famous medicine, Cardui, which has helped so many others, will help you.

For young girls just entering into womanhood and young ladies whose life duties have not long begun, Cardui is often of vital importance, giving them strength for daily tasks.

Read what Mrs. Mary Hudson, of Eastman, Miss., says about her young sister: "While staying with me, and going to school, my young sister was in terrible misery. I got her to take a few doses of Cardui and it helped her at once.

"I have taken Cardui myself and believe I would have been under the clay, if it had not been for that wonderful medicine.

"Now I am in better health than in three years."

Try Cardui.

Epworth League

TOPIC FOR OCTOBER 17, 1909.

THE GROWTH OF SEED-TRUTH.

Matt. xiii:31, 32.

(Mission Study Rally Day.)

The seed gives but little promise of the full-grown plant. No man who was not familiar with the facts would fancy that an oak in embryo was shut up in an acorn, so likewise, the truths concerning Christ do not in themselves reveal the wonderful possibilities of development, nor their wide range of application. To-day we are beginning to realize the importance of disseminating missionary information; the knowledge of the will of God concerning the evangelization of the world, on one hand, and a clear apprehension of what has been accomplished on the other hand. These are the seed-truths which bear in them wonderful potentialities.

Given proper conditions and the seed once sown, will germinate and grow. So the truth planted in the hearts of the people concerning the advancing kingdom will wonderfully develop the desire for the evangelization of the world, and encourage men to help with their means. One trouble with much of our missionary life has been that we have spent our strength in persuading men to make unwilling gifts, when we should have tried to create in them the vision, which would make it a pleasure for them to finance the temporal armies of the Christ. But if you can cause men to see the kingdom and to take into their hearts its great truths, like the growth of the seed, will be the development of the truth.

The story of the Gospel is so simple, that a child can receive it, and yet in it lie potentialities, which transform the course of nations. The growth of this truth is as silent as the growth of the seed, and we scarce can mark the definite stages, but there comes a time when we can look back and realize the advances made.

The great work of the League today is to plant the seed-truths concerning missions, deep in the hearts of its membership. If your mission study class has not been organized for the winter's study, organize at once.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

WHAT COCA-COLA CONTAINS.

For the past several weeks we have published in this paper letters from analytical chemists showing what COCA-COLA, the popular temperance drink, contains and what it does not contain.

No intelligent person can read these letters from the leading chemists of the country without being convinced that COCA-COLA is what it claims to be: a pure, harmless, delicious, refreshing, temperance drink. The Coca-Cola Co., Atlanta, Ga., will gladly send free to any reader of this paper a booklet entitled, "Government and State Officials' Report on COCA-COLA," containing numerous letters from analytical chemists showing the true composition of this great national drink. Mr. M. N. Nelin,
Rockford, Ills.

Dear Sir:—

In reply to your letter of July 27th, I have this to say: In our High School Chemistry Class, I have had my pupils analyze COCA-COLA for the last two years. We have never been able to find even a trace of alcohol, and we applied every delicate test for it; neither did we find any cocaine. As to caffeine, we made a cup of coffee and got a better test in the coffee than in the COCA-COLA.

According to our findings, pint for pint, COCA-COLA is less harmful than strong tea or coffee, but neither is harmful if used in moderation.

Respectfully submitted,

MISSION STUDY FOR THE NEW YEAR.

To all those concerned for the increase of missionary knowledge and interest in the Church, the announcement that the new plans and materials for mission study are ready will be of peculiar interest. The splendid new text-books and the help and accessories for the work are now available and the plans have been perfected by the educational department of our General Board of Missions for the best of service in the vigorous pushing of the mission study campaign—a campaign full of interest and full of significance to the Church in the opportunities for enlarged vision and more intelligent interest in the problems of world-wide evangelization which it offers.

The enrollment of mission study classes of the M. E. Church, South, shows an increase of over one hundred during the past year—364 for 1908-09, as against 758 for 1907-08. The increase in membership is from 9854 to 11,395. These figures, however, probably fall considerably short of representing the full number of those engaged in mission study in the Leagues, Sunday Schools and missionary societies of the Church, as there are every year numbers of classes organized which are never reported to the central office and which are not included in the figures. One interesting item is the fact that through the introduction of a series of missionary stories into the Junior League Lessons, some 35,000 Junior Leaguers have had the advantage of real mission study.

The field to be studied during the coming season is South America, the text-book being called South America: Its Missionary Problems. The author is Bishop Thomas B. Neely, of the M. E. Church, who has had his residence in South America for a number of years and who has made a careful study of the history and conditions of the people of that continent.

There is without doubt a surprising ignorance, even among educated and reading people, of the history and actual conditions of this great Southern section of our Western Hemisphere. "The Neglected Continent" it has been called. But it has also and with equal truth been called "The Continent of Opportunity." The world is coming more and more to think of South America and to take it into its calculations. Its missionary problems is mainly the problem of a corrupt Roman Catholicism unworthy of the name Christianity; though there are other missionary problems the knowledge of which comes as a surprise to the ordinary reader. It is of course as a mission field that this book treats the continent. Those who are familiar with the text-books hitherto offered by the Young People's Missionary Movement can appreciate what a wonderful increase of interest will follow the careful study of this illuminating book throughout the Church.

The new Home Mission text-book treats of the negro problem. Its author is Miss Mary Helm, editor of Our Homes, the official organ of the Woman's Home Mission Society. Its viewpoint is distinctly southern, for Miss Helm speaks from a knowledge gained through a life-time study of the negro at first hand. At the same time it is fair, sympathetic and Christian in its spirit. The book traces the progress of the negro "from jungle in Africa to highway in American civilization"—the title chosen for the book is "The Upward Path: The Evolution of a Race." The thing that we, of the South, as Christians need to keep in mind is that the negroes presence here constitutes above all things a missionary problem; and it is in this light that this new book treats him.

Two other new text-books have been issued by the movement this year—Servant's of the King, by Robert E. Speer, a splendid book of missionary life stories for young people of fifteen to nineteen, and Under Marching Orders, the life-story of Mary Porter Gamewell, a heroic missionary to China, for Junior readers.

Fuller description of these text-books; also names of the optional courses still available and full information about the helps and accessories for mission study is contained in a beautiful twelve-page booklet which our Methodist people ought to have. If you are really interested it will be sent you free for the asking. Address Rev. Ed. F. Cook, secretary educational department, Methodist Board of Missions, Nashville, Tenn. The prospectus will be sent to you at once and any other information about the work will be gladly furnished.

While the progress of mission study during the past few years has been gratifying in the extreme, the constantly-enlarging opportunities and demands which every passing twelve months brings in every mission field make it imperative that there be no standing still, but that the campaign be waged with renewed vigor and earnestness, that the interest which follows information may bear fruit in results which shall mean much to the spread of Christ's kingdom on earth, and in the hearts of men.

Endorsed by the "Constitution."

Every Southerner knows the high standing of the Atlanta Constitution, the leading paper in the South. And the late editor of it, Henry W. Grady, was one of the Souths noblest sons. Mr. Grady was renowned for his frankness in stating facts and he was just as severe in condemning that which was wrong as he was in praising what was right. As a resident of Atlanta he naturally heard of the work being done in that city by Dr. Woolley for the cure of persons addicted to the use of whiskey and opium. Mr. Grady investigated and when he had satisfied himself that Dr. Woolley's cure was a genuine one, he came out in an article in the Constitution and said so. He described the treatment as harmless, cited the fact that it caused no shock to the nervous system, or loss of appetite, no severe purging nor any tendency to collapse and reported that no case was on record where any patient had suffered after effects. He detailed the circumstances in two cases treated, in both of which the patients were using from 40 to 60 grains of morphine and from 20 to 25 grains of cocaine every day and he declared that in 30 days both cases were discharged—completely cured. Any one who cares to read the whole article can secure a copy of it by addressing Dr. Woolley's Victor Sanitarium, 200 Lowndes Building, Atlanta, Ga.

Rev. B. A. Winn, under the auspices of the Western Virginia Conference, opened an Italian mission at Enterprise, W. Va., July 1, 1908. He has gathered into the day school thirty-eight young men. It is gratifying to note that twenty-hree of these young men have been converted and two of them are preparing for the ministry. The Protestant influence, like the little leaven in the meal, has already affected the Italian colony for good.—Nashville Advocate.

CORINTH, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: We have just closed a great meeting in First Church at this place. A hundred or more will unite with the Methodist Church and quite a number the other churches.

Brother Broyles, who is one of our strongest preachers, is pastor, and he has his work well in hand and doing a great work for our Methodism. Brother Broyles has trained quite a number of young men to do church work and they are a great help to him in his pastorate.

He has a fine Sunday School and has one of the finest young men for a superintendent I have ever met. The men's class presided over by that gifted young woman, Miss Kilpatrick is a hundred and fifteen strong, and is a power for good. This meeting means history for our great Church in Corinth. Only eternity itself will reveal the good accomplished.

BUENA VISTA CIRCUIT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: We have just closed our last revival meeting for the summer; have had good meetings with a total of thirty accessions to the church. My helpers were: Revs. T. J. Durrett, J. J. Garner, W. E. M. Brogan, and L. W. Cain; all forceful, strong preachers.

During the year we have had many things for which to thank God. I am serving a fine people that are loyal to their pastor and happy is the man sent to them for next year. I have the work well organized, four Sunday Schools, two Epworth Leagues, three W. H. M. Societies; all in working order.

Not long since, we were given a pounding by the young people of our Ebenezer Church and you know that a pounding in late season is a rarity. We expect to carry a "clean sheet" to Conference.

OLD HINDS' CHAPEL STIRRED IN A REVIVAL.

We began our revival service at Hind's Chapel, a part of the Hernando Charge, the third Sunday in September. A fine congregation was on hand at 11 o'clock, and also at the night service. Brother W. M. Young, our efficient presiding elder, came to us Monday morning and preached till after the Friday morning service. His preaching is logical and heart-reaching. He awakens the conscience and when that is thoroughly aroused, conviction usually is followed by repentance and conversion. We were rained out on Monday night. We were not sorry, as the dust was almost unbearable. On Wednesday night the Holy Ghost descended and sinners flocked to the altar. When the elder left the pastor Friday afternoon, he felt very lonely, but took up the work trusting in God. There had been nine conversions up to this time. The Holy Spirit continued with us and nine more joined the church. A number of hardened sinners came forward with tears coursing down their cheeks and said "pray for me, I am determined to lead a better life." We hope to receive several more into the church before Conference.

Sunday week, the pastor will begin revival services at Hernando. We are expecting great things of God. An ideal meeting, is one held by the pastor and his people.

On the first Sunday in November we hope to begin revival services at Horn Lake in the new church which is to be completed by that time.

We are closing out the best year of our ministry. Pray for us, brethren. We will meet at Conference at Okolona before many days. May God bless all of the brethren during the remaining weeks of this Conference year.

FROM BOUNDS MISSION.

Dear Advocate: Having finished our summer's work of protracted services, four of our own, and assisted in four others, I will try to give the readers of the Advocate some dots. Our work is known as the Bounds Mission, Aberdeen District. This is a new work, a slab off of the Pittsboro charge, that should have been made a long time ago. It has long since been known that more than four churches for one preacher is a mistake. Just as long as six or eight churches are assigned to one preacher there will be mission territory. As a rule, the churches are going to pay according to the amount of service they get. Where there are so many churches some of their protracted meetings have to be too soon or too late. Owing to this they fail somewhat from the standpoint of a country Methodist; in fact, when the Methodist Church fails in that of the enduement of power—a baptism of the Holy Ghost—it doesn't meet the taste of a Wesleyan Methodist. The altar is where the Methodists get their strength. The Lord has ever had use for the altar. In the revival is where the Methodists take in their members. Let a Methodist Church depart from that power under which it was born and took its rise, it will die.

Our first meeting was at Tabernacle. We were assisted by Rev. S. E. Galloway, who had been made a preacher only three weeks, but the people thought from the way he preached that he had been at it for years. Yet he is only 24 years of age, he is one of the coming preacher-boys of North Mississippi.

Our next point was at Pine Ridge. At this church we had Rev. R. F. Cole, a local preacher of many years, well known in this part of the State, who did us some good preaching, and who will be long remembered at this church. We also had three sermons by Elias Kilgore who was raised in that community, who has traveled and held revival meetings in more than twenty States, and a preacher he is.

The next point was Pleasant Hill. Here we had Rev. W. C. Carlisle, of Calhoun City, who, in our judgment did some first-class preaching. Of course, he did, being a grandson of the old Jimmy Carlisle who was a preacher of the long ago and a long time of the Mississippi Conference. Also at the same place, Rev. R. F. Cole was with us part of the time and rendered good service.

The last of the four was at Nebo. The same old framed church built in 1857. The old house with a slight exception, seems to be perfectly sound. The first roof lasted fifty-one years. This church had run down in membership to about fifteen. Pressed on every side by other than Methodists, it was thought by some that the meeting would close by Monday night, but instead, it closed the Sunday following, with eight new members, with a strong request for it to continue. At this point we had Rev. D. M. Gean, also Rev. Mr. Sowell who did some good preaching. Brother Gean was a new man here, and his style of preaching was new to these people. It was only the old story of the cross in a new dress to them. He preached he Bible, making no compromise with sin. Those who thought the least of his preaching at first thought the more of it at the close. The oldest members say there was never such a meeting like it for years if ever. When the meeting closed the people didn't know what church they belonged to, and some of then didn't care much, all in love for God and one another. These people want Brother Gean for pastor next year.

Preacher-boy, S. E. Galloway, was by our side all the way through, filling every place almost for which a Methodist preacher is made, and the end is not yet. We hope to see notes from other preachers whom we have assited in their meetings.

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property-holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property-holders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically not outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co., for a detailed explanation.

WHOLE No. 2802.

Glances at the World.

St. Louis, like New York, has just passed through a centennial celebration. St. Louis has been incorporated one hundred years, and in celebrating the anniversary has done what no other city has ever done, as far as we know: it has asked the churches to join in the celebration. Accordingly, on Sunday, Oct. 3, the church bells greeted the rise of the sun by ringing, and "special centennial services were held in the city's four hundred and forty-four churches," tablets were unveiled, and there was singing by armies of Sunday School children. This was the beginning. Why should not churches join in such celebrations? It is true that the cities would not be what they are in religion, civilization or morals but for the churches. No town of any size in this country would be fit to live in but for the conservative influence of religion, fostered by churches. At the same time the churches are indebted to the towns and cities that afford them a large measure of protection, and both are under obligation to God through whose wisdom and providence they exist. It would be better for all concerned if city governments oftener recognized the power and influence of the churches. We say this without hinting in the remotest degree the propriety or desirability of a union of church and state. We do not for a moment believe in that theory. But that the two may be, and often are, mutually helpful we do believe. And we are glad that one city has asked the churches to join in celebrating its greatness.

Apropos to the above, we call attention to the evil, not to say disastrous, consequences of the entire separation of our public schools from all religious instruction. We do not mean the separation of our schools from sectarian teaching. That is all right and may be enforced without danger, provided instruction in the principles of religion and the doctrines of the Word of God is rigidly maintained. But what we had in mind is the deplorable state of morals among the boys in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Even the municipal authorities are somewhat alarmed and have asked the question: Why are the boys of Milwaukee worse than the boys of other cities? They looked into the matter officially and reached these conclusions: (1) The lack of moral training in the home and the schools; (2) the "ingurgitation of beer." We do not like to use such an uncommon word, but it is the word used by those who made the report. They meant by it not merely that the boys drank beer, but that they drank it "greedily and in large quantity." In other words, Milwaukee boys are "beer guzzlers." If they are beer topers in tender years, and have no moral training, it is no wonder that they are worse than boys in other cities. A certain beer is loudly proclaimed as "the beer that made Milwaukee famous." It has done something worse: it has made Milwaukee boys infamous. What beer and a purely secular education has done for Milwaukee boys it will in due time do for the boys of other cities. Is there anything in this for Protestants and native-born American citizens to think about? If not, why not.

The "Weekly Witness" has the following concerning rats: "A bill has been introduced into the British Parliament for the extermination of rats. Scientists estimate that these rodents destroy in the British Islands every year $65,000,000 worth of property. In India the rat is a greater menace to human life than the tiger or the cobra, and it is because of the service which the snake does in killing the rats that the cobra is allowed to infest the huts of the common people. Ordinarily, he is inoffensive; but stepping upon him in the dark, he inflicts the fatal blow, and no remedy has yet been found to counteract his poison. The rat also carries the Bubonic plague. Singular enough he infects the fleas that are a parasite upon him, and these animals, jumping from rat to man, carry the plague with them, so that one means of exterminating the plague is to kill the rats. On the Pacific coast they are meeting the evil by the liberal uses of cement and they are making buildings rat-proof. A rat will gnaw through lead pipe and will sharpen his teeth on almost any kind of wood, but he will not bite cement, nor sharpen his teeth on stone. So they are tearing away their old, wooden walks, destroying their wooden buildings and making rat-proof habitations as a protection against these vermin." What the rats do for the British Isles they do in America and to the same extent. In fact, it would be impossible to estimate the damage they do. A relentless war should be waged against them.

The editor of this Advocate has received a leaflet advocating "woman suffrage," a regular electioneering dodger, written by one of our leading preachers, designed, as we suspect, to be circulated by the Woman's Suffrage Association of Mississippi. It was not sent to us by the author, we are glad to say, but by another whose name we feel fairly able to guess. Whether or not the sender desires the document printed in the Christian Advocate we do not know. Of course, we cannot print it, not that it advocates woman suffrage, but because it is a political document. We have very great respect for some of our sisters who are ardent in attachment to their political platform. We likewise have great respect for the author of the document in question, but must be permitted to express our sorrow, that, while he has a perfect right to his opinion, he has been drawn into a public discussion of the matter.

Peace does not reign in France between the state and the Roman Catholics. It is said that notwithstanding "for the first time in a century their leaders—the priests, the bishops and the archbishops—find themselves free men in possession of the same liberties as are enjoyed by all other French citizens," there is dissatisfaction, and a movement is on foot to form "a Roman Catholic party" to mould and control public opinion for political ends. How strong the sentiment is in favor of such a party the dispatches do not state. It is not unanimous. The in the country seem to be aware of danger lurking the country seem to be aware of danger lurking in the formation of such a party as shall undertake actively to promote political purposes, and point to the fact that "all the ills that have befallen the Church in France are largely due to its intervention in politics." "A distinguished member of the French clergy, the Abbe Bizet, has just made a significant pronouncement with regard to the proposed party. He lays down the principle that the Church is not and cannot be a party. It is open to all men of all parties, but it cannot identify itself with any party since the final consequence of such a situatio would be to place the church under the tutelage of that party." Thousands of people in America would feel easier in face of the rapid increase of the Roman Catholic population if they had any well-founded assurance that the Roman Catholic clergy of the country entertained such sentiments as the Abbe Bizet.

The German-Americans from forty-two states met in Cincinnati recently, the purpose being to work together to save the large "personal liberty" they have acquired and enjoyed in America. They are in mortal dread of losing it through the efforts of "the fanatics" who are abroad in the land. They met together in what is called the National German Alliance. Judging by the remarks of the president of the body, the sole object of the alliance is to fight prohibition. The governor of Ohio and the mayor of Cincinnati welcomed the alliance in eloquent speech. The president, in his response, said among other things: "As devoted citizens of this country, we hold ourselves second to none in our devotion to the cause of true temperance and to all that makes for the sanctity of home and decency and order in the state; but we are bitterly opposed to the passage of any law that destroys our rights of personal liberty. As free and sovereign people, we believe that we have a right to regulate our lives as we see fit. The right to drink our wine and our beer we consider as absolute as the right to buy any other food. The divine right of each to pursue his own good in his own way should not be sacrificed to the fears and the fanaticism of those who regard, or pretend to regard, drink as a crime. * * * The strongest plea that can be put forward for the mildest form of prohibition—local option—is that it enables a fanatical majority to lord it over a liberal-minded people." This man, like political bosses, and thousands of others, knows literally nothing of the feeling of the great body of the people who are opposed to strong drink. All their fine talk about "personal liberty," lording it over people," "fanaticism" and so forth, has ceased to produce any effect. The people have learned who the "lords" are, and how destructive is their rule, and they are determined to break it.

WORK OF SUPEREROGATION.

By Rev. Jas. M. Weems.

This is a dogma supposedly held by the Roman Catholic Church alone, and teaches that it is possible to do more good works than is necessary to save one's own soul, and that the overplus may be transfered to some other soul in need of help. Of this doctrine our church teaches: "It cannot be taught without arrogancy and impiety."

But in these last days we have a new Richmond in the field preaching a far more serious doctrine of supererogation. They do not teach the Romanist view of it, and claim that one may transfer his good, unneeded acts to another; but that the one act of the individual covers all the past and the future of the life. That when this act is performed it matters not how long the individual may live, nor yet how sinful the life may be, the soul is absolutely safe.

The writer has heard with his own ears that after this one act of obedience they might transgress every commandment under the law, and that though they might die in the act of the transgression, the soul was absolutely safe. This is a far worse form of the dogma of supererogation than that held by the Romanish church, for they do have the confessional and do require their people to do penitential acts. But in this case it is a cold-blooded transaction between the individual and Christ, by which the individual agrees to confess Christ and be immersed, and Christ binds himself to save the individual.

They even go further and assert that the moral law was not given to be kept, and if it was, no Christian could keep it, and that even the preacher himself transgresses the law every day. I have listened most attenttively for them to quote the Scripture in support of this new dogma of individual supererogation, but have never heard it. After much prayerful thought of this matter, I find myself confronted with three questions:

1. If this doctrine be the correct teaching of God's holy Word, why the constant and strong exhortations against all forms of sinning in and out of the church? And w[illegible] the examples of the punishment of people who have complied with the part of this dogma of personal supererogation, are given in the Bible?

2. If the Christian cannot and does not keep the moral law, but lives in constant violation of the same, how can they conscientiously punish the poor sinner in the courts for the violation of the same law? Do they punish him because he has failed to accept the conditions of this individual act of supererogation which they hold covers all the acts of one's life? Or do they punish him for a crime they declare one cannot help committing, and that they confess they do commit every day. I find myself perplexed at this point. The last thought is are we, as ministers of the gospel of the Son of God, doing our duty, and can we stand acquitted at the bar of God if we fail to warn the people against so unscriptural and so dangerous a dogma as this? Each one of us has answered this question affirmatively at the door of the Conference: "Will you be ready, with all faithful diligence, to banish and drive away all erroneous and strange doctrines contrary to God's Word?"

The people are demanding that we meet these conditions, and we must either do so with vigor or else give place to those who will. Wherever the peculiar doctrines of our church are preached the best results follow.

SOME PREACHERS' SOCIAL FAULTS.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

The pastor's social life has always been one of the strong arms of his power and a means of great pleasure to his poeple. Being well read, of wide experience and beyond the mediocre, and in most instances of a sunny disposition, he has ever been a welcome member of such social gatherings and homes as are congenial to consistent Christian living. But being human, he will most likely develop faults that are peculiarly his. He is revered and great liberty is accorded him, and there is but little to check and correct him should he develop disagreeable habits. Here are some extremes that we think preachers should avoid.

(1) They should neither be sanctimonious nor frivolous, but strike the mean of being manly, Christian and sensible. To wear an elongated face, "dearing" the children, laboriously brothering the adults, and slobbering over people generally is offensive to good taste and subjects a preacher's motives to be questioned by his associates. On the other hand, frivolity will soon destroy the genuine respect that should be accorded him as a minister of the gospel. While being happy and sunny he will be accorded the right of being humorous; still, he is not a clown to give labored performances of frivolous jocularity. Such familiarity will "breed contempt."

(2) A fault sometimes found among preachers is either to talk too much or not enough. One may be a social talking machine that never waits for a reply to his questions nor allows a hearer to put in a word edge-ways. Some times he is a nuisance and in his dissertations of minute boresome details all you can do is to get up and walk off, leaving him with "unfinished business" on hand. But over against him may be one so meditative, so indifferent to the pleasures and courtesies of social life as to be "heavy" and whose presence is unwelcome in the home or social gathering. Happy for the man who strikes the medium disposition.

(3) Over against the fault of not spending enough time with the people, face to face, in pastoral intercourse, is the worse habit of lolling around, killing time with the dead-beats and hangers-on of society—dominoe-players, bird-hunters and "brick-pressers." Business and professional men who do things have no time to squander thus and "the King's business demands haste." The rules, to spend no more time at a place than is necessary and never be triflingly employed, would go far towards striking the right line.

(4) Being hard to please at meals is one drawback to the desirability as guests of some preachers. Bishop McTyeire is reported as exhorting preachers never to ask for what is not on the table. But there are many instances where preachers have either encouraged or demanded of heavily-worked housewives to take on extra burdens of making for them coffee or other dishes not in the family's bill of fare. This is unkind and indicates a lack of good taste. Should the meals served by the hostess not suit the guest he should go to the hotel and demand what he wants and is able to pay for. Doubtless our expressed or implied pleasure for big dinners and numerous special dishes has already made it hard for us to be welcomed on ordinary occasions at the meals of our people and we should not allow the blame to rest on ourselves if such is ever the case. If John the Baptist or Paul or Elijah are types and examples to be followed by Christian ministers, the less "softness and needless self-indulgence the better." Neither of these would have been hard to entertain.

As brother pastors, we should help each other to know our faults—social and all—and put our hands to the task of pruning them off, as experience and the grace of God will allow. With many, no doubt, there is room for improvement, and we are the ones to take up the task, that we "may be workmen that need not be ashamed."

ENFORCEMENT OF DISCIPLINE.

By Rev. Isaac L. Peebles.

Few subjects, if any at all, that are of more importance than that of "enforcement of discipline," and yet how little is it understood! Indeed, when mentioned, one will cry out one thing and another something else that is not at all pertinent to the subject, and, too, that will likely most immediately silence all tongues and pens on the same. Why does one class another, who may venture to write or speak on "enforcement of discipline" as a crank, fanatic, pessimist, or something else, instead of discusing the subject frankly, freely and Scripturally for the glory of God, the highest good of the Church and the salvation of the world? It is not at all a favorable omen when efforts are made to silence free discussions of important subjects especially those that involve the vital interests of the Church of God. Enforcement of discipline is one of those subjects and therefore let us with reference to the great judgment freely discuss it brotherly and Scripturally. In order to this let us notice the meaning of discipline. To be brief and pointed, "church discipline" in its clustered or aggregated sense, or in its broadest sense, includes not only the doctrines, rules, government of a church, but also its corrections, censures, suspensions and expulsions for offenses against the same. "Enforcement of discipline" is making it forcible so as to make it mean what it really is, and, too, to make it active in the lives of those who have subscribed to it. The object of church discipline and its enforcement is the righteousness, peace, harmony and final salvation of its members, and, therefore, we can at once see the folly of one's enforcing it in the case of a dancer, drunkard or card player and allowing the godless speculator, extortioner, non-church attendant, the ignorer of his debts to his church, doctor, merchant, church paper, employees, or any one else, go unnoticed and allowed to do as he chooses. One can see the great folly of enforcing discipline in cases of the poor, the ignorant, the uninfluential, and at the same time allowing the rich, the educated and the influential to do as they please. One can see the great inconsistency of enforcing discipline in cases of dancers, card players, etc., and at the same time allowing abbath-breaking, whisky-drinking, cursing, evil-speaking, returning evil for evil, the neglect of family and secret prayer, the neglect of public worship, fasting or abstinence, etc. The manner of enforcing discipline should be firm, Christly and regular. A church without discipline is no church at all, and a church with discipline unenforced is a moral monstrosity. In conclusion, I wish to say that I do not know of a single pastor or even a Conference, that is enforcing discipline in an impartial and Scriptural way.

CONCERNING FEDERATION.

By Rev. J. E. Harrison.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I am a reader of the New Orleans Advocate and generally look to your editorials. In the issue of Sept. 16 you editorially call attention to some utterances of our gifted orator and writer, Dr. S. A. Steel, on the subject of federation.

May I be permitted to say that in my humble judgment it is time for the M. E. Church, South, to take steps towards real federation, because we are losing ground on the present idea and plan called "federation," which has not yet touched the real question involved.

If one will look up the word there will be found involved in federation the following: (1) It must be between equals. The states of our Union are a fair illustration. Our nation is composed of federated states. Each state is the peer of any other in the Federal government.

(2) Each is a distinct and separate member of the federation. Separate in laws and customs. Every state has its own habits, laws and customs. In no case do they seek to conform the one to another.

(3) Each must respect the other's rights and territory. Federation of states gives no state the right to invade the territory of another state. This separation of federated rights is zealously guarded by all the members of the national federation.

(4) Federation is united effort by integral and governed powers for definite ends, as for defense, for general commerce or for general improvements.

Now, the M. E. Church and the M. E. Church, South, say to each other: "Let us become federates." "All right," say both. What is the first essential to federation? It is, that each member of the compact shall have his own separate territory; or, in other words, there shall be no disputed territory occupied by both. Two states of the Union claimed a certain county. The supreme court of the federated Union decided which state should have that county. They could not both occupy it together.

State lines must be clear and so must the lines between all federates be clearly marked and strictly regarded. We must hold to the real meaning of federation, namely, that it is opposed to organic union. The very definition of federation shuts out organic union, for federation is based on the expectancy of the permanency of separateness and self-control in each member joining the compact.

If, therefore, the M. E. Church is working, as many of us think, for organic union, it is unfair and insincere to cover their effort with a proposed federation. But if the M. E. Church goes into federation as federation, she must recognize the M. E. Church, South, as an equal, separate church, and must expect her to continue an independent and separate church.

And if the M. E. Church goes into federation as federation, she must recognize the territory ceded to the M. E. Church, South, at the time of the division by the General Conference of 1844 as the territory of the M. E. Church, South, and must expect her members coming into that territory to unite with the M. E. Church, South, just as a citizen of Louisiana, who moves into Texas, becomes, at a stated time, a citizen of Texas and loses his citizenship in the other state.

And if the M. E. Church, South, goes into federation as federation she must be willing to recognize the line between her ceded territory and that of the M. E. Church, and must be willing for her members who cross that line northward to become members of the M. E. Church.

If we are unwilling to get at the basic principle of federation and refuse to make real federation a fact by recognizing this division line that must be drawn, then the best and most sincere thing for both to do is to cease all efforts for federation and acknowledge that we are rivals and antagonists.

A NOTEWORTHY GIFT IN MEMORY OF THE FAITHFUL.

The past week was observed as a Week of Prayer by the Woman's Home Mission Society, special attention being given to their mountain schools and to their school for negroes. At Carrollton, Miss., a contribution of $500 was made. The following will explain the gift:

To the Woman's Home Mission Society:

Last June, in writing of our faithful servant who had just died, our father said: Amanda Jones was born in Madison County, Miss., ——. Twenty-six years ago she came into the service of my family, and with the exception of a few months, she has been with us during all these years. There was never a more competent and faithful servant than she proved to be. Indeed, so correct was her general conduct that we came to regard her more as a friend than as a servant. She was a woman of unusual good sense. Her integrity was conspicuous, and her honesty was never called in question. Whether we were absent for a day or for weeks at a time, we knew that everything was safe in her keeping. All of our children were nursed by her, and she served us in every possible way. Beyond any question she would have died for any member of my family. She was never known to slight her work, and many were the times when the midnight hour, and later, found her still toiling, because she would never be content till the work was done perfectly.

When severe sickness seized us, and for weary weeks and long months held us in its grasp, and a dark cloud of dread apprehension hung over us like a pall, that at any moment might fall with blinding and crushing force, nothing could have been more beautiful and helpful than the fidelity of her service. Day and night every interest of the home and welfare of all its inmates commanded her supreme devotion and untiring efforts.

Mrs. Bingham could not have nursed her own sister with more faithfulness and tenderness than she nursed Amanda in her last illness.

Our lives have been wonderfully—sometimes I think singularly—blessed with rich friendships. I am sure that we never had a sincerer friend than this humble black woman. True, she tried us many times, because she had an almost uncontrollable temper. But now, as we look upon the body that served us so long with such unfaltering devotion, and the hands that often grew weary but never ceased in efforts to please us, we do not regret any act of forbearance. When one stands where falls the light from two worlds there is no regret for any magnanimous act or for any kindness shown or for any patience exercised. Not one of us is ashamed of the fact that deep grief and sincere sorrow wrung our hearts, and we could not partake of the evening meal when this devoted servant and faithful friend went from us. We made no attempt to conceal our tears. Indeed, we would despise ourselves if we could lose so true a friend without the fountain of our emotions being stirred to its profoundest depths.

After a few days of sickness she went to her rich reward on Sunday afternoon, June 13, 1909. Through the long hours of that sad and lonely night my children kept vigil by her bier. On Monday we had our pastor, Rev. R. I. Allen, to conduct her obsequies in our parlors. We were glad thus to express our profound respect for her who, for a quarter of a century, had loved us more than she did her own life. I, and my sons whom she had seen grow to manhood with as much pride as their own parents felt, were her pall-bearers. We followed her to the cemetery and covered her grave with flowers. For many years she had been a member of the Colored Methodist Church, and its most liberal supporter. Being unusually efficient and industrious, she commanded the highest wages for the class of work done. Her frugality enabled her to lay aside liberal sums for one in her sphere, and this she dispensed with a lavish hand, giving away all that she made. Knowing this, it was a pleasure to provide for her a home, and to supply every want, and to see that she had suitable burial. There is nowhere any promise to the perfect, but there is a sure promise to the faithful. Amanda Jones was faithful! Many were recipients of Amanda's generosity. We kept no account, but we reckon that she gave to us in money and presents as much as five hundred dollars. The benefit of her wise counsel and of her noble life of unselfishness is ours forever.

But we feel that to retain the fruit of her tireless toil, though freely given to us for our own personal use, would be selfish, and so we want to devote the amount to a benevolent purpose. We have decided to give it to Paine Institute as a "Memorial to Amanda Jones," so that in all the coming years it may bless members of her race. May it aid in perpetuating the noble work done for that people by Bishop Capers, Bishop Galloway and their compeers.

Some have thought Amanda was an "ante-bellum black mammy," but she was born after the war had closed, and was scarcely forty years of age at the time of her death.

SAN ANTONIO LETTER.

By Rev. N. B. Harmon.

When I found my parsonage home in this far southwest city nestling in a beautiful mesquite grove and the entire block covered with wide-leafed cactus beds. I decided to send a message back to my children-friends in Mississippi and tell them how I fed my cows on cactus leaves. But this pastor found his hands full in this rushing western city and now within twenty-one days of my Conference session, which will end three years of the most varied and laborious work I ever did, my self-made pledge is still unfulfilled.

The parsonage is 780 feet above sea level, and faces south and catches the warm breezes, free from malaria largely, with here and there a huisache tree among the mesquite grove and cactus beds, it is really a health resort for malaria-filled preachers. Never a moments trouble do the preachers or speakers have with their throats in these dry, balmy breezes. I have found it so. But now I will slip from my story for the little folks if I do not give it right here. The best food for cows without money or price I get by taking a great long knife and cutting off the wide cactus leaves and then holding them over the flames of the gas stove until every "sticker" has been burned away. That is my task when the boys are at school. San Antonio is a city of suburbs. Laurel Heights is the home of the millionaires. Palaces are there. Government Hill where the army post has its barracks for the soldier boys, laid off in a great square surrounded by the fine homes of the army officers. Here is the second largest post in the United States. Once in three years we have seen the soldier boys leave here for the Phillipines. (I shall not pass any criticism of the conduct and habits of the soldiers which have come under my personal observation in these three years. This I will say: I am more and more opposed to a large standing army and would fight to the day of my death for the maintenance of the abolition of the canteen system.) Then follows Prospect Hill where are to be found homes of well-to-do-folk who work for their daily bread. Not any very rich, nor are there any very poor, but a citizenship which I call the bone and sinew of a country. West End is the college section. Here is the San Antonio Female College over which presides Dr. J. E. Harrison, who was a college mate of Bros. Watkins, Selby, Lewis (B. F.) and myself. It is a very pretentious-looking building, four stories high, from which can be obtained a most enchanting view of the Alamo city. They have 120 girls now enrolled for 1909-10. There are two boys colleges near at hand and a great Roman Catholic college also. West End is Brother Paul Hardin's field of labor. Now, in a sentence, I give the other suburbs of this rushing, pushing commercial southwestern metropolis—Tobin Hill, Alamo Heights, Beacon Hill, South Heights. We have eight Methodist churches in this city. Travis Park is the great down-town central church with a membership of twelve hundred. During my first two years, Dr. E. D. Mouzon was pastor. He is now Dean of the Theological Department of Southwestern University.

The fight for State-wide prohibition has almost side-tracked every other political issue in this State for the last three years.

The deaconess of my parsonage has said time and again that it was the irony of fate that after I had bled on the Mississippi prohibition battle-field, that the victory should have come there, while the Lord's providence had thrown me into another wet State to fight all over again. My brethren here thrust me into the front of the battle in the work of the Anti-Saloon League, but nobly did they stand by me and now, after three years of the bitterest struggle I have ever seen, with the diabolical methods which that crowd know so well how to use, even descending to the threats of black hand letters, the first great signal victory has been won in forcing the rigid enforcement of the Sunday Law. The saloons in this city are now closed as tight as beeswax on the Sabbath. Galveston, New Braunsfels and all other cities and towns where the law has heretofore been defied are now falling in line, for San Antonio sets the pace for all the others in southwest Texas. The present governor was a local-optionist, but during the fight for Constitutional prohibition, developed into a State-wide prohibitionist. The line up for the next State race is now on and some have expressed fear that the Bryan-Bailey tariff controversy will, for awhile, overshadow the prohibition question, but this scribe is hopeful that it will not have the weight some think it will in the next campaign for State offices. The anti-prohibitionists are clustering like bees about Mr. Colquitt, who is out for governor. The prohibitionists have not yet announced their man, but our editor of the Texas Christian Advocate, Dr. George C. Rankin, is the logical State leader of the prohibition forces and I am sure a way will be found to concentrate all the prohibitionists on some man who will lead us to victory.

During my three years' pastorate at Prospect Hill two hundred and seventy members have been added to the church roll. The Sunday School has increased from a regular attendance of fifty to two hundred and twenty-five. The present building is utterly inadequate and one class meets in the parsonage parlor, another of the Baraca classes meets in the upstairs room of my barn while the infant department is housed in a tent in the rear of the church. The new church building has been delayed, but is an assured fact for next year.

Methodism in San Antonio is taking on new life. The City Board of Missions and Church Extension has spent more than $14,000 this year in buying strategical locations on Laurel Heights, Alamo Heights, Beacon Hill, and McKinley Avenue near the great Hot Wells resort. Three new churches are planned for next year. The San Antonio District covers thirteen counties and is 325 miles long and abont 100 miles wide; now what do the Mississippi beloveds think of those distances?

I was called yesterday to bnry William Vick Henderson, the grandson of the Rev. Hewitt Vick, founder of Vicksburg, the nephew of the late Mrs. Dr. C. K. Marshall and an own cousin of Mrs. Annie DeMoss, the helper of all the Methodist preachers whose pastorates fall in Vicksbourg. Although the family were Episcopalians, yet the impressions made upon him by the Methodists in early years revived in the last hours of his life, and his dying request was that a Methodist preacher should say the last words over his lifeless body. It revived in my own mind the comradeship of my dear Mississippi brethren.

O, how home-sick we all get over here. No man can ever break the association and strong ties of twenty-one years comradeship without snapping heartstrings. Good-bye, for a little while, we hope just for a little while.

San-Antonio, Texas., Oct. 7, 1909.

THE WORKING OF THE UNLIMITED PASTORATE UP NORTH.

Some among us are ready to follow our Northern brethren in any and all of their radical changes in Methodist policy. It is enough for such to know that the Northern Methodists have done a thing. We have been told often by these dear brethren that "the removal of the time limit" has worked wondrously well "up North." We have known for some time that such was not the case, and we beg now to call attention to the matter as it "worked" at the recent session of the Illinois Conference, held at Mattoon, Ill., a few days ago. We quote from a letter written from the Conference by the correspondent of the Illinois State-Register, one of the leading dailies published at the capital of the "Sucker State." The letter bears unmistakable marks of having been written by a member of the Conference and is as follows:

"The culminating moment of the Illinois Conference of the Methodist Church at Mattoon was, of course, the reading of the appointments. This is always so. In many instances, however, the presiding Bishop insists that the superintendents shall confer with the preachers in his district and make no change without the preacher's knowledge and consent. It frequently happens that in reading the appointments not a dozen men are surprised to learn where they have been assigned in the private session of the last cabinet meeting of the Bishop and district superintendents.

"But a score or more of men were completely dazed at announcements made from the pulpit by Bishop Goodsell at Mattoon on Monday afternoon last. Men who have been long and usefully employed in the service of the church were among that number. There was intense anxiety all morning, and that kind of anxiety that bodes no good to the itinerancy, and for the first time in a quarter of a century a dozen men declared after the session to the superintendents that they would not go to the places assigned—one, A. P. Stover, doing the unusual thing of rising in his place when his name was read off for an appointment to which his attention had not been called, and indicating the judgment of the superintendents that he had begun to go down in the grade toward superannuation—requested that his name be placed on the list of superannuates. It was both pathetic, as well as heroic.

Of the 306 appointments made it will be seen that more than one-half of the Conference are on the move. The six-year men have disappeared and only fonr (and two of them district superintendents) are in the five-year class. Thirteen start in on a fourth year service; thirty-egiht, a third term; (and these from a list of 100 possible candidates who had completed the second year), while seventy-eight of the 137 men who completed the first year, are "still faint yet pnrsuing." From the high rank of completing six years, on down to two, 173 men will soon stand before new congregations and begin over again the uncertainties of new pastorates.

Starting in on first year	173
Starting in on second year	78
Starting in on third year	38
Starting in on fourth year	13
Starting in on fifth year	4

The signs of lengthened pastorates because of the removal of the time limit are not visible. Its restoration to a three-year term would greatly help, but would not altogether remove the trouble. It would help in that another year might be tolerated by both people and pastor, if at the end of that term each could be assured of a change for better—or for worse. At any rate, "the worse" would not be forever. Changed heart, on the part of both people and pastor, instead of change of pastor and place, as suggested by one of the district superintendents, might be a better remedy.

But the earlier Methodism was much more on wheels than that of to-day. Perhaps the problem of uniting an itinerant ministry and a settled pastorate is impossible even if not undesirable.

Truly here were changes enough to satisfy the most ardent lover of "change for change's sake."

Perhaps after all, it were better to bear the ills we have than fly to others we know not of.

What will our Northern brethren do? It is hard for them to go back on what they have done, and it is still harder to go forward with what they have. That is the trouble with radical changes. It is easy to make mistakes, but it is very difficult to correct them.

[We join Dr. Lovett, from whose paper, the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, the above is taken, in saying that we of the South, "are doing very well, under the four-year rule."—Ed.]

AZTEC, NEW MEXICO.

By Rev. W. M. Johnson.

According to promise made to friends in Mississippi while there recently on a visit, I will write to the Advocate. It had been more than two years since I had seen my native state, every inch of which is dear to me. The one thing that impressed me most was the rapid advance the towns of Mississippi have made in building. Perhaps the West is being boosted as no other part of the union, but I see no special inducement to attract any one away from the South, unless it is for health reasons. My advice to every young farmer there is to buy a farm at once. Land all over the North and West is high and out here is going up by bounds. The same will soon be true of the South and now is the time to get a home there.

I had a very pleasant visit with my parents and loved ones in Mississippi. The only unpleasant feature was the heat, which was very noticeable to one having spent two years away in an altitude over a mile high. The short time spent with our old congregation at Eupora and Maben was pleasant indeed. Eupora shows many signs of prosperity in splendid new residences and many substantial business houses. I rejoiced with the people of Maben when I had the privilege of worshiping in their neat brick church, which takes the place of the one destroyed by the cyclone during my pastorate.

On Sept. 13, with a glad heart for having met loved ones once more, and yet sad with the parting, I turned my face westward. I was soon out of the heat and dust, and as I approached the mountains they presented a beautiful view, having just been covered with a mantle of snow. I was yet to travel for two days over rugged mountains, and was glad indeed to get back to the "land of the big, red apples," as this country has properly been called.

Our trees are bending with as fine apples as the world can produce. People are busy on every side harvesting their fruit and storing away their crops for the winter.

Mrs. Johnson and the three boys were left behind to get their visit out. I am trying to do "light house-keeping," but some of it is too light and some too heavy. I manage to get one square meal a dsy outside though, and am trying to be patient, but I long for the home-coming of the rest of the family.

We had a prosperous time last year along all lines, and enter our second year here joyously and hopefully. Pray for us.

"PAYING THE PREACHER."

Dear Doctor Boswell: It seems that my little articles under the above-named subject have borne some fruit. I shall not be unkind enough to say that the "hit man has yelped." I am glad that comment has been made on the subject. It only shows that the subject needs comment. That is just what I thought. If I have been the humble instrument of bringing out abler writers than myself, whether they agree with me or not, then I am satisfied. I wrote both my little articles on that subject under an impulse that I was correct. I have not changed my opinion. I accord every man a perfect right to his opinion. I am not disposed to "argufy" the matter. After some experience, and rather more observation, I put down on paper what I wanted to say and went on. If it provoked discussion, all right, and if not all right.

I have enjoyed what my friends have written on the subject. I thank them. I pass on and shall not fight back. Yet I am still firm in my conviction that our system of appointments is just where our Church differs from the other churches and it is just where our strength and success lie. And I am still firm in my conviction that this thing of "preachers fishing after appointments" and "laymen fishing after preachers" is hurting our Church just at this point. It ought to be stopped. It is this evil at which I am striking. Sincerely, W. A. BELK.

WERE THE PROPHETS INSPIRED?

By Rev. G. A. Guice.

Some weeks ago I asked this question through the columns of the Adovcate, based on some remarks made by Dr. Jno. M. Moore at the Seashore. Since that time I have received a letter from him in which he says he did not mean by what he said at the campground to be understood as not believing that the prophets were inspired, for, he says, he does believe that they spoke by inspiration and he believes this as much so as any man.

I am pleased to be able to give this to the press, for I have held Dr. Moore in very high esteem; and it gave me pain to believe that one occupying the position which he does was not in harmony with the church. So it gives me pleasure to know that I mistook his meaning.

OLD CHINA.

By Rev. John T. Lewis.

Under the above caption Dr. A. P. Parker, for thirty-five years a missionary in China, gives to us a most able and interesting article in the October number of our "Methodist Review." Any Southern Methodist, who prides himself with being abreast of the times, cannot afford to be void of the information this article furnishes. Fifty cents sent to Smith & Lamar, agents, Nashville, Tenn., will put this October number of the "Methodist Review" in your hands. This article alone, to say nothing of the remaining good articles, is worth more than the yearly price of the "Review."

Dr. Parker discusses his subject under four heads: (1) The Anti-Opium Campaign; (2) Educational Reform; (3) Establishment of Constitutional Government, and (4) Emancipation of the Women. He writes as one who speaks with first-hand information. It makes one sit up quick and straight to read of such facts as his pen records. And, too, his soul is stirred and he feels like saying, "Glory to God in the highest."

CAMP MEETING HISTORY.

By Rev. Rob't B. Downer.

Not long since a letter came to my home written by Rev. T. B. Holloman, of the Mississippi Conference, imploring my aid to help rescue from oblivion the camp meeting history of our Conference territory.

Until May, 1894, St. Tammany Parish and all of the State of Louisiana north of Lakes Maurepas and Pontchartrain, and east of the Mississippi river, except the city of Baton Rouge, was part of the Mississippi Conference territory. When a small child, about the year 1845-6 or 7, while resident in the city of New Orleans (my parents, members of Poydras Street Charge), some Methodists planned for a camp meeting across Lake Pontchartrain, near Madisonville, on the Tchefuncta river. Railroads, telegrams and areoplanes had not as yet become subject to man's will, as willing servants of our Southland. A vast expanse of water must be crossed to reach the pine woods of St. Tammany Parish. Small sail vessels brought wood, charcoal and cotton, and carried freight both ways. At that time a lively line of industry was being carried on a few miles south of Covington—brick making. Large covered barges were used to convey the brick, towed by steam tugs, and were towed back empty. Some of these empty return barges were chartered to convey tenters and baggage to the camp ground. As a little boy, I was passenger with parents and others on one of these brick barges. I suppose I observed about all that a lively boy could see. I find, however, a memory blank about all but three vivid things: "The alligators of the Tchefuncta river;" "the bright camp pine-knot fires," and "a boy (William Deacon) climbing to the top of a tall pine tree." "Our fathers! where are they?" Who can come to my aid? Possibly some aged person yet lives in or about Madisonville, Covington or New Orleans who remembers said camp meeting, preachers present, days of encampment, work accomplished in matter of souls saved, and impress made upon that section of country. Glad I will be, to be informed of all in their power to tell.

Long Beach, Miss.

FROM AN OLD RECORD-BOOK.

By Rev. W. B. Lewis.

There has come into my hands an old book in which was kept some records of the church in Moss Point many years ago. The church was then in the Alabama Conference, and was called "Live Oak Church." The pastor was the Rev. Moses E. Butt. There is an account of the trial and expulsion of a member for drunkenness and profanity. On the day of the trial the accused made a written confession, and prayed for mercy and pardon, but they turned him out. The names of the accused and of the committee of trial are recorded. I note in the minutes of the church conference one question was: "Has any member of the church been guilty of a violation of our rules and usages?" The complaint against the brother expelled first came up in church conference. This was in 1867. In 1871 the church had passed into the Mississippi Conference, its name changed to Moss Point, N. B. Phillips, preacher-in-charge, and W. W. Hurst, presiding elder. There were then eight male and eighteen female members. Soon these records are dropped and the book became simply a cash account book. The receipts and disbursements seem to have been faithfully kept by the treasurer of the church until 1880, when the book closes with the following lines:

"Good-by, old book.
By hook or crook,
I've kept you straight
During 1888.

"And now, at last,
Your time is past;
Though good and true,
You'll no longer do."

This may not be first-class poetry, but it is about as good as that of "Observer" in "Elderitis," in your issue of Sept. 23.

Speaking of "Elderitis," I have a communication from one of our preachers attributing that article to me. I did not write it, but I think I know who did, and if I am correct in my supposition he is not a preacher, simply an "Observer," but a good one.

INDUSTRIAL INSURANCE AS A FACTOR IN THE PROMOTION OF TEMPERANCE.

One factor in promoting the temperance movement in Germany is the Workmen's Insurance Corporations. Insurance against sickness and old age is there obligatory and the financial losses caused by insuring those who injure their health with alcohol is receiving serious attention.

A lecture on this subject by Dr. Weymann, one of the Government Councillors points out the following facts.

1. Every variation in public health is a matter of profit or loss in insurance economy.

2. Alcoholism increases the cost of insurance by leading, indirectly, to diseases of the stomach, liver and nervous system and directly by promoting tuberculosis, sexual and nerve diseases. It increases the liability to accidents and renders them more serious. It lessens a man's desire to work, and his readiness to pay his insurance fee and besides injures his posterity.

3. To bring about these results it is not at all necessary that a man should drink to intoxication.

4. Alcoholism is one of the most serious sources of injury to public health and it is directly to the interest of the insurance business to fight against the same.

5. Radical improvement can only be expected by a change in the opinions and customs of the people. —Scientific Temperance Federation.

"Power for Service."

BY REV. J. B. LAWRENCE,

Corresponding Secretary, Board of Missions, Baptist Convention of Louisiana. Editor of Baptist Chronicle, Published at Alexandria, La.

This is a book of 270 pages, printed on heavy paper, and finely bound in cloth. It discusses in a clear and forcible way one of the great questions of the day. In these days men are preaching a practical gospel, impressing the fact that "we are saved for service." This book discusses "Power for Service," or the secret by which saved men do the work of the Lord. It is written in a pleasing style, and cannot fail to interest and benefit all who have any desire to become one of the Lord's co-workers. It is to the credit of the author that in the very first paragraph of the book he sets forth very distinctly and truly what our Lord meant when he said to the disciples: "Tarry ye at Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." This is the key-note of the book.

RESOLUTIONS BY SHREVEPORT AUXILIARY

We sadly miss from our ranks our dear, kind Mrs. S. B. McCutchen, who left us Aug. 19, 1909, to join the hosts of the redeemed.

In every relation of life, as daughter, sister, wife, mother, friend and Christian, she was a true woman. When the W. F. M. S. was organized in 1884, at Mansfield, by the Louisiana Conference of the M. E. Church, South, Mrs. McCutchen was elected treasurer. She unhesitatingly accepted the call and was true to the trust until a few years ago, when declining health necessitated her resignation.

To all the calls of her church and home she ever responded gladly. Truly, the motto of W. F. M. S. can be applied to her beautiful life of consecration—"She hath done what she could."

Mrs. McCutchen was a faithful member of our Society for twenty-five years, and whereas, God in his infinite wisdom, has lifted her to higher fields of usefulness, we as a Society, have resolved,

1. That we smile through our tears in submission to His holy will—our smiles are for joy at her glad entrance into glorious life, our tears are the human expression of our sorrow, and that we will see her no more in our midst.

2. That our tenderest sympathy is extended to the bereaved family with the hope that they, one and all, may be able to exclaim in their anguish, "We bow our heads; he giveth his beloved sleep."

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, a copy placed on the minutes of Shreveport Auxiliary Society, and a copy each be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate and the Nashville Christian Advocate and Woman's Missionary Advocate.

MISSIONARY INSTITUTE OF THE WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Not often does realization fulfill our anticipations. During the Institute recently held in Meridian, the lectures and addresses given by Miss Davies surpassed all expectation; the courtesy and hospitality of the Meridian people measured up to the highest standard; the weather was delightful; all that could be desired; but—is it not too bad there must be added a note of disappointment—so few women of the District availed themselves of this opportunity for gaining information and inspiration. Friends, you do not know what you missed. Enterprise, Quitman and Shubuta were the only places outside of Meridian that were represented.

The Institute was pleasantly inaugurated, Saturday afternoon, at the parsonage home of Mrs. La-Prade. A mite-box opening by the ladies of Central Auxiliary; a heart talk from Miss Davies about "love-gifts"—God's gifts to us, ours, to him; delicious refreshments daintily served; an hour of social intercourse; these made us more in love with one another, and set our hearts in tune for the morrow's services.

Through the courtesy of Dr. Black, the pastor, East End Church was offered Miss Davies for the Sunday morning service. Here a full house greeted her, and listened to her discourse upon "The Transformed Life," based upon Paul's exhortation in Romans xii:2.

All subsequent services were held in Central Church. Sunday afternoon, an address to young men and young women; Sunday night, a public address upon "Stewardship and Missions." In connection with this subject, she brought out clearly and strongly this thought. As stewards we are accountable to God, not only for what we give, but also for what we spend. We are prone to pat ourselves approvingly when we think of what we give to church enterprises, forgetting that when called to render a final account of our stewardship there will be in God's book, besides this record of giving, another page, a record of spending for our own pleasures. How will the two compare?

Monday morning and afternoon were devoted to Institute work—discussion of topics of vital interest to our work. These sessions were full of information as to ways and means of doing better work, and of inspiration to attempt greater things for the cause of missions. The last hour of the afternoon session was "Children's Hour." At this time Miss Davies told the little folks stories of child-life in Korea, impressing forcibly upon their minds and hearts this truth, that Christ has other sheep beyond our own land, and, that, if we love him, we must obey his command to feed those sheep and care for those lambs.

"The Evangelization of the World in this Generation" was the subject presented on Monday night. "The Church," she declared, has arrived at another Kadesh-barnea; the spies have brought back a good report; the question for us is—not can we—not shall we—but will we go on to possess the land—the world for Christ in this generation?"

By request of President Beeson, on Tuesday morning, Miss Davies lectured to the entire student-body—the boys and the girls—of the two colleges. Her theme was, "What will you do with your Life?" A grand subject, presented by an inspiring speaker to a receptive, responsive audience; such a combination must surely produce rich results.

Altogether the Institute was inspiring; the keynote of every meeting, better service to our King. I hope the entire Meridian District may yet receive the uplift through those who attended.

We women of the Foreign Missionary Society are especially grateful to Dr. Black, of East End Church; to Dr. La Prade, of Central Church, and to Brother Lewis, our presiding elder, for many courtesies, and for helping by their presence and influence to make this Institute a success.

Report of Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Mississippi Conference, for Second Quarter, 1909-10.

The treasurer's report for the second quarter is before us. Half of the Conference year has passed and the pledge is far from being brought up to date By this time at least half of the three thousand should have been paid. Let every energy be redoubled during October for the enlistment of new members and a great awakening of the whole Church. Let every member of each auxillary adopt as their watchword the admonition of that splendid Japanese Christian educator, Joseph Hardy Neesima, "Let us advance upon our knees."

W. H. M. S.

PEARL RIVER, LA.

Brother A. V. Peters began a protracted meeting on the 15th instant, assisted by Brother A. I. Townsley, from Second Church, New Orleans. Much interest was manifested from the first, and much good was accomplished. One member was received into full membership who had joined sometime previously at the Slidell church. Some were detained at home from sickness in the family, but the attendance was large for the place.

On Friday night Mrs. A. I. Townsley gave an interesting talk to the W. H. M. S. There was quite a large congregation. Mrs. Townsley made some fine points on the W. H. M. S. work of the church, stressing the great fact of the broad connectional idea and the individuality of the workers which made every member a factor in the grand scheme which is the basal rock of the whole organization. Noticing the pictures in the church of the mission homes, schools, and some of the workers, she said, "I am glad to know that the little auxiliary here is coming up to the front and grasping the full meaning of the blessedness of being in such a crowd of noble women as are enrolled in this great army." And she had heard of us doing some fine local work, also, which was quite praiseworthy. She compared Miss Belle to Deborah, inasmuch as she, like Deborah, is a prophetess and her prophecy is that if they will work like she did they will win the battle for the Lord. Deborah also had the pen of a ready writer and the tongue of a ready speaker, and so like Deborah, may have had a Zebulon along down the line of her ancestors.

Mrs. Townsley was very pointed in some of her remarks and called on some of the hearers to read a verse to prove her references in the Bible. In comparing the work of the W. H. M. S. and the Ladies Aid Societies she said although the latter were doing good work in the church, there was a narrowness in the work that minimized the whole object of their efforts and gave it a selfish aspect and took away the enthusiasm of personal participation of the connectional thought that finds so much inspiration in each effort or duty performed for the good of all in working for Christ. Mrs. Townsley made some strong points on tithing and the wonderful blessing the Lord poured out on all who followed this grand Bible law of giving a tenth of what they had to the Lord. She also stressed the work of the young folks and children of bringing them up to the full measure of their capabilities in doing work for the church and the blessed Master, and in considering themselves as factors in the great work as well as their elders, and proving by Christ's own word that they were not to be forbidden, for they belong to the kingdom. Mrs. Townsley closed her remarks with a fervent prayer that God would bless this work and all who were there for his glory. Some one remarked that "Mrs. Townsley could preach as well as her husband." All were certainly "edified," if that is a proof of good preaching.

Brother Peters continued the meeting until Sunday night. The "good tokens" will come some day to the workers in this meeting.

WHAT A BLIND GIRL SAW.

Many years ago I was told the following touching story. Never having heard it again, it would seem a thousand pities to lose sight of it. This gentleman who told it vouches for its truth, and gave me also the name of the clergyman who was connected with the incident.

A man and woman, very respectably dressed, were making their way to a certain country-town in the south of England. They had with them a young girl, apparently about twelve or fourteen years of age, and she was blind. Entering the street, they observed a clergyman who was evidently waiting for the coach by which they intended their daughter should travel.

"Beg your pardon, sir, but are you going by this coach as far as ———?"

"Yes. I am going a little farther; but why do you ask?"

"Our daughter," said the mother, "is blind, as you see, sir, and, noticing that you were a clergyman, going probably in the same direction, we thought you might do us the great favor to see her out at ———, where some one would be waiting for her. Her father and I would feel she was quite safe in your hands, sir, if you would be so kind as to see she did not go past it."

"Oh, certainly, with great pleasure. I will take every care of her, and see her safely out of the coach when we get there."

Shortly after the coach came up, and the clergyman placed his charge upon the seat opposite to him next to the door. They had not gone far when he discovered that she was a bright and intelligent little Christian, much in advance of her years.

"We are driving through a very beautiful country just now?" said he. "The grass is so fresh and lovely, the fruit trees in the gardens we pass are out in full bloom, and in the background the landscape is simply charming. I am so sorry you can't see it. Don't you wish you could?"

"Sometimes I do, sir," she said, "but then I think that whilst my eyes are closed to all the beautiful things of nature, they are also closed to a great many wicked things in the world that would break my heart if I saw them."

Wonderful as he thought this answer was from a girl, he was still more surprised by what followed. He went on to say:

"Of course, you love the Bible?"

"I do, sir."

"But now tell me which part of it do you love the best?"

"I love it all, sir."

"But surely, there are some parts of it you love better than all the rest?"

"I love it all, sir, but if I might choose, I think I love the last three chapters of the Revelation the best."

The Book of Revelation, thought he, is to most people a sealed book, in which are things mysterious and hard to be understood. Whatever can this mere child know about them? He was then but a young minister himself, and some of them were certainly beyond him.

"Do tell me," said he, "what you love so much in the last three chapters of the Book of Revelation?"

"Well, sir, in the twentieth chapter, I see Satan bound, in the twenty-first I see the Lamb married, and in the twenty-second I see Christ reigning."

The gentleman has for many years been eminent as a divine, but it is doubtful if to the end of his days he could have much improved upon this description. He wished she had been traveling farther, and, being a humble-minded Christian, would gladly have sat longer at the feet of his blind professor. But her destination was reached and she had to depart with her friend who had come to meet her.—W. C. M., in Kingdom Tidings.

MOTHER.

She was born in another country, and there spent her youth and her young womanhood. She and her husband came to America, bringing with them a group of children, numbering a full half-dozen, and the number increased as the years in America went by, until there were twelve.

Before the youngest ones were out of the cradle, grandchildren began to appear; and when she died there were twelve living children and fifty grandchildren. Fifty-five years of married life, more than a half a century of motherhood, told most that was to be told of her life story.

Immediately on coming to America the husband had gone forth to work. He had learned the language of the new land, and read it as well as he spoke it. The children grew up in the public schools, and hardly remembered that they were of foreign blood, save as they talked the language of the Old World to mother at home.

Mother never learned English. Mother never went out. The children were too many and too small. Mother washed a dozen faces, more or less, and got the children ready for school and for Sunday School; but never went herself.

Mother sewed on numberless little white frocks in which pieces were spoken and songs were sung, but mother never had any clothes of her own for public appearance. Mother looked at the pictures in the schoolbooks, and heard her children and grandchildren read from them, and gradually came to know the meaning of the words they said; but she answered always in the speech of her childhood.

It would have been different if, at the outset, she could have gone forth into the new American life with her husband, and learned with him. But she had stayed with the babies while he was learning. And so the years went by till old age came on, and she slipped away as unobtrusively as she had lived.

They gathered at the funeral, the twelve children, the fifty grandchildren, and a little group of those who had known her, and a much larger company of those who had known the family. They sang a hymn in the tongue she had known—a hymn she and her husband had sung together every night of their married life. The children knew all the verses, for they had heard it sung a thousand times and more. A friend played the piano, and the minister, who knew a little about foreign tongues, looked over with one of the sons, and sang as well as he could.

The minister had been in the home now and then for several years, and had come to know something of the old lady's life.

He spoke of it as best he could. He told how mother had denied herself that her children might learn and enjoy; how she had taught them honesty, piety, sincerity, and faith, and had lived her secluded life and passed on; and he exhorted them, as they had attained to what they were through her self-denial, to be true to the lessons she had taught. He spoke of her patience, her devotion, her prayers; he recalled her days of labor and her nights of watching, and above all, the daily, hourly love that found its life in losing it, and in the bearing of the burdens of others fulfilled the law of Christ.

It was a simple word, yet to those who heard, it seemed to set upon a pedestal of appreciation the poor and cramped little woman who had lived and died almost unnoticed.

One by one the children called at the parsonage to thank the minister for his words. The calls were not the perfunctory things that sometimes follow funerals. This was the substance of what they said:

"We thank you for the beautiful words you said about our mother. We knew, but we never realized. We let ourselves grow out of her life. We permitted her to remain behind while we pressed on. All the beautiful things you said of her were true, and a thousand others; yet we hardly realized it. She was so quiet, so uncomplaining! Oh, if we could only tell her, as we never did tell her, how beautiful her life appears to us now!"

The story is a simple one. If it enters any other home where daily love and self-denial pass almost unrecognized—love her and tell her so.—Youth's Companion.

IS THIS DEMOCRATIC?

In a column of queries in the Baptist Record of recent date, the editor in answering one of the questions makes a statement in these words: "It is the custom among Baptist Churches that one opposing vote bars an applicant from Church membership."

We have been under the impression that as our Baptist brethren boasted of their democratic form of government, the rule of the majority, as in other democratic governments prevailed. It seems that such is not the case. If Brother Bailey is right, and, of course, he is, it is possible to keep an applicant out of Baptist Churches forever. Is that democratic? To us it looks like lodging power in the minority.

AS TO THE LAW OF DIVORCE.

A brother who declined to officiate at the marriage of a couple, one of whom had been divorced, giving as his reason, the law of Christ on the subject, and likewise the law of our Church as found in our Discipline, paragraph 139, was right.

Another brother, who took the position in a serious argument that when a man or woman is divorced, no matter what the cause, all civil, moral and spiritual obligations, are canceled, and another marriage is legal; and that a minister has a perfect right to officiate, was wrong.

The above paragraphs are in answer to direct questions. No argument we think is necessary.

In reply to the next question: 'Does a party who marries another who has a living wife or husband at the time of marriage come under the law prohibiting the solemnization of the rite of matrimony?" We present an actual case: A poor man in his youth married a poor young woman. They lived happily together many years. The man amassed a vast fortune, got to attending theatres, was attracted by an actress, and forgot the wife of his youth. He sought and obtained a divorce, though his wife was good and true. He married the actress. They are living in adultery. One of our preachers, according to the Discipline, could not officiate at such a marriage. According to the Scriptures, the divorced wife, who is innocent, would not be guilty of adultery should she marry another man, and one of our preachers would be justified in officiating at the wedding.

ENTERTAINMENT OF MR. TAFT.

Perhaps no man was ever entertained in public oftener than Mr. Taft inside of four weeks. He is making a tour of the country which will require thirteen thousand miles of travel. The citizens wherever he stops do him honor, and, if possible, publicly entertain him. The citizens of Jackson, Miss., like all others, will honor the President. They have been making ready for it ever since it was definitely known that he would pay the city a visit. A banquet, as is customary, will be provided in his honor. Contrary to public expectation, and in spite of the general sentiment against both the public and private use of intoxicating liquors, the committee, known as "The Citizens' Executive Committee," having charge of "plans for the entertainment," have determined to serve wine on the occasion.

When it became known that wine would be served at the banquet the Ministers' Association of Jackson addressed a respectful petition to the Citizens' Committee asking that the use of wine be omitted. To this request, the secretary, as authorized by a majority of the Committee, replied, saying: "The Committee cannot grant the petition, and the programme as originally arranged will be carried out." And wine will publicly flow in prohibition Mississippi! The petition represented the Presbyterians, Baptists and Methodists of Jackson, and doubtless many of no Church who are opposed to the use of liquor. It is but right to say that when the Committee decided the matter, the vote was divided, with several members absent, among them Governor Noel, who has always been a staunch and consistent prohibitionist.

This "Citizens' Committee," thus defying public sentiment and disregarding the petition of the representatives of the churches, defends its action on the ground that the banquet is a private affair "for which the people neither of Jackson nor Mississippi are responsible." The author of that proposition must have taken a circumlocutory route, and be gifted in the art of tergiversation, in order to reach such a conclusion. Plain, common sense is only able to see that an affair, open to everybody who pays the price, cannot be a private thing. Mr. Taft certainly understands that he is being entertained by the public, and will take the leading citizens—who parade with him by day and banquet with him by night, as representatives of the people.

We understand Mr. Taft never drinks liquor of any kind. Is this banquet of wine in a prohibition State arranged to tempt him and put him on record? Should Mr. Taft go contrary to his custom at this private banquet, the proliquorites on the Citizens' Committee will make public use of his drinking for all that it would be worth.

And what will be the attitude of Governor Noel—the prohibition Governor of Mississippi? Can he, as the executive head of the State, and supposed to take the lead in doing honor to the President while a guest of the State, be relegated to the shades of private life during the banquet? And, if as Governor, he gives his presence at a banquet of wine, will he not virtually do violence to the prohibition sentiment of the State—yea, to the spirit of the laws of Mississippi?

If the Committee's programme is adhered to, we hope Governor Noel will have the courage to remain away from the banquet. He will be due that much to himself and the people he represents.

The majority of that Committee should bear the blame and the shame of giving to the nation's president the wine cup!

THE RELIGIOUS CENSUS—A LESSON.

Statistics, though dull things in general, when made to do duty for or against the polity and policy of government in Church or State, awaken lively interest. For example: The religious census recently made public shows that the rate of increase in the membership of the Churches of the Congregational order was much larger than in the Churches of the Episcopal order. This fact has prompted the question: "Should Churches be governed by Bishops, by elders, or by the people?" The answer, expressed in figures furnished by the Government census, is of course, in favor of the Congregational system.

The two Congregational orders named to make the showing are the Baptists and the Disciples (commonly called Campbellites). The rate of increase in the Congregational Church is not mentioned notwithstanding it is as democratic as the Church of the Disciples, and "more hospitable to the truth," according to some of the modern lights, than is Episcopal Methodism. Why it was left out in the comparison we do not know.

According to our thinking, something besides the form of government should be taken into consideration in determining the relative efficiency of churches. In past decades Episcopacy seems not to have stood in the way of Methodist success. It does not now in places where the law and spirit of Methodism are observed. Everybody knows that the unparalleled success of our Church has been attributed to our itinerant ministry under the direction of wise and consecrated Bishops. Something less than one hundred years ago a very large number of Methodists, under the lead of strong men, thought they could improve our system and increase its efficiency, but failing in their efforts, withdrew and organized a Methodism on "republican principles." They have maintained their democracy to this day, but in vast sections of our country and in many other parts of the world they are unknown. Episcopal Methodism is world-wide. These Methodist Protestants, like the Congregationalists, were not counted in the make-up of the verdict against Episcopacy.

That there is a tendency in all the Churches towards the rule of "the people"—the Roman Catholic Church itself, not being wholly unaffected, is not denied. Episcopal Methodism has made some strides in that direction—especially did the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, take a long step towards the rule of the people, when in 1866 the ministry, who was in sole control, voluntarily consented to share the governing power with the laity. With this fact before us, we are bound to conclude that, if Episcopal Methodists are not to-day maintaining the rate of increase realized in the past, some other cause than Episcopacy operates to hinder.

Before the final conclusion is reached we think it would be wise for those who are studying the question to inquire what part "higher criticism" and irrelevant preaching have had to do in the matter. Certainly the measure cannot be determined with exactness, but that Presbyterians (classed among those who are governed by elders) and Episcopal Methodists have been troubled is well known, and it goes without saying that progress has been retarded on this account. So far as the number of conversions and additions to the Church are concerned the increase is greatest where the higher critics, and liberalizing preachers never go. Local churches that thrive principally by receiving members on certificate may be excepted. The Baptists and Disciples, of all Christians are least troubled about questions that gender strife. If strife they have, it is not about the essentials of religion. Their exemption is not because of popular, or ideal government, but because they preach what they believe to be the Word of God. They raise no doubts among their hearers concerning the foundations of the faith. This cannot be said so confidently of Methodists and Presbyterians. True, speculation among them, or denial of gospel verities is not general, but it has been sufficient to attract attention, to produce discussion in Church councils and to do harm.

We do not question the honesty of those who profess to have come into new light. We believe they desire to do good by liberalizing the gospel. But they do not see that by liberalizing the gospel after their manner its power for good is weakened. It is the truth that saves men—not speculative preaching, nor any special form of Church government.

PARLIAMENTARY USAGE.

Parliamentary Usage of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is a pamphlet of 82 pages, by Rev. J. E. Harrison, president of San Antonio Female College, Texas. It sets forth clearly the method of proceeding in our General Conference. Some usages are peculiar to our law-making body, but in the main they agree with the methods of other great deliberative bodies. All preachers should familiarize themselves with parliamentary practice, for there is no telling when they may be called on to preside over some sort of a meeting, and meetings should be conducted "decently and in order," if they are nothing more than Church Conferences, or country Sunday School conventions. Prospective delegates to the General Conference to meet next May should be learning how to proceed, especially those who are aspiring to something higher. Both preachers and laymen should know how to do things. President Harrison's little book is full of knowledge. It can be had of Smith & Lamar, Nashville, Tenn., or Dallas, Tex., for 25 cents. We thank the author for a copy.

The "Kansas City Journal" is quoted as saying: "People often wonder, particularly those who have traveled for hundreds of miles through the corn belt, what becomes of the corn which is grown every year. In the year 1908, when the total crop was 2,636,000,000 bushels, 241,000,000 bushels were consumed in flour and grist mill products, 8,000,000 bushels in the manufacture of starch, 9,000,000 for malt liquors, 17,000,000 bushels in the production of distilled liquors, 40,000,000 bushels for glucose, 190,000,000 bushels for export and 13,000,000 bushels for seed, making a total of 518,000,000 bushels or 19.3 per cent. of the entire crop. The maining 80.7 per cent. or 2,118,000,000 bushels, seems to have been used almost entirely for feeding." It wil be observed that 26,000,000 bushels of the crop went into the manufacture of liquor. That is actually a large amount of breadstuff to throw away, but not large enough for the basis of an argument against prohibition. Sometimes our liquor friends tell the farmers that if prohibition prevails they will bring down the price of corn and lose money. How much would they lose if the liquor-makers bought no more corn? A little calculation will show that a little less than one per cent is manufactured into beer and whisky. That is to say: Of every one hundred bushels of corn less than one bushel is used to make liquor. If corn sells at fifty cents a bushel (that is about what it brings to the grower in the great corn region) the farmer loses less than half a cent. At that rate, prohibition would not reduce many corn raisers to poverty. Liquor orators must find some other argument against prohibition.

PERSONALS.

Bishop Candler will hold the Louisiana Conference, Dec. 8. at Alexandria. The presidency of Bishop Candler we dare say will be agreeable to all the brethren.

Rev. W. W. Moore, Laurel, Miss., sends us ten names for the paper. We greatly appreciate this evidence of Brother Moore's work, and trust the paper will do the good for which he hopes and prays.

Rev. J. W. Rogers, Main Street, Water Valley, has been blessed recently with a good meeting. Rev. W. L. Broom did most of the preaching. The church is prospering. Brother Rogers has raised a club of ten for the Advocate.

Next Monday, Oct. 25, Rev. Wm. Schuhle will begin revival services at Ponchatoula. He will be assisted by Rev. A. W. Turner, of Opelousas, well known as good help in such meetings—and, in other meetings where sin and satan are to be opposed.

Rev. W. G. Harbin, who is now at Carrollton Avenue Church, and is having success, several conversions having occurred, will begin Sunday, Oct. 24, in revival services with Rev. A. S. Lutz, at Felicity Street Church. Brother Harbin is a fine revivalist.

Rev. M. H. Moore sends us an account of his meeting at Poplarville, Miss., and with it a list of eleven subscribers to the Advocate. It often happens that the Advocate is helped by revivals: It never fails if the preacher keeps the two things in mind.

We are glad to learn that the son of our Brother W. J. Wood, of Paris Circuit, who has had a severe spell of sickness is improving and able now to be up part of the time. Brother Wood says he will go to Conference with a "good report, spiritual and financial."

We learn with pleasure that Whitworth College is beginning a very prosperous session. The registration has passed the two hundred mark, and more students have engaged to come soon. The faculty is first class, and everything about Whitworth is inviting. We heartily congratulate Dr. Cooper on his great success.

Rev. J. O. Bennett, Bernice, La., sending money for new subscriptions and renewals for which we thank him, adds these pleasant words: "My work prospers nicely, and will have a splendid report for Conference. Will send other names to Advocate in a few days. You are giving us a splendid paper. May the blessings of the good Lord be upon you and your work."

Miss Ada Parker, who has spent five years in Brazil as a missionary is on furlough, and will spend her rest time with parents and friends in New Orleans. The churches and societies of young people in the city will, no doubt, get the benefit of her observations and experience in well-told lectures, and private talks. She reached home, by way of New York, the early part of last week.

Rev. J. D. Simpson has been greatly blessed in his work on the Ackerman (Miss.) Circuit. He held meetings at all his churches and received thirty persons into membership. He expects to close the year with all claims met in full. He serves a good and loyal people. In his meetings he was assisted by Revs. W. N. Duncan, E. E. Langford, J. W. McGee and J. A. Goad, all of whom did splendid work.

Two brethren, W. L. Duren and Rev. W. N. Duncan, informs us of the serious condition of Rev. J. A. Goad, of the North Mississippi Conference, who is in Memphis where he underwent a surgical operation. Brother Goad sends a request to all the brethren to remember him in their prayers. God forbid that we should sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray for him. May our Father spare his valuable life!

Miss Daisy Davies of the Woman's Board of Missions is now in Mississippi. She was at Brookhaven last week in the Missionary Institute—lectured twice at the church, and once to the young ladies of Whitworth College. This week she is visiting Hattiesburg and Laurel.

For two weeks past Dr. Theo. Copeland, of St. Paul's Church, St. Louis, has been "shut in" with the "grippe." We hope he will recover in time to meet the expectations of the brethren of the Western North Carolina Conference, who have invited him to speak to their Epworth League during their approaching session, Nov. 17, at Hickory, N. C. No doubt they are anticipating something good and wholesome. They will not be disappointed.

This personal note comes to us through a friend: "Gov. Noel of Mississippi has recently made two appointments which have given great satisfaction to many friends. Hon. H. C. Mounger, Port Gibson, was appointed circuit judge and Dr. Cooper, of Newton, Miss., a member of the State Board of Health. These gentlemen are grandsons and sons of Methodist ministers. They were born in parsonages—and educated at Centenary College, of Louisiana. They will honor their positions."

Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Bingham, Carrollton, Miss., have issued invitations to the marriage of their daughter, Louise English, to Mr. James A. Duncan, of Athens, Ala. The marriage will be solemnized at the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Carrollton, at 2 p. m., Thursday, Oct. 28, 1909. We have been honored with a card, and would be pleased to attend, but it is quite out of our power to do so. We wish the happy pair all the blessings needful for this life, and the joys of heaven at last.

Rev. C. C. Miller, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, called at the office on Thursday last. He reports some progress, notwithstanding the boll-weevil has swept the western part of his District and the storm of Sept. 20, devated the timber in the central and eastern sections. But the people are hopeful and the church work moves on. The loss in the cotton crop in some places due to the weevil and storm is estimated at ninety per cent. But God reigns and all is well with the world.

We have received a communication concerning the struggles of a young preacher, etc. No name is attached to the paper. We can only guess who wrote it. Our advice is: put the matter before the presiding elder. If he is a fair-minded man, as we take him to be, he will lay the case before the Bishop, and his brother presiding elders, and a "square deal" will be sure to follow. Not often is a faithful preacher discounted—not often does he become the victim of discrimination. Such is our observation.

Rev. H. M. Ellis, of Brookhaven, has favored the Advocate with an admirable memoir of the late Rev. D. P. Bradford, which will appear as early as practicable. In a private note accompanying the memoir, Brother Ellis informs us that the Brookhaven Church "is in fine condition." If we envy any man on earth, it is the man who preaches once a week to a body of intelligent and ambitious young people—such as Whitworth's body of students that Brother Ellis faces every Sunday. What an opportunity for good

Rev. D. E. Kelly, Purvis, Miss., maintains his record as a worker for the Advocate. He has just sent in twenty-eight new subscriptions, and four renewals, and notifies us that his "round in canvassing for subscribers" is not yet finished, having been called to the bedside of his father "who is dangerously ill at his home near Gloster, Miss." We hope by this time, that the dear old brother, whom we are happy to know, is on the road to recovery. Brother Kelly has had a wonderful year, spiritually, at Purvis, of which he will give us an account sometime in the near future.

Rev. W. W. Jones, Rienzi, Miss., sends us a batch of subscriptions, in addition to twelve previously reported. This good work was accomplished in a section of the country where the Advocate never got a foothold until lately. We hope to retain what we have and gain more. Good revivals have been experienced in Brother Jones' charge and the condition of the church greatly improved. Brother Jones says: "We have been brought under many obligations to Brother H. T. Gaines, of Guntown, for valuable service in meetings. He can't be beat in revival work."

Sunday last was "Old Folks' Day" at Parker Memorial Church. It is a high-day with the good people of that Church. Special arrangements are made to secure the attendance of the old people. Those unable to walk or to hire conveyances, are sent for, the church and the kind-hearted frineds, providing carriages or automobiles for their accommodation. This year, the preacher for the occasion was the venerable Rev. Geo. Jackson who interested and edified his hearers with a good, plain gospel sermon. Blessings on his hoary head, which has always been found in the way of righteousness. Rev. D. L. Mitchell, of Biloxi, Miss., also took part in the services, but what part we are not advised. Brother Mitchell is one of the "Old Folks," and was once publisher of this Advocate.

LESSON FOR OCTOBER 24, 1909.

PAUL A PRISONER BEFORE FESTUS AND AGRIPPA.

Acts xxvi:19-29.

Golden Text: "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day." II. Tim. 1:12.

For two long years Paul was a prisoner at Caesarea. God alone knows why the labors of this great preacher were so suddenly stopped, and why he remained inactive for so long a time. We do know that when he again appeared, his ardor, courage and zeal, was the same as when Felix committed him to prison. During these two years the popularity of Felix, as a governor, steadily waned, until at the instigation of influential Jews he was removed and called to Rome. Porcius Festus was sent to succeed Felix as governor of the Province, and when he came to Caesarea, he remained only three days, when he went to Jerusalem, for there he could learn more of the people over whom he was to rule. There was no change in the attitude of the Jews toward Paul; during these two years their hatred was still alive, only sleeping; and as soon as the new governor came to the city, the high priest and the chief men of the Jews, informed him of their grievance against Paul and made urgent request that he be brought to Jerusalem. If the request was granted, they intended to put the Apostle to death in some secluded place on the road. Festus did not comply with their request, but told them Paul was to be kept at Caesarea; and that in a few days he would return thither, and they could go down and appear as prosecutors in the case. After some ten days, Festus returned to Caesarea, and Paul's enemies must have followed closely, for proceedings against the prisoner began at once. They began by making much the same accusation that had been made before Felix, and as proof was wanting then, it still was wanting. Paul denied every charge, saying that he had committed no offense against the Jewish law, nor any against the Emperor. "Then" said Festus, desiring to please the Jews, "wilt thou go up to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these things before me?" Paul replied that he was there before Caesar's judgment seat, the proper place to be tried. He was innocent, if he was not he was willing to suffer, to the death, if convicted, but he was not guilty and in the face of that fact, it was not legally in the power of any man to send him to another place for trial. Then he spoke the words that consigned him to the work that Jesus had more than once told him he was to do. "Thou must also bear witness of me at Rome." "I appeal unto Ceasar" were the words that put an end to all inferior proceedings against him."

After Festus had conferred with his advisors as to the legality of such an appeal, he said: "As thou hast appealed unto Caesar, unto Caesar shalt thou go." Before he started on his journey to Rome there was still another work for Paul to do; his commission, as told by the Lord to Ananias of Damascus, was "to bear my name before the gentiles and kings and the children of Israel." The children of Israel had heard their message and rejected it, and now comes a king before whom Paul was to preach Jesus. This king was Herod Agrippa: he was descended from the Herods of the time when Jesus was among men. He was king more in name than in authority, for the real government of the people was vested in the Roman procurators and the acts of the King were under the surveillance of the Roman representative.

Paul knew Agrippa, and Agrippa must have heard of Paul, for the cause of Christianity and those who expounded it, was a theme of constant thought and conversation in and about Jerusalem. Festus gave the king a full account of Paul's case, and the ending of it by Paul's appeal to Rome and of his decision to send him there; but he was at a loss how to frame the charge against the prisoner; while the hope that he might be aided in this, was the cause of his drawing the attention of the king. Just here is where the king motioned to Paul with his hand, saying "Paul, thou art permitted to speak for thyself." Paul did not speak for himself, for on this occasion, self must be forgotten, and only referred to incidental to preaching the gospel of Christ to this Jewish king. He recounts his own conversion, showing how he was led to full faith and obedience to the heavenly vision. He told of his first work, preaching the gospel at the very place at which he had persecuted the followers of the gospel. Showing that that was the cause of the Jews going about to kill him. Then he took the real theme of his sermon, which was Christ, his suffering, death and resurrection. So earnest was he, so full of his subject and of the Holy Ghost, that he must have been transformed in his whole demeanor and as Festus looked upon him, he cried out with a loud voice. "Paul, thou art beside thyself, much learning hath made thee mad." No, said Paul, I am not mad, most noble Festus, for I speak the words of truth and soberness, the king here, before whom I speak knoweth of the facts I am relating, for these events, were not done in secret—then to the king, "King Agrippa, believest thou the prophets? I know thou believest." In reply, this Herod was only honest enough with himself to make a brief confession when he said, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." It was only almost, for the gospel light was not to teach a soul so darkened by sin, yet the king was moved in Paul's favor.

Paul's sublime reply served to fasten more firmly, on their minds the passionate words of Christian grace, for Paul was so satisfied with his religion that he wished it for others. Festus could not fully understand the truth and wondered at Paul's manner. Agrippa understood it all, and felt its application to himself, but he was not obedient to the heavenly message; they both agreed that Paul was not guilty, one of them at least felt guilty before God. Paul knew he must go to Rome, he had it from One higher than Agrippa or Festus, or Nero. Jesus Christ was sending him, and it was to be through perils of waters, of shipwreck, of imprisonment; bound, but the Word of God, that he was to take to a benighted people, was not bound. It was this spirit-given of God to Paul, that was to open a new door to Rome. Just at the time when merciless tyranny would reach a climax under the rule of Nero, Paul must appear preaching peace and pardon; opening a rift in the cloud that overhung Rome, through which "The Son of Righteousness might shine." In all of Paul's perils, all persecutions, he had the consolation, that he knew whom he had believed, and the glory of the salvation he received must be told, "Far hence to the Gentiles."

A BOOMERANG ARGUMENT.

It is not an uncommon thing to hear people who mean well, but are poorly informed, argue that COCA-COLA, the popular temperance drink, must contain cocaine, whisky or morphine or some other narcotic drug, because it keeps them awake. Such people are ignorant of the fact that narcotics do not keep you awake: they put you to sleep. Cocaine, morphine, whisky and other narcotic drugs depress the nerve cells of the brain and produce sleep. In large doses they produce unconsciousness. On the other hand, COCA-COLA, tea and coffee, all of which owe their refreshing property to a substance called caffeine, are refreshing to the nerve cells of the brain, and therefore increase the activity of the mind, thus keeping you awake instead of putting you to sleep.

But why argue a matter which has already been settled by chemical analysis? The Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry of the Agricultural Department at Washington, has analyzed this temperance drink, and reports that it does not contain narcotics. The official State Chemists of Georgia, Virginia, Texas, Minnesota, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Alabama, and many other States, give the same verdict. The Professors of Chemistry of Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Tulane University, University of South Carolina, Columbia University, University of Illinois, and other leading educational institutions throughout the United States, give the same verdict. The Chemists of the city Board of Health of numerous cities throughout the country, as well as the leading Commercial Chemists, give the same verdict. All agree in giving COCA-COLA a clear bill of health. COCA-COLA is not only not injurious, but is much superior to tea and coffee as a refreshing beverage, in that it is free from tannic acid—the only material which makes tea and coffee at all objectionable.

For free booklet of chemical analyses of COCA-COLA, address The Coca-Cola Company, Atlanta, Ga.

MAYHEW NOTES.

Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, of the Columbus District is completing "with honors" his quadrennium as presiding elder. Resolutions highly complimentary to him were passed by his latest District Conference. It is conceded generally that he has entered a successful record and rendered a most useful service.

At Mayhew we have experienced lately an exceedingly good meeting. The brief visitation of Rev. T. H. Dorsey of West Point was much enjoyed by this congregation He is honored for his work's sake and personal worth, and for the fact of being pastor at a church of excellence above ordinary.

Revival services were conducted recently at the Curtis Church near to Mayhew; good congregations were present, and there were a number of adult baptisms. Twelve new names were added to the membership and fourteen infants were baptized. A Sunday School has sprung up and a prayer meeting of interest is well attended.

Honorable mention many times is due to the helper at revival services and this mention in some instances is entirely omitted. "I have seen 600 conversions this year," said a very excellent preacher at a Conference report. It developed later that a Presbyterian evangelist had in fact been the principal worker, but no mention was made, simply by oversight. A large "falling off" occurred in that territory for some years, until earnest efforts by successors brought again prosperity. But credit was due, even though the results did not all abide

Bishop Atkins descants very impressively concerning a change of name. He thinks it should be "Episcopal Methodist" instead of Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He mentions the triumphs of the Church under the present name, and suggests that the history and sentiment concerning the name is "honorable to the last limit," and withal that "we of the South are the original Methodism of America," and shall no doubt be "the final Methodism of the continent if any one shall outlast all others," and that the Southern section "is to Americanize America." And moreover, that with this name "we entered upon the most delicate and complex problem the Christian Church has known—and have come out crowned with honor—with unmistakable tokens of divine favor."

All this being true, the needs for change would look to have disappeared. If the Church-South, with present name had divine favor and has met triumphantly the most complex problem of the Christian Church and threatens yet more to possess all American territory, and is honored with a history superlatively great, a compliment to the Church as it now is and as it has previously existed, then if St. Paul could speak he would probably say, "Let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same things."

"To please for good to edification" is also apostolic. But if God is pleased and the Church is triumphing and by all indications shall find a future exceedingly inviting beyond any previous history or experience, then to legislate with the hope to please more fully all antagonistic elements whatsoever, or even to secure a name better suited to the distinguished success of the Church would appear to class among work of superfluity and as legislation of doubtful utility.

EUREKA SPRINGS CIRCUIT.

After seven weeks of constant labor through the extreme heat and dust, my revival campaign closed the first Sunday night in September, at Lovejoy, ten miles west of Water Valley.

We began the third Sunday in July at Tirza, eight miles south of Sardis. There we had Brother S. A. Brown, of Como, in the lead. The congregations were large and attentive. Brother Brown is a natural-born preacher, his sermons are strong and uplifting, and by his amiable manner he won the hearts of the people and the church took on new life.

The fourth Sunday in July, we commenced at Pisgah, nine miles east of Courtland, there we had with us the congenial and consecrated theologian of the Mississippi Conference, Isaac L. Peebles. His sermons were so logical and Biblical that he drew a crowd from the start, and the interest increased all the while. And we baptized the children, and received into the church about all that were not members. The Baptists and Presbyterians rejoiced with us, bought his books and declared they thought more of the Methodists than ever before and some of our people say "the name of Peebles will ever remain in the community as a precious ointment."

The first Sunday in August we opened fire at Eureka, where we had with us our worthy, industrious and much-appreciated presiding elder, Rev. W. M. Young, who, by his consecrated life and earnest appeals moved the hearts of both saints and sinners to a better life. The people all over my circuit say they will be sorry when his four years are out.

From Eureka we went to Mt. Olivet, ten miles east of Batesville. There we had with us the Courtland preacher Brother R. M. Evans who preached with power, and the congregation said that "God was with him," and he certainly understood how to explain the Scriptures.

From Mt. Olivet we went to Cold Springs. There I had Brother James Arnold, a local preacher, whose sermons and prayers made us feel it was good to be there. On Wednesday Brother J. H. Eckles, of Pleasant Grove came to my relief and remained until Sunday night, preaching and expounding the Word to the satisfaction of all and to the salvation of some.

Last, but not least, we began at Lovejoy the fifth Sunday in August and the Holy Ghost came upon us as on the day of Pentecost and many were made to cry out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do to be saved." The revival broke out in the grove meeting. Many sang and felt that we had old-time religion when twenty-four joined the church, many of them heads of families. To God be all the praise, now and forever.

I am working hard to report everything in full at Conference.

SEASHORE CAMP GROUNDS.

One of the most useful years of its history, is the past.

Greater variety of subjects have been discussed by students devoted to the special lines of thought. Advanced views and new methods of church work have been presented. Lines of Christian activities have been broadened, so that all who are engaged in the Lord's work of any denomination can feel at home, knowing that they have a right to the benefits of this favored place. The Preacher's Institute held before the regular Camp Meeting services, was a season of great benefit to all who attended. It proved to be a preacher's "post-graduate" course, where leading thinkers of the Church clearly disseminated thoughts on vital questions under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. Unanimous was the opinion that this first session was most succesful and promises to prove even more helpful in the future.

The protracted, regular Camp Meeting services lasted the usual time and the Board is determined that no matter what innovations or changes may be made, this fundamental, time-honored season shall not be disturbed. The usual high standard of perfect work and song service was maintained to the profit of all, yet conversions were few, because all but about ten per cent. of the hearers were members of the Church.

Then followed the Seashore Assembly of Christian Workers. The changed name of the Epworth League Assembly shows the brotherly spirit of members, who presented a practical programme of sociological, missionary, and biblical topics taught by specialists in their respective branches. This addition to the old regime has doubled the usefulness of these grounds.

It is with great satisfaction that the Board regards, and the Church approves, the third innovation, viz., the Interdenominational Sunday School Assembly, where for two weeks any denomination is at home and welcome to every privilege. At present a Baptist minister is president of the Assembly. Doubtless each denomination will have the chief office in rotation.

"Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." It is possible that the Interdenominational Sunday School Assembly will establish a southern post here. Thus for sixty days this past summer, religious and educational exercises were conducted.

The cordial friendship developed in these historical grounds among Christians from the patronizing Conferences and freedom from society's demands, in a healthful location, add much to the natural attractions of the coast.

The Board has as few restrictions for the tenters to observe as is consistent with a Church institution.

When the "training school" which is soon to be established is opened, the accommodations and attractions and usefulness will be further augmented. Respectfully,

E. L. McGEHEE.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

CARE METHODIST PUBLISHING HOUSE . . . NASHVILLE, TENN.

It was in this very cottage in Brookside, 15 miles from Birmingham, Ala., that three Italians nearly died of Fever. They had been sick 3 months. Johnson's Tonic cured them quickly—read letter below:

Brookside, Ala., May 4, 1903.

The two physicians here had 3 very obstinate cases of continued Malarial Fever. All were Italians and lived on a creek 50 yards from my store. These cases were of three months standing, their temperature ranging from 100 to 104. The doctors had tried everything in vain. I persuaded them to let me try Johnson's Tonic. I removed all the printed matter and let the medicine go out in a plain bottle as a regular prescription. The effect in all three cases was immediate and permanent. They recovered rapidly and there was no recurrence of the Fever.

TOPIC FOR OCTOBER 24, 1909.

A LOST SON AND A YEARNING FATHER.

Luke xv:11-24.

The parable of the "Prodigal Son" pictures humanity wandering into the far country, while a tender welcome awaits the wauderers in the Father's house. This parable might well be called the parable of the merciful Father.

It is not strange that the son who had obtained his portion of the inheritance, sought the "far country" in order to gratify his wayward desires. This has been characteristic of men in all ages. To-day, as a rule, the most reckless man, is the one among strangers. While the world was smiling, this young man was a willing exile from his father's house, and blind to the evils of the life he was living. The sinner cannot see the kingdom of God, and in his blindness he forsakes the eternal things, for those things which perish in the using. Gilded folly and vice, do not reveal themselves, and the sinner seldom realizes the associations that surround him. There are lives, that are not marred before men, that yet in the eyes of God are traveling the road that leads to eternal death. From other points of the compass all the guilt and folly of the earth is traveling for the same goal. Sin makes strange bed-fellows, and leads to most unlooked for associations. In the luxury of his riotous living, there was no hint of the swineherd's lot, yet to this the prodigal was surely traveling.

When he came to himself, then he realized how he had thrown away his substance, and how little the friendships of sin had amounted to. His rags and hard diet stood out in bitter contrast with the former things, and even with the lot of the servants in his father's house. When a man really comes to himself, then does he realize the filthy rags which sin furnishes, and of how little worth is a life of folly, in the light of eternal things. When a man comes to himself, he does one of two things: in despair he abandons hope and wanders farther away from God, or else as a penitent he seeks the lowliest place in the Father's house. To every man, the face of the Judge will some time beam with love and mercy, or cloud with wrath as he banishes the wayward.

But after all the chief lesson of the parable lies in the fact of the father's mercy. The son has been watched for, and he is met out upon the way with a hearty welcome. Greater thau any earthly father's love, is that of our Father in heaven, who awaits the return of his wayward children. He is ever ready to go out upon the way to meet the returning ones. There is a robe of righteousness and a feast for all who come home. Men doubt his love and mercy, and hesitate long in the return, and yet hesitate not to try an earthly father's love. If anywhere in the world, a wayward one turns his face towards home, at once the message is given in heaven, and there is joy there. In addition to many other wonderful things which cluster around the atonement on the cross, there is no doubt that it is the divine message to sinning men, couched in strongest terms, telling that the Father who loves the world, seeks its return to the inheritance prepared for it from the foundation of the world.

NEW ORLEANS LEAGUE UNION.

The monthly meeting of the New Orleans Epworth Leagues was held at the Rayne Memorial Church on the 12th inst. All the local Leagues represented gave glowing reports of the work being accomplished.

The nomination committee, consisting of Mrs. L. Meekins, Mrs. A. I. Townsley, and Mr. T. L. McKnight, presented the following names for the consideration of the Union and they were unanimously elected:

President, Mr. Arthur C. Day, of First Church; first vice-president, Mr. M. B. DePass, of Second Church; second vice-president, Miss Florence Earle, of Louisiana Avenue; third vice-president, Miss Wager, of Epworth Mission; fourth vice-president, Miss Nellie Reeder, of Carrollton Avenue; Secretary, Mr. Osborne J. Dunn, of Rayne Memorial; treasurer, Mr. Quiller F. Scott, of Felicity St.; Era Agent, Miss Mary Arcutt, of Mary Werlein; Junior League superintendent, Miss Ethel Rhodes, of Algiers.

The next meeting of the Union League will be held at the Second M. E. Church, South, Nov. 9. "L."

Royaline Oil, the great antiseptic, made by the Royaline Medicine Co., of New Orleans, La., has been on the market for sixteen years and is an acknowledged remedy for pains, aches, swellings, inflammations and every other kind of soreness to which flesh is heir. You can cure your horse and cow with it as well as yourself. You ought to keep a bottle of it in the house all the time.

IN MEMORIAM—BISHOP CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

The North Mississippi Conference will hold a memorial service on Wednesday evening, Dec. 1, 1909, for our great friend, "who lives in God." This is by authority of our pastor at Okolona, Rev. R. A. Clark, and many others, preachers and laymen. Doctor Murrah will read the memorial and Bishop Hoss will deliver the address.

Dr. B. M. Woolley, Atlanta, Ga.

My dear Dr. Woolley: After more than ten years of worse than slavery, I began in June, 1905, to take your cure for the morphine habit. I think I got four months' treatment, but did not use all of the last month's supply; and I was entirely cured. For over three years I have been a new man, and have had no desire at all for the "dope." When I began the treatment I weighed one hundred and forty pounds, and now I weigh one hundred and seventy-two pounds, and feel good all the time. I feel that I owe you many apologies for not writing long ago, but better late than never, I suppose. If you can use this letter to help some other poor sufferer, please do so. With a heart full of gratitude for what God has permitted you to do for me, I remain, Yours truly, (Signed) T. M. Nichols.

Oxford, Fla., Jan. 12, 1909.

Dr. Woolley conducts the well-known Victor Sanitarium in Atlanta, Ga., and he will be pleased to hear of any one to whom he can be of service.

A "SQUARE DEAL"

It is often argued that women do not have an equal chance with men, for enjoyment and usefulness, because women suffer so much from pain and weakness. In a general sense, it is true that women bear more physical pain than men. However, the belief that women must suffer regularly, on account of ailments and weakness peculiar to their sex, has been successfully contradicted by the relief so many women have obtained by the use of Cardui, that great remedy for suffering women.

During the past fifty years, many thousands of women have written us, telling of the immediate relief and permanent benefit they have received from Cardui. These letters cover a great many forms of womanly illness. Mrs. M. E. Allred of Hartford, Wash., writes: "Ever since I was 16 years old, I have suffered from female troubles. I had headache, backache and other troubles, every month. Some two years ago, I began to use Cardui, and since then I have had no backache, my other troubles have stopped, I don't need any medicine, and I am well."

What Cardui has done for Mrs. Allred and other women, it surely can do for you. Try it at once. Give yourself a "square deal." You will never regret it. Sold everywhere.

PRENTISS, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: My first meeting on this circuit was held at Carson. Brothers M. H. Moore and Robt. McGowan assisted me. A real good meeting was had. The first Sunday in August we began our meeting at Mt. Zion. Brother McGowan did most of the preaching. A number of accessions to the church and much good done. The second Sunday in August our meeting was held at Santee. The preaching done by our presiding elder and Brother McGowan, resulting in a number of accessions to the church. The third Sunday at Bassfield. Brother McGowan helped me there. Somehow we did not have results there as we should. The fourth Sunday in August I held a meeting at a place known as Red House, about five miles north of Prentiss. The people made a brush arbor, and we had a kind of camp meeting—a number of accessions, and we are preparing to build a church. By the middle of next year will have a good house to worship in.

The 14th of June we let the contract for building a church here in Prentiss that will cost us $2,700 when complete. We are now worshiping in the church while the carpenters are yet at work on it. They will finish this week. The house is a beauty. We are ready to entertain our District Conference next year.

Thursday night before the fourth Sunday in September, we began a meeting in our new church, Brother C. N. Guice did the preaching. There was never a better meeting held in Prentiss. There were nine accessions to our church and four to the Baptist Church. The whole town was helped. One of the best features in my work is the Layman's Movement, with Brother H. L. McGehee, as circuit leader. Some of my members have developed into quite good speakers. One young boy has been put to work by these men.

We hope to make a good report at Conference. M. L. WHITE.

THE AUTUMN REVIVAL AT THE MERIDIAN COLLEGES.

It is the custom of the Meridian Colleges to open with a revival, have another in the autumn and another in the spring.

The coming revival will be conducted by J. M. and M. J. Harris, the "sweet singers" of Evanston, Ill. They will begin at Meridian, Oct. 29, continuing ten days. They come to Meridian from Chattanooga from the Holiness Union Convention where they had charge of the singing Oct. 19-24. They are not only fine singers, but good preachers of the Word. They are especially fine in altar calls and exhortation. They are thorough and successful in their work. The Lord honors and blesses them and they should be used more in the South.

Pray earnestly for the revival at Meridian. The revival spirit is already on the colleges. Not a week has passed but that several have been converted or sanctified in the regular services or by personal work. God is with us. We are looking for a great revival. Everybody is invited.

J. W. BEESON,
President Woman's College.

THE LITTLE FAMILY DOCTOR.

Hardly a day passes that parents are not called upon to treat some kind of malady. This is especially the case where there are many children. If you are a father or mother you will find use almost every day for 'Gray's Ointment," a family remedy that for over half a century has been the useful and efficient helper for thousands of parents in all parts of America and foreign countries. For boils, carbuncles, old sores, chronic ulcers, bone felons, burns, festering cuts, poison oak and many other ailments it will prove your best friend. Keep it always on your medicine shelf. Get a 25c box at your druggist's, or if you have never used it send your name for a small free trial box, which we will gladly send postpaid to show you its value. Address Dr. W. F. Gray & Co., 809 Gray Building, Nashville, Tenn.

Mr. E. B. Virgin, of New Orleans, La., writes: "I can cheerfully recommend Gray's Ointment for cuts, bruises, boils, carbuncles, etc. Have used it in my family for 25 years."

CHANGE OF NAME.

Dear Editor: Furthermore in regard to a change in our Church name, for one still further expressive of principles and doctrine rather than locality two other names are suggested besides those heretofore mentioned: M. E. Free-Will Church; M. E. Free Grace Church.

As to organic union with the Church North, this would seem to involve risk of the election and assignment to us of a negro Bishop. Our good Northern brethren believe in equality—alike of saints and worldlings—both social and political—without regard to race.

They mistakingly assign to a wrong spirit of caste the recognition by us of that deep, fundamental instinct implanted by Providence in the different races of mankind that tends to conserve the distinctness and integrity of ethnic types, and to prevent a mongrel fusion, whether of whites, Chinese or negroes, with each other

Why do not our Northern friends set up the negroes within their membership into an independant Church, and then give them all needful help?

AN INTERESTED PARTY.

EUROPE IN 1910.

I am getting up a limited party for a trip through Europe in 1910, leaving about June 1st. The great Missionary Conference will be in Edinburgh, Scotland, June 14-24, and this is Passion-Play year. These alone will be worth a trip across the waters.

I have personally conducted several parties through Europe, and am familiar with all the details of travel. My wife will accompany me and act as chaperon for girls. Write at once for particulars, as only a limited number can be accommodated. I can give you the trip of your life at a small cost. The countries we will visit: Scotland, England, Belgium, Germany, Switzerland, Italy and France—64 days. J. C. MIMMS,
Member of the Northwest Texas Conference, Mexia, Texas.

Mrs. CELÉTE EMBREE SCUDDER died at her home in Centerville, Miss., July 18, 1909, aged 69 years, 6 months, and 16 days. The deceased was a victim of heart-failure. She was a faithful member of the M. E. Church, South, and a loyal, earnest member of th. Woman's Home Mission Society, and whereas, God in his infinite and divine wisdom has called from our midst our beloved sister to that home above where bright angels forever dwell, therefore, be it resolved:

First—That we are deeply grieved over our loss in the death of our sister and helper.

Second—The Society has lost an efficient helper and a faithful, willing worker.

Third—That we humbly bow our spirits in submission to his will who doth all things well and that we extend our heartfelt sympathy to those who are bereft. Signed,

MRS. T. M. PETTY,
Pres. W. H. M. S.,
M. EDITH HAAG,
Sec.

The death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Williams, of Milestone, Miss., and claimed their eldest child, little WILLIE MAY, one of the bright jewels of the home. She was born December 21, 1906, and died September 3, 1909. She was a little less than three years old. Willie May was a bright, beautiful, winsome, lovable and loving baby. She was almost idolized by her fond parents, grandparents and other relatives, and to day the home is gloomy and sad and there is an aching void which can never be filled. Oh! how we miss our darling, her bright, beautiful presence! Everything possible was done for her that physician and loved ones could do, but in vain. God in his infinite wisdom took her unto himself. Look up dear brother and sister, our darling has been transplanted to a bright heavenly home where sorrows never come, and her little loving, beckoning hands are saying come this way. Lord help us to say thy will be done. ONE WHO LOVED HER.

On July 31, 1909, the death angel visited the home of Hon. J. H. Beeman, at or near Lena, Miss., and carried his spirit back to God. He was born Nov. 17, 1833 in Gates County, N. C., coming to Mississippi in early childhood and reared by parents who were of the "excellent." His youth to old age was lived among the people of Scott County, who honored him with office and pointed with pride and affection to him as a citizen. He served in the Legislature from January, 1884 to December, 1890, and then in 1891 was chosen to represent the Fifth Congressional District in the National House of Representatives, where he served one term with distinction. Brother Beeman was an earnest and devoted member of the M. E. Church, South, and worked faithfully and loyally in it for many years. He leaves a wife and four children and a host of good friends to mourn their loss, but our loss is his eternal gain. He was buried at the family cemetery at Lena. We all feel the loss of a great man, but he sleeps well because he labored well. By his pastor,

J. W. PRICE.

On Monday, Sept. 13, 1909, the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Rhodes and bore the spirit of their only boy, DEMPSY MILTON, to his bright home above. He had brightened the home two years and four months and nineteen days. It was hard for father, and mother to give him up, but God knows best and they realize that their loss is his gain. One short week before his death he was happy and playing, and was as well as could be. He was taken sick Sept. 11, and died Sept. 13. In great sadness, mixed with tearful joy, we laid his little body to rest in Shiloh graveyard, Sept. 14. The funeral services were conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. F. McClellan. He leaves a father, a mother, two sisters and a host of friends and relatives. May God bless and comfort the bereaved family, and may they so live that when God calls, they will be ready to meet him on that brighter shore. Though cast down, we are not forsaken. Though afflicted, not alone. The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord." HIS COUSIN.

C. W. MURCHISON was born Feb. 21, 1821, and died Sept. 21, 1909. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church at Free Springs some time in August, 1838. So it is seen that he was a member of undivided Methodism six years and of both seventy-one years. He was married to Miss Amanda C. McAlister some time in May, 1846 with whom he lived sixty-three years. What a record. He was faithful to Christ and the church, and faithful in that relation which is a symbol of Christ and the church. He was a good citizen, a good neighbor, a kind father, and a loved and revered grand and great-grandfather. He died peacefully, like an infant going to sleep on its mother's bosom. It was comforting to see the sons and daughters of this patriarch calmly committing their aged parent to his last resting place, as if the separation was not to be long, and it is not, for some of them have almost lived out their allotted span of life, and like their father, they have been faithful to Christ and his church. Brother Murchison is gone, but he will continue to live long in the memory of his brethren and neighbors, all of whom loved him. May God bring his loved ones to meet him in heaven. E. H. ROOK.

Brother JOHN YOUNG CALDWELL was above the ordinary young men of our country. In every relationship of life he was true to the last. As a son, his devotion to his mother was beautiful. He was one boy who was truly tied to his mother's apron strings, and did not want to get loose. In providing for his wife, his mother, also, was invariably considered—both were left a fair competency for life. As a husband, only death could separate him from his bosom companion. The two hearts beat as one—the two faces were but the reflecting mirrors of each others souls united in a Savior's love. Death took one away—left the other broken. As a church member he was true to his vows—attending upon the ordinances of the church—supporting her institutions, and keeping the Commandments of the Lord, his God. As a business man he was prompt and faithful, honest and conscientious in all his dealings with his fellow-men. Death struck a hard blow at our church at Baldwyn when brother John Caldwell passed out of this world. May he speak to us from his grave and beckon us on in the way he has gone. May his noble character reproduce itself again and again ere his influence on earth shall have been spent. God bless his wife, mother and brothers. John Young Caldwell was born March 19, 1878, married Feb. 16, 1908; joined the Methodist Church at Baldwyn, May, 1908; died June 22, 1909.

H. T. GAINES, P. C.

Mrs. CYNTHIA A. E. WATTS (nee Harper) was born May 10, 1851, and died at her home near Strong Hope, Miss., Sept. 11, 1909. Her father, Rev. Paul W. Harper, was a local preacher in the M. E. Church, South. Sister Watts united with the church of her choice while quite young, and led a consistent Christian life. On Nov. 28, 1872, she was happily married to Mr. B. F. Watts, a consecrated man of God, who preceeded his good wife to the better world about eighteen months. To this union were born two children, one of whom lives to mourn the loss of his mother. Sister Watts was modest, quiet, and unassuming. A devoted wife, a tender mother, and an affectionate friend. She loved the doctrines and polity of her church. She was confined to her bed for several months before her death, and it was my privilege to visit her. I found that her faith in God was unshaken. She leaves this note: "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I shall fear no evil; for thou art with me: thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." We will miss her in the church and in the circle of Christian association. After services at Old Pine Grove, her body was laid to rest beside that of her husband in the cemetery at Pine Grove. May the loved ones left behind live for the glory of God. C. J. STAPP.

FRANK H. CAMPBELL was born at Lodi, Miss., June 8, 1858. He departed this life June 20, 1909. On June 16, 1886, he was married to Miss Coria Johnson, daughter of Dr. H. F. Johnson, president of Whitworth College, Bishop Charles B. Galloway officiating. Four children were the result of this union, three of whom survive. Mr. Campbell was a successful business man. By his energy and wise investments he had accumulated quite a comfortable fortune. He was president of the Citizens Bank. He possessed many excellent traits of character. As a neighbor he was kind, accommodating, and generous. As a friend he was faithful and true, and his friends felt that in him they had one who was bound to them by strong and lasting ties. He was a fond father and a good husband, a man of broad charity, he loved humanity and was a liberal supporter of every laudable enterprise and of every benevolent institution. He was very charitable in speech, having something good to say about every one. He was affable, congenial and cheerful. Even to the last he made a brave fight to live. He was converted in 1885 under the preaching of Rev. W. S. Lagrone and joined the Methodist Church. He was a member of the same at the time of his death. He loved the church and was a liberal supporter thereof. In speaking of his relation to the church, a while before his death, he said among other things, that he had not done as much as he should have done for the church and for his Lord; that at times he had wandered away from his Lord, but that now he had come back, and that, if he got well, he was going to be a better servant of his Master than he had ever been. A sister said: "But if you don't get well, how is it with you?" "It is all right," he said, "I am trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ, and he has promised to save us if we trust in him. I am taking him at his word." What better testimony could we wish. May we all so die! Our deep sympathy is with the wife and children. J. A. HALL.

Obituaries.

LOVICK P. PEACOCK was born in Yalabusha County, Miss., May 7, 1842, and died at his home in Winona, Sept. 11, 1909, in his 67th year. He was married Feb. 6, 1870, to Miss Ann Olivia Knox, who departed this life Nov. 27, 1887. Seven children blessed this union, three of whom survive, the other four having died in childhood. Mr. Peacock was a good citizen, a believer in civic righteousness: in the strict enforcement of law. In business he was diligent, persevering and prosperous. He was a kind neighbor, a faithful friend, a true brother, a noble, tender and devoted father. He was a Confederate soldier of unflinching courage; he gave four years of valuable service to his country, being a member of the famous Stanford Battery, which was organized and mustered in September, 1861, and was not disbanded till the close of the war in 1865. Sometime during the war he professed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and later joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He was faithful in attending its services, liberal in supporting its institutions and loyal to its pastors. In his death the Church has sustained a loss that cannot be easily repaired, and the town has lost one of her most enterprising and public spirited citizens. Though we mourn our loss, yet let us remember that he has but gone the way we all must go sooner or later. May we all meet the end calmly and peacefully as did our beloved brother, Lovick P. Peacock. We deeply sympathise with the bereaved. May the dear, loving heavenly Father, according to his infinite goodness and loving kindness and tender mercies, comfort, sustain and keep them. HIS PASTOR.

Mrs. ELIZABETH CHILDRESS (nee Perry) was born near Satartia, Miss., in 1865, and died Aug. 16, 1909. A member of a large family, she was the first to be called into rest, and the enjoyment of eternal life. In early life she was happily married to W. G. Childress and their married life was characterized by true devotion and unstinted love. Under the ministry of Rev. F. M. Williams, about twelve years ago, she united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and as the home spirit was beautiful, so her devotion to the church was marked by loyalty and consecrated earnestness. Steadfast in the faith, she worked for the happiness and comfort of others. Many times has she remembered the preacher and his family in a substantial way. She was not dangerously ill for a great while, but for several months her health had not been real good. The decline in health was met cheerfully and borne with Christian fortitude. The final summons came suddenly as the long, hot day was drawing to a close, but we feel that God found her ready to answer to the roll-call of the sky. We weep not as those who have no hope, for to those who love God and are true to him, death can be but a transition to brighter world on high, the grave but a slight depression into which we place one foot while we touch the golden street with the other. A large family is left, but to them is bequeathed a glorious inheritance, a mother's consecrated life, a mother's devotion, a mother's prayers and the influence to live for the Lord. To God's care we commend the loved ones remembering that "God is too wise to make a mistake, and too good to do wrong." May mother's God be theirs amid the vicissitudes and temptations of life, and as one by one passes into eternity, may it be to a place by mother's side. G. P. McKEOWN.

DORSON DAVID SULLIVAN, was born Oct. 31, 1862 and died at his home near Duck Hill, Miss., Sept. 13, 1909, aged 46 years 11 months and 13 days. His remains were interred at Shiloh Cemetery. Brother Sullivan leaves a wife and one little child. He was ever an affectionate and devoted husband and father, providing abundantly for his wife's comfort and pleasure. No flower nor bird that bloomed or sang for her delight failed to be loved and petted by him. Brother Sullivan was a useful citizen. He joined the Methodist Church at the age of twenty-one years and has lived a consistent Christian life. He was a good Sunday School teacher and never tired in the work. He loved his church, and was ever ready to help those who needed help. The last few months of his illness he suffered great pain, but he was ready at the Master's summons to change worlds. We thank God for his beautiful Christian life, and for the happiness he contributed to his affectionate wife, child, mother, brothers and sisters, and to so many friends. His spirit was bright and cheerful here, and will be far more so in the better world.

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolutions of respect adopted by the Methodist Sunday School and Junior Epworth League, of Bond, Miss., in memory of HANNAH McARTHUR, youngest child of Duncan and Jennie McArthur, who was fatally burned by an alcohol iron, June 30, 1909. Had she lived until October, she would have been 13 years of age. Therefore, be it resolved:

First—That in the death of Hannah McArthur, our Junior League has lost one of its brightest, best and most promising members, (the secretary of our League), and our Sunday School has lost one of its most interesting scholars.

Second—That while we highly appreciate Hannah's brilliant mind, her natural beauty, and her sweet, winning ways, and feel her absence indescribably, yet we humbly bow in submission to God's will, knowing that "he doeth all things well."

Third—That we offer our heartfelt sympathy to her parents and brothers, realizing that their loss is her eternal gain. We would point them to our precious Savior whom she so joyously accepted during our meeting, a few days previous to her death. Long will we remember her beautiful face beaming with her Savior's love.

Fourth—That we fondly cherish her memory and strive earnestly to meet her in heaven, where parting and suffering will be no more.

Fifth—That a copy of these resolutions be published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, a copy sent to the family, also spread on the Minutes of our Sunday School and Junior League.

Respectfully submitted by three of her Sunday School class-mates and fellow-Leaguers.

FROM COMO, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: We closed a very successful meeting here last Thursday night; had four accessions on profession of faith and the membership of the church revived. Brother Pope did the preaching and delighted his audiences.

Our fourth Quarterly Conference was held last night. The reports were good. The stewards have this year collected all moneys assessed to the charge. They have paid the salaries of presiding elder and preacher-in-charge in full, all of the assessments ordered by the Annual Conference paid, with an excess on Domestic Missions, Church Extension and Conference Claimants.

The Lord has been good to us all the year, we praise him. Brother Young brings good tidings from over the district. Good revivals have been held, churches are being built and the district promises to bring up the best reports in its history. May it be so.

DUMAS CHARGE.

Dear Dr. Boswell: As I am through with all my protracted meetings, I would like to have room in your paper for a few lines. I have had some fine meetings.

I commenced at Wells' Chapel the first week in August; did all the preaching; had a fine meeting; three professions, with eight to join our church and more to follow.

I went from there to New Hope and was assisted by Rev. J. H. Bass, from Ripley. We had a fine meeting; twenty-two conversions, sixteen to join the church.

Next I went to Mt. Olivet and held five days there, and had a very good meeting, then I came home (at Dumas) where I met Rev. W. D. Bass with his tent, so we held forth for ten days—had one hundred professions, sixty-four joined our church, and more to follow. This was one of the greatest meetings I was ever in. We had the old-time power—men and women were heard to praise God all over the tent almost every service.

I then went the next week to Jacobs' Chapel. I had to do all of the preaching except one night. We had forty professions; twenty-two to join our church

This has been one of the best years of my life. We have had one hundred and seventy-six conversions and one hundred and twenty-five accessions to the church; baptized six babies and have made 346 pastoral visits, and I think I will be able to bring up all of my collections in full at our next Conference. I hope to meet you there. I always enjoy going to Conference to meet my brother-preachers and shake their hands once more on earth. It makes me think of the great meeting after awhile. But thank God there will be no more good-byes there.

The one that serves Dumas Charge next year will have a good place. Dumas in one of the best little towns I ever lived in—good people and a good school. We have a good Sunday School here, and a good prayer meeting every Sunday night. Pray for us! D. M. FLOYD.

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property-holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property-holders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically not outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co., for a detailed explanation.

Glances at the World.

A terrible ado has been made by certain persons, prominent in liquordom, because General Grant of the United States army rode at the head of the great "law and order" and temperance procession in Chicago a few weeks ago. They pretend like no objection would have been made had he rode in the procession in a private capacity, but object because he marched in full army uniform, thus seemingly giving the sanction of the United States army to prohibition. The protest was carried to the Secretary of War, who dismissed the complaint, holding that the act was General Grant's personal affair. He violated no army regulation. The country at large commends the General—his act being one of more than ordinary courage. This protest of the liquor men is significant. It indicates that their trust is in the federal government. They cannot bear to think of the government putting a ban of any kind on the liquor trade. When it does, their gains will disappear. May General Grant live to see the downfall of the whole destructive business, which he declares he would gladly sacrifice his life to accomplish!

Many citizens of Louisiana and not a few papers are loud in their complaints against the State Board of Education for making another change in the text books of the public schools. Not more than four years has elapsed since the books now displaced were introduced. It does not stand to reason that the books were worn out, or were "out of date." No good reason has been given why in so short a time the citizens of Louisiana should be taxed so suddenly and to the extent of so many hundreds of thousands of dollars. Unless something was radically wrong in the books just laid aside (and nobody, as far as we have seen, has urged that) the State Board should have given at least six months' notice before making a sweeping change. If it is in the power of the State Board of Education to change the text books at will, that power should be taken from it, or the Board be required to show good cause why they thus tax the people. Besides, the State Board of Education should not be changed every time a new governor is inaugurated, else the people will begin to think that it is part of the political machine. Politics should have nothing to do in the matter.

The Supreme Court of the United States has just handed down a decision, which, if it does not cure an evil, will at least make men more careful in their gambling operations. A man in Mississippi desiring to speculate in cotton executed a note secured by deed of trust in favor of a dealer in Memphis, who was to invest the money. For a reason not stated in the report the deal was not favorable to the man who had executed the note. The dealer, it is alleged, sold out the client's holdings [illegible] at a large profit. The client instituted suit to cancel the deed of trust. The case was tried in the Federal Court at Vicksburg, and decided in favor of the Memphis dealer. The plaintiff appealed to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, in which the decision of the lower court was reversed. Whereupon the Memphis speculator appealed to the Supreme Court—the court of last resort. That court affirmed the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals, and the plaintiff's deed of trust will be canceled. The sum of the matter is this: A note of hand, even though accompanied by a deed of trust, is not collectable, if it is given to conduct dealings in futures, in which neither party to the transaction contemplates the delivery of any actual commodity. Such contracts are contrary to public policy.

The world seems to be going daft on the subject of microbes and such things, and all sorts of devices are resorted to in order to checkmate their ravages in the human system. The latest thing mentioned is a "tumbler of real ice." It is the invention of a German. Water is poured into a mold and frozen. Of course what microbes are in the water and other impurities are expelled in the freezing; otherwise the ice tumbler would not be hygienic—but as bad, if not a little worse than ordinary goblets. The ice tumbler has this advantage: it can be used but once. It immediately melts or is thrown away, leaving no possible chance of harming anybody. It is cheap, costing only the twentieth of a penny apiece. Surely the poorest people in the country can afford ice tumblers. But where are the people to get the molds, and the necessary chemicals and facilities for turning the water into ice? It is like molding concrete houses. The houses do not cost much, but the concrete molds require a fortune. It calls to mind the tramp and his dinner. "Say, mister," said one of the fellows, "can you tell me where I can get a square meal for a quarter?" "Yes," replied the mister, "just around the corner." "And mister, can you tell me where I can get the quarter?" That was a different proposition. There are some queer things in this world. One is getting rid of microbes by using ice tumblers.

The controversy over the discovery of the north pole by no means abates. Commander Peary's promised "proof" that Dr. Cook never reached the pole never proved anything. The controversy has been intensified by certain men who have made affidavits to the effect that Dr. Cook never reached the summit of Mt. McKinley, as he claimed, several years ago, and which helped to give him character as an arctic explorer. Men say if Dr. Cook never reached the summit of Mt. McKinley, and it can be proven that he did not, the fact will go far to discredit his word as to reaching the pole. Of course it would. But Dr. Cook proposes to prove that he did. It is just a little singular, and unaccountable, that men would allow a lapse of four or five years before coming forward to show that an explorer had deceived the public. The truth of the matter is, there is a class who are determined that Peary shall not share [illegible] glory with Dr. Cook. And [illegible] telegraphed all the way from [illegible] congratulations to Commander Peary, [illegible] later that he had never heard of the feat of Dr. Cook. His spirit of unfairness in this matter is on a par exactly with his conduct in the effort to give Admiral Sampson all the credit for the destruction of the Spanish fleet in Cuban waters in 1898, whereas Admiral Schley was in command and directed all the movements of the battle, Admiral Sampson being nowhere in reach. Such littleness is unpardonable.

For a long while the Roman Catholics in the United States, and not a few politicians of Protestant birth, have been anxious to have another bishop elevated to the high position of cardinal. It was confidently expected that one additional would be elevated before the close of this year, but news comes from Rome to the effect that the Pope has deferred the work to a later period—some time in 1910—and that "America is responsible for it." The trouble is the Americans are unable to agree on a man. There are too many popular and eligible dignitaries. In addition it is said that the Pope desired to create another American cardinal in recognition of "the great merits acquired by the United States, both as a Catholic power and as a mighty means of progress and civilization in the world." In urging the appointment by Americans, some favored Archbishop Ireland, on the ground that "he is the most genuine personification of the American type." From another side came a clamor for the Archbishop of New York, that city being "the greatest Catholic center in the world." Finally, from a third quarter word went to his "holiness" that "the whole of New England where Catholicism has lately blossomed so vigorously would be offended" if Archbishop O'Connell was not chosen. Finally, the Pope, realizing that whoever was chosen, the number of people displeased would be greater than those satisfied, concluded the best thing to do would be to drop the matter. And he did. Why should politicians be so much interested in the creation of an American cardinal?

CHURCH EXTENSION.

To the Brethren of the Mississippi Conference.

In the Advocate of the 14 inst., a note from the Chairman of the Church Extension Board of the Mississippi Conference stated that I am to act as treasurer of the Board till Conference, as well as secretary. Hence I wish to say a word to our brethren on the subject: During my three years' work as secretary of the Board, we have not had before us as many and as urgent claims as we will have this year. Some of the most urgent and worthy are as follows: Meadville, East McComb, Prentiss, Poplar Springs, Meridian, Mendenhall, Picayune and a number of others. The helping by this Board in the building of these churches is a great relief to the Home Mission Board. With a good church free from debt, the charges will soon be self-supporting.

Pay this assessment in full if possible. Send the money to the undersigned at least ten days before Conference, if at all possible. We want to hold the anniversary meeting early in the Conference session.

THOUGHTS FOR THE TIMES.

By Rev. W. C. Black, D.D.

What shall we do with our leisure? is a question that concerns us all, individually and collectively. For, notwithstanding all that is said about "the press of business," most people have some hours of leisure every day, besides holidays and vacations.

A trite answer would be, "Why, let us amuse ourselves." That we need recreation of some kind no wise man will deny. A bow that is always bent to its utmost tension will lose its elasticity. So the mind needs relaxation. But how much time should be given to recreation? And what should be the character of our amusements? Should we give a loose rein to our natural impulses? Should we allow our environments to sweep us where they will? Who will so affirm? Amusements have a far-reaching significance.

One of the best indices of the type of civilization that prevails in any country is the

CHARACTER OF ITS AMUSEMENTS.

How do the people spend their time when they are "off duty?" What are their sports, pastimes, recreations? What are the activities of those hours that intervene between business and slumber? What about their Sabbaths, their holidays, and their leisure-time generally? Get a correct answer to these questions, and you will know much concerning the character of a people. Read a description of a bull-fight, and learn that this is the popular amusement of Spain; at once the Spanish people sink in your estimation to a low place in the scale of refinement and civilization. Witness the war dance of an Indian tribe, and you need no further evidence to convince you that they are in a state of barbarism. We do not need to be told that the habitues of a New York cock-pit are low, vulgar and brutal.

Now, let us make an application of this test. How do we, the people of the Southland, spend our leisure? Are our amusements and recreations elevating in their character, or do they tend to intellectual and moral retrogression?

We give attention much more than formerly to athletics, and these, in moderation, are commendable. In many instances, cards and billiards consume much of our time. In some parts of the world, these amusements flourish most in places where low chit-chat, profane twaddle, ribald jest, obscene anecdote and coarse guffaw are the chief characteristics of social intercourse; where the fumes of alcohol permeate the air; where the potent influence of example is felt, luring one into the pathway of the gambler and the inebriate; where the surroundings are such as to spread the torpor and the chill of death over the higher aspirations and finer sensibilities of the moral nature. That some of the things above mentioned are not necessary concomitants of these amusements I readily concede. But is it not a fact that the habitues of the card table and the billiard hall often become so enamored of these games, that they devote thereto much time that might be more profitably employed?

Vaudeville performances under various names receive a liberal patronage even in times of great financial stringency. Multitudes pay for the privilege of witnessing a low grade negro minstrel show, even if "The butcher and the baker,

And the candle-stick maker"

have to wait indefinitely for shekels that are theirs.

That habitual attendance upon these low grade theatrical performances tends to develop frivolity is unquestionable. Do we need additional development in that direction? A distinguished Bishop once gave a lecture in a certain town. At the same hour only a few blocks away a low grade variety theatrical performance was in progress. The Bishop was widely known and was universally conceded to be a superb orator. He was personally popular, and had been well advertised. Yet he spoke to a handful of people, while the theatrical auditorium was overcrowded, so that many were turned away. Instances like this, though varying in detail, could be collected from the annals of almost any of our towns and cities. In most of our towns, Edward Everett, if he were alive to-day, would get a very small audience in comparison with the vulgar negro minstrel show. One of Shakespeare's best dramas would command small attention as compared with a tenth rate vaudeville performance. The rostrum has been unable to resist the frivolous spirit of the age.

BUFFOONERY

is at a premium. The clown no longer finds it necessary to tie on to a circus in order to eke out a bare living. He goes on the rostrum and large audiences greet him everywhere. The one man whom everybody (nearly) wants to hear is the man who can get up a laugh. Profound thought, elegant diction, high moral teaching are hardly worth a thought in comparison with grin-producing power. Even lecturers of great ability, in order to get a hearing deliberately study buffoonery and interlard their discourses profusely with the wares of the old-time circus clown. I repeat the question, "Do we need additional development in the direction of frivolity?" Rather do we not need to whistle, "Down grade; put on the brakes?" We need to give less time to amusement and more to mental and moral improvement.

Compare the man who has for years been a devotee of pleasure with one who has pursued a different course. Suppose a case. Two young men leave school and engage in business at eighteen. One of them gives his leisure hours to the popular amusements of the day. The other makes it a rule to read

A BOOK A WEEK.

Will there not be a difference between the two at the age of thirty? The one will have read twelve times fifty-two, i. e., six hundred and twenty-four books, and if his books have been judiciously selected, he will be a well-informed man, one whose judgment will be prized, and whose influence will be felt in any circle in which he may be thrown. But what of the other? Well, his comrades may say of him, "he is a good fellow," but what is his weight as compared with the former? Empty headed and frivolous, his opinions on any matter of public concern are unimportant, and in all that constitutes a noble manhood, he is lamentably deficient.

This is no fancy sketch. Many of the men who have become honored leaders in the various departments of human activity have acquired those stores of knowledge and those traits of character that gave them success and fitted them for leadership by making diligent use of their leisure—those fragments of time that are by many regarded and treated as of no value whatever.

Now, in the case above supposed, which of the two careers would a wise father choose for a son just merging into manhood? To ask such a question is to answer it. No wise father ever advised his son to prefer pleasure to knowledge, amusement to instruction. Yet there are fathers not a few, who daily counsel their sons by example to become frivolous pleasure seekers, rather than lovers of knowledge. When paterfamilias is so busy with cards, billiards, vaudeville and such like that he cannot find time to read a book a year, what course is filius likely to pursue? "Example is more powerful than precept." There is time enough for

BOTH INSTRUCTION AND RECREATION.

Most men have leisure enough for necessary recreation and a considerable slice for every day left for intellectual improvement, if they will to have it so.

Moreover, it must not be forgotten that recreation and instruction go hand in hand, in other words that reading is itself a recreation. No man makes a more egregious mistake than does he who supposes that reading is a drudgery and all literary pursuits a pleasureless task. This is the case only with him who is a novice at the business. The man who has formed the reading habit finds in that habit his greatest pleasure. Through the medium of books he holds communion with the good and the great of all ages and climes, and hears them speak in their best moods and their loftiest strains. They commend to him their noblest thoughts and their highest aspirations. In such companionship he finds a pleasure infinitely superior to the pleasures of the wine cup, the card table, the negro minstrel show or the low grade theatre. As high as heaven is above the earth, so high are the pleasures of intellect above those of sense. And is it not our duty to cultivate these higher powers of our nature? Do we not when we spend the few precious hours that God allots us here in pleasures akin to those which the brutes enjoy, while we allow our higher powers, those that ally us to angels and to God, to lie dormant and uncultivated?

SHREWDNESS OF BILDAD AKERS.

Bildad Akers is a special country friend of Dr. Ivey, editor of the Raleigh Christian Advocate, who gathers from him many good things he puts in his paper. The following tells how as steward, he secured money on the preachers "quarterage" from one who was hardly ever known to pay. The name of this brother was Molt Henry. Bildad said to Brother Ivey:

"You see, Molt has bin a Methodist fer a long time. He's known down in my settlement as the only Methdist who had bin able to keep his church standin fer twenty-five years without payin a red copper to the church. You know, he's as smart as blazes to be able to do that. Yet he has did that very thing. The stewarts have got arter him. He'd put em off fer one reason or tother till jist afore Confearance. Then he'd give em a worthless order or a jew bill or sich, and that was the eend of it for that year. The next year the stewarts would be afeared to mention the back pay to him. They thought by not mentioning it they might git something at the eend of that year. But it was no-go. It went that way year arter year.

"Up to that time he had kept his money in his pocket—he's got money, the old rascal—and his standin in the church. Why, he's the biggest man at our meetins. One time the preacher preached a sarmont on robbin God by not bringin tithes into the store-house, and said every member who had paid nothin to God oughter to be ashamed of themselves. He said it was a blasted shame for a church sassiety with thousands of dollars to have God go round beggin for a little fifty dollars from em. Molt just turned and then sot with his back to the preacher, and then got up and walked out of the meetin. He told Jim Bent who was sittin outside with a gigglin gal in a buggy that the preecher had singed his feelins all over. He lowed that a member who had sung and shouted as much as he hed for that church ought to be credented with somethin, and oughtn't to be insulted like a mangy dog.

"But Molt got over that. He had a heap of gall, but not enough to play that racket long. So he got to goin back, and one day when the preecher in his sarmont hollered out in a drermatic way, "It's more blessed to give than to receive," Molt hollered out 'Amen' loud enough to be hearn down to the forks of the road. Arter that he seemed to consider his standin sot up again.

"Well, it was not long arter that when Molt bought that track down on the river and moved nigh me. We was neighbors. He built him a right nice house. He was allers good at makin money, if he is so no-count. So the stewarts that year give me Molt's name. The stewart who had him was mighty glad. He said I was welcome to him. I didn't say nothin. But, Ivry, you've never lived in the kentry and you don't know nothin about weasels and sich. I had a hundred chickins killed one year by a measley weasel. I watched fer that weasel fer nearly a year. But I didn't watch for him as much by a sight as I watched fer Molt Henry to get some money from him. He was as cunnin as that weasel and as slick as a otter. On every occasion he escaped from my hands. Confearance was a-comin on, and I was raly afeared that I was a-goin to make a plum failure of Molt Henry.

"But Proverdence hoped me, Ivry. It wasn't no luck. It was pure blank Proverdence.

"This is the way it was: Jest afore Confearance I was over to Hinton one day. That's our regular trading place, you know. I was talkin in Hines' office, when Sim Blalock cum in. Hines and Blalock are both great Methdists. They was axin me about matters on the Circuit, the preacher, the Confearance, etc. I told em all about my troubles as stewart, specially bout the time I was havin with Molt Henry. When I mentioned his name I saw a quare-like look come into Sim's face. He said: 'Come out to the lot, Bildad. I want to show you the likeliest hoss you ever sot your eyes on.' I went with him. He did show me his hoss, which was no shakes, but he took me to one side and told me how I could manage Molt. When he told me, I felt almost as proud somehow as when I got jined in marriage to Lizy, and I give Sim an extra squeeze of the hand when I left him.

"I went by Molt's house that evenin. As I rid up I seed him at the barn, and he was saddlin a hoss as fast as he could. I knowed he was going to take the [illegible] till the cricks [illegible]. I taken a lane leading to the barn and cuts him off before he thought I had retched the house. He was mighty glad to see me, he said. He said he was so glad I had come as soon as I had, fer, says he, I was about to ride over to the mill place and I would have missed you.

"Without any [illegible] and [illegible] I told him my business. He knocked a fly off n his hoss, studied awhile and said: 'I reckon, Brother Akers, you stewarts have a hard time. People ought to be so willin to give that it would be a pleasure for you to do your work.' 'Eggsactly,' says I. Then he went and looked up into the winder of the barn loft, the Lord knows why, and then come back, and cleared his throat and said: 'Brother Akers, I am sorry to put you off, sence Confearance is so nigh, but I guess I'll have to do it unless you can wait till next Monday.' I know'd he was using the same old tricks on me, and I know'd what I wanted. So I says: 'I am powerful anxious to fix up my list by to-morrow,' which was Sunday. 'Well,' says Molt, 'I guess I'll have to give you a jew bill.' His old jew bills had been worn to a frazzle in the pockets of other stewarts. 'Eggsactly, Molt,' I said. 'Here's a pensul and a piece of paper. Write off your jew bill.' He looked pleased a-sight. He said: 'Brother Akers, the church needs all the money it can git, and as I hed to fall a leettle short last year, I'll stretch myself this year.' I knowed the least he intended to give anythin, the bigger he had allers made his jew bill. So he laid the paper on the saddle and writ somethin. It was a jew bill for twenty-five dollars, to be paid outen the fust money he should git. He had wrote sich jew bills fer stewarts before, but it shorely meant somethin this time, though he didn't sense it a bit.

"He said: 'Go in the house and eat a bite. I'll have to leave you a spell.' I said: 'Hold on, Molt, I've got somethin fer you. I seed Sim Blalock over to Hinton to-day and he axed me to fetch you fifty dollar which he said he owned you on that piece of land you sold him,' and I handed him twenty-five dollar. He knowed what that meant. Ef you ever saw a face turn green and yaller at the same time, it was Molt's face. He started to say somethin, but he changed his mind and write out a receipt for fifty dollar. I said good-bye and left.

"They say it made Molt sick and that he laid abed all day Sadly. But he was out to meetin on Sunday and sot one bench nigher the pullpit than before. When I nounced that Molt had paid twenty-five dollar, fifteen dollar more'n he was sessed, the stewarts could hardly take it in. When I tole em how it was done, they wanted to draw up a set of thank resolutions. But I wouldn't let em. That's how I cllected Molt Henry's quarterage.

"Ivry,' as I said, 'Proverdence come to my help and he shorely done it bekase I had his cause on my mind and heart. Ef I hadn't been thinkin and talkin about his business over at Hinton on a week-day, Sim Blalock would not have give me that money and Molt could never have a-played into my hands. Don't you see, when a stewart is a-workin all the time for Ole Marster he's goin to do somethin?'"

REV. DAVID P. BRADFORD.

On Sunday, May the 6th, 1909, there came at last sweet release from pain and toil to one who had suffered greatly and labored long and faithfully in the service of his loved King, for on that beautiful morning Rev. David P. Bradford was translated to his heavenly home and entered upon his eternal rest and reward.

Rev. David P. Bradford was born in East Feliciana Parish, Louisiana, on the 20th of April, 1847. His parents were evidently devout Christians who brought up their children in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord." Just when he gave his heart to Jesus and entered into the experience of conscious salvation I have not been informed, nor do I know the date of his union with the church, but it is certain that these events were early in his life.

He was licensed to preach in St. Helena Parish, Louisiana, at Day's Church on the 2nd of May, 1868, when twenty-one years of age, Rev. Joseph Nicholson being pastor, Rev. James A. Godfrey, Presiding elder, and Mr. James W. Clinton, secretary of the quarterly conference. After serving faithfully for two and a half years as local preacher, having been duly recommended by the quarterly Conference of the same church, he was received on trial into the Mississippi Annual Conference at the session held in Crystal Springs, Miss., December 14-20, 1870, Bishop David S. Doggett presiding. There were eleven applicants in the class of that year, of whom Rev. John Wesley Sandell, Rev. Hiram Singleton and Rev. Daniel G. W. Ellis, still alive, all being loved and honored superannuates of the Mississippi Conference.

Brother Bradford was ordained Deacon by Bishop H. H. Kavanaugh during the session of the Conference at Brandon, Miss., which was held December 11-17, 1872; and at the Conference in Jackson, Miss., December 5-11, 1877, he was ordained Elder by Bishop Holland N. McTyeire.

His first appointment was an expression of confidence in his good character and evidenced the high esteem in which he was held by those who knew him best, for he was sent to the Greensburg Circuit, and thus at once became pastor of the people among whom he had lived for some years. Here he spent five happy and successful years, being permitted to remain so long because in 1874 the circuit was divided and Greensburg and Amite City became a new charge.

From 1876 to 1878 he was on the Paulding charge, after which he was for four years pastor at Fayette. In 1883 and '84 he ministered to the people of Raymond and Bolton, and for the two years following he was pastor at Port Gibson. He spent the year 1887 as pastor for the second time at Fayette, while 1888 and '89 were spent at Bayou Sara, La. Then Morton and Forest were served by him during three successful years, when, beginning in 1893, a prosperous quadrennium was spent at Shubuta. He was pastor at Newton and Hickory in 1897 and '98, after which he was appointed to East End, Meridian, where he gave four years of earnest service. In 1903, '04 and '05 he was at Laurel, being then appointed to Poplarville, where the last three years of his active ministry were spent. Here he built an elegant brick church and a comfortable and beautiful parsonage, which stand to-day as fitting monuments of his fidelity and zeal in the Master's work.

For the last two years Brother Bradford was the victim of disease, and lived in great pain and suffering, but he labored on cheerfully, always doing his best, and hoping ever for the recovery—which never came.

At the last Annual Conference he was forced by this ill health to ask for the superannuate relation. Foreseeing this, he moved at the close of the Conference year to Brookhaven, Miss., where his youngest daughter was in attendance on Whitworth College and where three of his married daughters were residing.

Here I found him in December last, emaciated and suffering greatly in body, but with a smiling face, a loyal, loving heart and a triumphant faith in Jesus Christ. I had no heartier welcome from any one than that he gave me. He was so gentle, so sweet-spirited, so patient, so bright and hopeful in spite of all his weakness and pain, that it was ever a delight and inspiration to me to be with him.

But he was not to be with us long. On Sunday morning, May the 9th, I was hastily summoned to his bedside. It was not a surprise to me, for he had been sinking for some time and it had been quite evident that his strength was almost spent. I had been with him but a few hours when, as the church bells were ringing out their Sabbath invitations to gather at God's altars and worship the Father-King, his spirit shook off its wornout tenement of clay and sped to worship and adore before the heavenly throne of him he had known and loved and followed so long.

Brother Bradford was married to Miss Emma Norwood on the 4th of April, 1866, and for twenty-three years she was the companion of his life. Of this union ten children were born. He married again on February 27th, 1900, this time to Mrs. Lucy C. Alford. She bore him one daughter, and has ever been the devoted sharer of his itinerant life and labors. She, with her daughter and several children of the first marriage, remain to mourn the departure of the loving husband and father.

We buried him from our Methodist Church in Brookhaven, on Monday, May the 10th. Dr. J. W. Cooper, who had known him intimately ever since he entered the ministry, spoke eloquently and with deep feeling of his many and splendid qualities of character—a beautiful and fitting tribute to his noble life. It was then my sad privilege as his pastor and friend to speak my appreciation and love in all too faltering and inadequate words.

Dr. Cooper said of him: "Rev. D. P. Bradford possessed all the elements of a perfect Christian gentleman. He was courteous, kind—the embodiment of unselfishness. Optimism was a chief characteristic. There was no desert to him—flowers bloomed everywhere. He thought very little of the cloud, but much of the beauty of the rainbow. His friendship was perennial. There was no summer drouth to wither the affections.

"In the home he was the prince of hospitality. The warmth of his friendship was a treasure to be greatly prized. His home life had the charm of a beautiful landscape—attractive, entrancing. To his wife and children he ever showed the greatest tenderness and devotion. How he loved them! And how each of them loved him! But the home is desolate now. We miss our friend, but we shall see him again."

Brother Bradford was a man of experience in sorrow and large acquaintance with grief. Time and again the death messenger sought out his loved ones, sometimes most suddenly and in ways most heart-rending, but he bore up heroically under it all, his faith in the love and goodness of God never wavering. For two years and more before his death he was himself in the fearful grip of disease and suffered much, yet he was always patient and uncomplaining, and wore his calm, confident smile to the last.

He was never pastor of any of our "high steeple" churches, but he gave ever the best there was in him to the charge to which he was appointed. To him that was the important charge. If it lacked such development as made it prominent and desirable as a comfortable nest he discovered its latent possibilities and set himself to make it what it ought to be. He did not spend his time repining over the lack of recognition accorded his talents or pitying himself for not being one of the "favorites" of the authorities. If at times he was disappointed in the assignment made to him—and who in that length of service is not—he quickly mastered his feelings and went resolutely to work to make his charge more successful and, therefore, more desirable for the brother who should succeed him.

He was an indefatigable pastor, visiting from house to house, making friends with young and old alike, and praying often and earnestly with his people. The bereaved and afflicted, strangers and needy persons were special objects of his interest and care. He had a way of finding people whom others had failed to discover, and his experiences in sorrow gave him deep and large sympathy with others in distress. Young people and children had a large share in his thought and ministry.

The various interests and funds of our church were sacred to him, and he looked after them with the utmost fidelity. The treasurers of our several Conference boards knew that "Bradford's charge" would always pay its assessments "in full." He is the only member of our Conference, so far as I know, who ever paid the foreign missionary assessment in full during the first week after Conference. This he did while pastor at Shubuta.

As a preacher, Brother Bradford was scriptural, clear, illustrative, earnest, helpful. He did not deal in metaphysics and philosophy. He never attempted to drag the ancients from their tombs or the stars from their spheres. He did not lecture or orate. His was a higher purpose than the display or learning or the fascination of the audience with the elocutionary art. He had a gift for gathering interesting incidents from history and experience, and these he used freely to illustrate and illuminate the points of his discourses. These feathered the arrow of truth from his bow, interested old and young alike, and held the attention of the audience.

No sketch of Brother Bradford would be complete which failed to mention his talent for singing. He had a remarkable voice which ranked him as our Conference leader of song. His clear, sweet voice, with his distinct enunciation, gave him many an opening and opportunity which he never failed to use for the good of men and the glory of God.

In the few months in which it has been my pleasure and profit to be with him here, I found him specially ripe and ready for the home beyond. He loved to talk of Christ and heaven and the interests of the kingdom. His great heart had a warm place for all his brethren, and every reference to any or all of them was loving and beautiful. His love for the sanctuary made him venture on his failing strength several times, always to pay a heavy penalty in suffering thereafter.

He did not want to sunder the strong ties that bound him to dear ones here, but he did want to be in full agreement with the Master's will. Twice he said to me: "Pray for me, Brother Ellis, that I may be willing to go when the Lord thinks best." So fully was that desire granted that, when he saw the dawning light of the Sabbath of his departure, he said to the devoted and anxious ones at his bedside: "It is Sunday. Oh, let me go to-day! Don't keep me another day away from heaven." And before the sun had near climbed to its meridian he was with the Father in the many-mansioned home.

As a husband and father, no man was more devoted and tender, and because he was so much to wife and children the bereavement is the more bitter and sorrowful. Our hearts go out to them in deepest sympathy. But they know it is well with him they loved, still love and shall love ever. They cannot call him back—they would not if they could—but they can go to him. The inheritance of his noble life and sweet memory enriches and inspires their lives. Amid their tears they rejoice in the confidence of a glad reunion in the presence of the Father-King that shall be eternal and full of glory.

Rest thee, thou laborer weary
And worn with the toil of the day:
Thorn-pierced and bruised, but triumphant
And faithful through all the long way.

Rest thee, for he in whose service
Thy strength and thy love have been given
Shall richly reward thy devotion,
And welcome and crown thee in heaven.

Joy that abideth, eternal,
That deepens and heightens for aye,
Fill thee and thrill thee till ever
Forgot are the toils of the way.

WILLIAM B. AUGUSTUS.

An Appreciation.

William Baldwin Augustus, second son of George B. Augustus and Mahala Colbert, was born February 22, 1830, in Monticello, Pike County, Alabama. In 1833 his father moved to Mississippi and settled a few miles northeast of Macon. After two years he moved again and located his family home three miles northwest of Macon. Here the son William was for the most part reared and lived till the time of his death, excepting a residence for some time in Macon, for the benefit, I suppose, of social, educational and religious advantages for his growing family. His only and elder brother, Nicholas Gaines Augustus, died in 1856. He was the father of Rev. N. G. Augustus of the North Mississippi Conference, at present the esteemed presiding elder of Durant District. William B. Augustus died at his family residence near Macon, Noxubee County, Miss., on Sunday afternoon in the midst of his family—the loved and loving husband and father, the honored and lamented citizen and the cultured Christian gentleman.

He was thrice married, first in 1855, to Miss Shadie Ann Brooks; of this marriage one daughter survives, Mrs. Isaac Taylor Smith. His second marriage was in 1868 to Miss Anna Clemens, in Macon. One son, William B. Augustus, Jr., survives this marriage.

On the 7th of July, 1875, he was married the third time to Miss Kate Hooper Brantly, of New Orleans, who with three daughters and two sons survives her husband, one of the sons being married.

His home life was beautiful. Towards his wife and children, the strong man was gentle and affectionate. And these now deeply stricken ones responded to his love with ardent and tender devotion. My acquaintance with him and my friendship for him began in our early youth. We were classmates at Old LaGrange College in north Alabama. For a year and a half we studied the same text books, and received instructions from the same professors. He left LaGrange at the close of his sophomore year, and entered the University of Alabama, where he graduated in July, 18[illegible]. After his graduation he began the study of law, but his father dying in 1850, and leaving himself and mother alone on the plantation, he decided to give up the study of law and devote his life to planting.

During the civil war, he espoused the cause of the South, and early entered the Confederate army with Capt. T. J. Koger's Company, which became a part of the 41st Mississippi Regiment. After a time he became Brigade Quartermaster with the rank of captain, and in some capacity served to the close of the war. He was honored by his fellow citizens with a seat in the legislature for more than one term; was for some time railroad commissioner of his state, and for a long time was president of the Board of Supervisors. He was a member of the Board of Trustees which organized the Mississippi A. & M. College, now one of the most prosperous institutions of the South.

William B. Augustus was a man of strong character, and of rare and sterling worth. He was well poised, quiet and dignified without ostentation. Underlying his many other excellencies was his decided and uniform religious character. He joined the Methodist Church in his boyhood, at Soule Chapel, a neighboring church. A sketch of him by Rev. N. G. Augustus, says: "In 1851, he was elected steward in place of his deceased father, and served the church in that capacity for at least fifty years." His children, all I believe, save William B., Jr., are members of the Methodist Church; and this son, when I took leave of him on the day after the funeral, said: "Pray for me." May God bless this son and help him to surrender himself to the blessed Saviour, and walk in the footsteps of his sainted father.

The religious life and profession of our honored friend and brother, W. B. Augustus, assumed the quiet and unostentatious but decided and uniform type which marked his general character. In keeping with his trait of character was his whispered "Halleluiah," as he neared the closing scene. It was a note of triumphant faith in Christ Jesus, and of praise to his redeeming Lord.

Funeral services were held at the family residence at 3 o'clock P. M., Monday, September 20, conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. J. E. Thomas. Remarks were made also by Dr. H. A. Minor, representing our departed friend's Confederate comrades. In the presence of many sorrowing friends, with appropriate concluding services the body was laid to rest in the Macon Cemetery to await the resurrection of the just.

The passing of W. B. Augustus is a great and felt loss to his many friends and to his church; and an indescribable grief to his wife and children. May these stricken and bleeding hearts surely find comfort and sustaining grace in him who comforteth us in all our tribulations.

CHANGES SEEN BY ONE MISSIONARY.

James Chalmers, the martyred missionary of New Guinea, in addressing a large meeting in London, said: "I have had twenty-one years' experience among the South Sea Islanders, and for at least nine years of my life I have lived with the savages of New Guinea. I have seen the semi-civilized and the uncivilized; I have lived with the Christian native, and I have lived, dined, and slept with the cannibal. But I have never yet met a single man or woman, or a single people that your civilization without Christianity has civilized. Wherever there has been the slightest spark of civilized life in the Southern Seas, it has been because the gospel has been preached there; and wherever you find in the island of New Guinea a friendly people, or a people that will welcome you, there the missionaries of the cross have been preaching Christ."—The Missionary Review of the World.

THE COST OF THE SLUMS.

No less an authority than Jacob Riis declares:

"We, in New York, let our city grow up as it could, not as it should, and we woke up to find ourselves in the grasp of the slum, to find the population of 2,000,000 souls living in an environment in which all the influences made for unrighteousness and for the corruption of youth. We counted thousands of dark rooms in our basements in which no plant could grow, but in which boys and girls were left to grow into men and women, to take over by and by the duties and responsibilities of citizenship. That was our sin and we paid dearly for it, paid in a tuberculosis mortality of 10,000 deaths a year, half of which were due directly to the dark and airless bedrooms; paid in an indifferent citizenship that was a dead weight upon all efforts for reform for years. You could not appeal to it, for it had lost hope, and we have paid for it in treasure without end. It is a costly thing to forget your neighbors."—Missionary Review of the World.

The Home Circle.

BY AND BY.

We shall read life's lessons better
In the blessed by and by.
When our Savior is the teacher,
And we see with tearless eye.
We shall miss no word nor accent,
Neither shall we lose the place,
When we read life's harder lessons
With our Master face to face.

We shall read life's lessons better,
We shall learn them one by one
In the city of the Ransom'd,
Where the crown of life is won.
We shall know about the crosses,
Yes, the loneliness and tears;
We shall learn from God the meaning
Of the trials which filled the years.

There's a page within his volume
Where our losses are explained;
A page we oft have studied
When our souls were surely pained,
We shall read it over yonder—
How different it will be
When the light of Home shall guide us
Our Father's thought to see.

BUTTER-MAKING BY FREEZER.

With the milk from one cow at my disposal, I found before me a difficulty that has presented itself to many a housewife—how to make nice, sweet butter with such a small quantity of cream everyday during the hot weather and with just the ordinary facilities at command. To stir it into butter meant a pat of nice butter, but that was a task that consumed a great deal of time. On the other hand, to keep it until there was enough to churn in the small churn meant loss in quality, for the cream became very sour.

The suggestion of a neighbor that I utilize an ice cream freezer as a churn has proved a boon to me. Besides the small quantity of cream that can be churned, the work can be done in an incredibly short time. For the amount of cream that I have about one hundred and twenty-five revolutions of the crank are usually sufficient to bring the butter. The freezer has still another advantage over the churn, and that is the ease with which it is cleaned. I shall continue to use it during the winter as well as the summer.—Harper's Bazar.

STORY OF A BOY'S BRAVERY.

The story of a little Boer boy who refused to betray his friends, even on the threat of death, is told by Major Seely, M. P. It happened during the Boer War:

"I was asked," said Major Seely, "to get some volunteers, and try to capture a commandant at a place some twenty miles away. I got the men readily, and we set out. It was a rather desperate enterprise, but we got there all right. I can see the little place yet, the valley and the farmhouse, and I can hear the clatter of the horses' hoofs. The Boer general had got away, but where had he gone? It was even a question of the general catching us, and not we catching the general. We rode down to the farmhouse, and there we saw a good-looking Boer boy and some yeoman. I asked the boy if the commandant had been there, and he said in Dutch, taken by surprise, 'Yes.' 'Where has he gone?' I said, and the boy became suspicious. He answered, 'I don't know.'

"I decided then to do a thing for which I hope I may be forgiven, because my men's lives were in danger. I threatened the boy with death if he would not disclose the whereabouts of the general. He still refused, and I put him against a wall, and said I would have him shot. At the same time I whispered to my men, 'For heaven's sake, don't shoot.' The boy still refused, although I could see he believed I was going to have him shot. I ordered the men to 'Aim.' Every rifle was leveled at the boy.

"'Now,' I said, 'before I give the word, which way has the general gone?' I remember the look in the boy's face—a look such I have never seen but once. He was transfigured before me. Something greater almost than anything human shone from his eyes. He drew back his head, and said in Dutch, 'I will not say.' There was nothing for it but to shake hands with the boy and go away."—Selected.

IMPROVIDENT GENEROSITY.

There is such a thing as improvident generosity. Sometimes the motive for it is a desire to splurge or win favor. More often it springs from real, if mistaken, kindness of heart.

A lavishness that is out of keeping with the pocketbook is frequently a form of selfishness. The giver's greatest pleasure is in her giving, and she weighs not the cost to herself or to others. It is not generous to make so many presents that one must shirk family responsibilities. Nor is it generous on the future. Even where a girl has a good income there is much to take into consideration before one can afford a reputation for generosity. Poor health and the many mischances that may shut off that income make it important that some of it be saved. To be overgenerous on a limited income is about as sensible as to sally forth in one's best array on a rainy day.

Some think they can safely be generous if they give, not at the expense of their saving fund, but of their personal appearance. They cheerfully go shabby that they may make presents.

It is a kindly feeling, but a mistaken one. If one could label shabby shoes and a sloppy hat, "due to generosity," all might be well; but they are attributed to slovenliness or to stinginess, and the giver frequently suffers in the opinion of those whom she wishes to think well of her.

The girl inclined to misplaced generosity would do well to hang in her mirror the proverb "To give and keep there is need of wit." This says all that is needful of generosity. No one believes in stinginess. There are few traits more despised. Every one with regard for her own and her friends' future peace of mind should cultivate the "wit" that can distinguish the line between generosity and misplaced giving.—Selected.

PUT IT IN YOUR BIBLE.

Here is a handy table (furnished by the Christian World), which it would be well to cut out or copy for reference in your Bible studies:

A day's journey was about 23 1-5 miles. A Sabbath day's journey was about a mile.

A cubit was nearly 22 inches.

A hand's breadth is equal to 3 5-8 inches.

A finger's breadth is about an inch.

A sheckel of silver was about 50 cents; a sheckel of gold was $8. A talent of silver was $538.30 A talent of gold was $13,809. A farthing was 3 cents. A piece of silver, or a penny, was 13 cents. A mite was less than a quarter of a cent.

An epha, or bath, contained 7 gallons 5 pints.

WHAT A PRISONER DID.

The learned Prince of Grenada, heir to the Spanish throne, imprisoned by order of the crown for fear he would aspire to the throne, was kept in solitary confinement in the old prison at the place of skulls, Madrid. After 33 years in this living tomb, death came to his release, and the following remarkable researches, taken from the Bible, and marked with an old nail on the rough walls of his cell, told how the brain sought employment through the weary years:

In the Bible the word Lord is found 1853 times; the word Jehovah 6855 times, and the word "reverened" but once, and that in the 9th verse of Psalm cxi. The 8th verse of Psalm cxvii is the middle verse of the Bible. Esther viii:9 is the longest verse; John xi:35, the shortest.

In Psalm cvii four verses are alike, the 8th, 15th, 21st and 31st. Each verse of Psalm cxxvi end alike. No names or words of more than six syllables are found in the Bible. Isaiah xxxvii and 2 Kings xix are alike. The word "girl" occurs but once in the Bible, and that is in Joel iii:3.

There are found in both books of the Bible 3,566,490 letters, 773,692 words, 31,173 verses, 1189 chapters, and 66 books. Acts xxvi is the finest chapter to read. The most beautiful chapter in the Bible is Psalm xxiii. The four most inspiring promises are John xiv:2, John vi:37, Matthew xi:28, and Psalm xxxvii:4. Isaiah lx:1 is for the new converts. All who flatter themselves with vain boasting of their perfectness should learn Matthew vi.

IS ONE CHURCH AS GOOD AS ANOTHER?

To say that one church is as good as another is about equivalent to saying, "It makes no difference what a man believes if he is honest," a saying once almost unanimously rejected, but now, since creeds have become useless, not to say abhorrent to the liberal-minded, so called, passes current with little protest. With no doctrinal barriers it is easy for men to pass from one church to another, and even from one pulpit to another.

A few weeks since one of our Southern Methodist preachers left us, and is now pastor of a Congregational Church in Massachusetts. Certainly the Rev. Doctor in making the change does not hold to the idea that one church is as good as another, else he would have remained in the church that made him what he is, and so highly honored him. Indeed he informs the public that he has made the change because he prefers a more democratic form of government than that of Episcopal Methodism, and because Congregationalism "is more hospitable to the truth" than his mother Church.

One of our northern exchanges, commenting on Dr. Bradley's transfer to Congregationalism, says: "It is a note of the times that in making the transfer, Dr. Bradley is not expected or required by his congregation to modify his creed or his teaching. Fifty years ago New England Congregationalism had quite another opinion of Methodism." We suppose the editor said that, believing Dr. Bradley to be a thorough representative of Methodist faith. "We think it likely that the Congregational Church would accept any man of talent and attainment, and good character, from the Methodists, even one of stalwart orthodoxy; but in the transfer of Dr. Bradley, they secure a man, not only out of sympathy with Methodist Church government, but out of sympathy with Methodist doctrine. We regret the loss of any good man from our ranks, but we are free to say that when a man ceases to agree with us in "doctrine and discipline," it is well for him to seek congenial company. At the same time we cannot enter into sympathy with any one who leaves us for another communion.

It is easy to see that we do not believe "one church to be as good as another." In a few particulars, some other churches are quite as good as the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, but, all in all, in creed and practice, in government and in other things that go to make it a whole church, we believe it is the best. At any rate we are contented and [illegible] with [illegible] strength we have [illegible].

[illegible] in the [illegible] New Orleans and Baltimore [illegible] fortune [illegible] hundreds of thousands [illegible] has been given [illegible] the finding of the original document [illegible] of the [illegible] New Orleans. The will, together with an important letter by Mr. McDonogh, [illegible] fifty years [illegible] brought to light [illegible] remarkable [illegible] from the Presbyterian of the South.

Again it is made known that John McDonogh gave his money to these two cities with the express proviso that the Holy Bible should be at all times and forever made use of in the schools established with his money. Here is the clause of the will in its exact words: "For the purpose of being instructed in the knowledge of the Lord, and in reading, writing, arithmetic, history, geography, etc., under such regulations as the commissioners of said schools shall establish, always understood and provided, however, that the Holy Bible of the Old and New Testaments shall be at all times and forever made use of in those schools as one (and the principal one) of the reading or class books which shall be used by the pupils therein, as the first object of every school and all teaching should be to implant in their minds a knowledge of their duty to God and the relations of men to their divine Creator, and singing classes shall be established and forever supported; and singing taught as a regular branch of such schools, which means that each pupil shall acquire the rudiments of the art, and obtain a knowledge of singing sacred music." And again is the fact brought out, by the re-discovery and re-reading of this will, that while Baltimore is faithful to the trust and is using its part of the bequest as provided for by McDonogh, New Orleans is using the money and violating the trust all the time.

The readers of the Advocate are requested to carefully note the facts:

1. It is specifically provided in the will, "that the Holy Bible of the Old and New Testaments shall be at all times and forever made use of in those schools as one (and the principal one) of the reading or class books which shall be used by the pupils therein, etc." The terms in which this clause is written are not equivocal. They admit of no double construction. The executors of the will, or whoever administered the estate, had but one of two things to do. One was to execute it according to its terms, the other to repudiate its provisions.

2. There are in New Orleans between fifteen and twenty "McDonogh Schools" built with John McDonogh's money, in not one of which is the Bible used as "a reading or class book." Not even a daily lesson is read from its sacred pages. This is what the Presbyterian of the South calls the violation of a trust. And such it is. It is a burning shame—a shame to the good city of New Orleans.

3. Who is to blame? As to the chief offenders we are not sufficiently informed to say. But it seems to us that the people who suffer the continued violation of the trust to the injury of their children, are not altogether blameless. There is a way to right this wrong, and the people should see that it is done at the earliest moment possible.

WHO ARE THE PAGANS?

In the beginning of the New Testament religion, the towns and villages were first to receive it, and the people were called Christians, [illegible] young men who held on to their idolatrous [illegible] and heathenish [illegible] were called pagans. To-day the people of all countries where Christianity or the Jewish religion [illegible] are classed as pagan. In applying the term, however, it is not understood always that pagans are idolaters or believers in a plurality of gods. The term is more general in its [illegible] the hordes [illegible] but the [illegible] men and women [illegible] of a Christian civilization are [illegible]. [illegible] pagans [illegible] in the United States. They do not literally [illegible] but they look [illegible] with as much assurance as [illegible] and trust in [illegible]. They are eager in the pursuit of money, utterly indifferent as to the means by which they may obtain it, and when they have it in possession [illegible] their gains and their [illegible]. God is not in all their thoughts. [illegible] benevolence, [illegible] thought is as foreign to them as if there were no human beings in the world save themselves. They are as utterly pagan as was the rich fool who when he considered the bigness and fulness of his barns, quietly seated himself and said: "Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; eat, drink and be merry." He laid up treasure for himself and was not rich toward God.

IN THE NOVEMBER CENTURY.

Prof. Elie Metchnikoff has written for the November Century of "The Utility of Lactic Microbes," and everybody will want to know just what he means by "lactic microbes," and how far he can prove that their habitual use helps to health and long life. The article goes at some length into Prof. Metchnikoff's views on longevity. He says: "Contrary to what many journalists have made me say, I have never, in any of my publications on the subject, asserted that curdled milk is able to prolong life."

BISHOP ATKINS' CRITICS.

At the close of Bishop Atkins' round of Conferences in the West he gave some strong reasons why our Southern Methodism should be fortified in that enterprising section of the country. In the same connection he alluded to the South as the home of Methodism, and where it would be the last to decay and die, should it die at all, or "words to that effect." The Bishop's words provoked some smiles and some criticisms "up North." We have taken a little pains to look into the matter, and find that while "it is believed" the first Methodist service held in America was in New York in 1766, it soon got a fast hold in Maryland and Delaware, where it became "the dominant popular and religious power." We further learned that as far back as 1784, "though widely spread, being found in every State of the Union outside of New England, * * * nearly nine-tenths of its membership were south of Mason and Dixon's line, and of these a large proportion were in the Middle States, where the Anglican, or the English Established Church, once so flourishing, had become nearly extinct." Bishop Atkins was not far wrong. And we dare say that to-day, in proportion to population, Methodism is much stronger in the South than in the North.

PERSONAL.

The brethren of the Louisiana Conference will bear in mind the change of date, from Dec. 15 to Dec. 8. See the notice of Rev. H. R. Singleton in another column.

Rev. Geo. W. Hively, who, for the past two years has been in New Mexico, will return to Arkansas in time to receive an appointment in one of the Conferences in that State.

The work at Carthage, Miss., under the care of Rev. B. E. Meigs, is in "good shape," and he "will make a full report at Conference." Brother Meigs has also done some good work in behalf of the ADVOCATE, for which we thank him.

Rev. D. C. Langford, writing from Taylorsville, Miss., says: "Taylorsville circuit is getting along nicely. We have had some good revivals. Our collections will be in full. The Leagues, Sunday schools and Missionary Societies are all doing well."

Rev. W. W. Graves, who always does good work, leaving his charge in good shape, and sometimes leaves a fine patch of cabbage for the next preacher, has done fine work this year on the Homewood (Miss.) charge, and everything "moves along nicely."

Rev. G. W. Harhin, having closed his engagement with Carrollton Avenue Church, is now with Rev. A. S. Lutz at Felicity Street, where he is holding two services a day. On Sunday afternoon he delivered an address at the Young Men's Christian Association Hall, subject, "Seeking for a Man."

The ADVOCATE Publishing Committee was in session this week while the last forms of the paper were running through the press, and, of course, this week's paper can report nothing concerning the work done. At this writing only one member of the Committee living outside the city has arrived, Rev. W. W. Drake, who is in fine health and spirits.

The body of Bishop Seth Ward, who died in Kobe, Japan, Sept. 20, reached San Francisco last Friday, to be conveyed immediately to Houston, Texas, where the funeral services will be held this week. The whole church will mourn with the bereaved wife and children in their great sorrow. May our kind heavenly Father comfort them in this trying hour.

"Children's Day" was observed at Franklin, La., last Sunday, Rev. C. C. Wier, pastor. The programme was good, and we dare say, well rendered. The leading address was by U. S. Senator M. J. Foster, who is a citizen of Franklin. Our country is safe as long as leading men, like Senator Foster, take interest in Sunday schools. It is inspiring to our young men.

We are in receipt of the following note from Rev. C. McDonald, Newton, Miss.: "The brethren will be sorry to learn that Rev. C. A. Powell is still closely confined to his room. He is receiving every needed attention. Some of the ministerial brethren have been to see him—a great comfort to him. I am filling his pulpit as best I can. We have good congregations and a fine Sunday school."

We regret to learn of the serious illness of Mr. Daniel Betts, son of Rev. W. A. Betts of the Mississippi Training School. He will be remembered by many as an active canvasser for the Training School last summer. Brother Betts writes us that he is in the City Hospital at Spartanburg, S. C., at which place he is a Senior in Wofford College. The brethren are requested to remember him in prayer.

Dr. James H. Carlisle, for more than twenty-five years the active president of Wofford College, and for several years past President Emeritus, died at his residence in Spartanburg, S. C., last Sunday. His death was not unexpected, having been feeble for a long time. Dr. Carlisle was a remarkable man—a man of profound learning, but as simple in his piety as a child. His influence was beyond calculation. From the lay ranks of the church he will be greatly missed.

Rev. M. M. Black, of Port Gibson, Miss., has been blessed in his work with a gracious revival. The services covered a period of ten days. Eight members were added to the church on profession of faith, four of them being heads of families. The revival quickened the spiritual life of almost the entire membership. Two persons united with the Presbyterian Church, and one with the Baptist Church. Brother Black was assisted in the meeting by Rev. T. H. Dorsey, of West Point, Miss., who "rendered noble service." He greatly pleased the good people of Port Gibson.

We call special attention to the "Orphanage Car," a notice of which we print elsewhere. The car will be run from Memphis, Tenn., to Jackson, Miss., in the interest of the two Orphanages located at the latter place—the Baptist Orphanage, and the Mississippi Methodist Orphanage. It will be under the supervision of Rev. B. F. Whitten and Rev. V. C. Curtis, pastors, respectively, of the Baptist and Southern Methodist Churches at Coldwater, Miss. We wonder if there will not be a generous rivalry between the Methodists and Baptists all the way from Memphis to Jackson. We hope a large supply of necessaries—groceries, clothing, farm produce, etc., will be gathered up for the two noble institutions.

THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Alexandria, La., Oct. 18, 1909.—I am in receipt of a message from Bishop Candler saying he will hold our Conference here on Dec. 8. If the members will drop me a card and tell me what preacher they would like for a room-mate, I will try to fix it. We want everybody to be so comfortable that the Conference will come to the Hub City every year.

H. R. SINGLETON.

ORPHANAGE CAR.

Under the joint direction of the Coldwater Baptist Association and the Sardis District Methodist Conference, an orphanage car, or cars, will be run from Memphis to Jackson in the interest of the Baptist and Methodist Orphanages, leaving Memphis on Monday morning, Nov. 22, and running through on the schedule of the local freight.

B. F. Whitten and V. C. Curtis, pastors of the Baptist and Methodist Churches, respectively, at Coldwater, have been officially appointed to arrange for and superintend the operation of this car, and by newspaper announcement and private correspondence, to urge the co-operation of all the Baptist and Methodist churches on or contiguous to this line of railroad.

Let us therefore urge that each pastor or Sunday school superintendent on or reasonably near this line of road between Memphis and Jackson to appoint a live committee at once to solicit donations and get same ready for shipment on this car. The railroad company has agreed to furnish the car free, and now let us load it well in the interest of our orphan children.

The undersigned will accompany this car and receive all donations. Mark your boxes and packages plainly (box securely). If your donation is for the Baptist Orphanage, simply mark it "Baptist Orphanage;" if for the Methodist Orphanage, mark it "Methodist Orphanage," and your boxes or packages will reach the desired destination.

Send dry goods, meat, lard, molasses, potatoes, peas, chickens, eggs, butter, canned fruit, or in short, anything that can be used by the ordinary family.

Let all those who are willing to co-operate in this work and patronize this car write us at once to that effect, giving name and postoffice address of the chairman of your committee, that we may open correspondence at once. Direct all communications to either or both of the undersigned.

B. F. WHITTEN,
V. C. CURTIS,
Coldwater, Miss.

We often do more good by our sympathy than by our labors, and render to the world a more lasting service by absence of jealousy and recognition of merit than we could ever render by the straining efforts of personal ambition.—Dean Farrar.

A bright, happy soul, rejoicing in all God's gifts, seeing cause for thankfulness and gladness in everything, counting up mercies rather than trials, looking at the bright side, even of sickness, bereavement and death—what a very fountain of goodness and love of Christ such an one is! I remember one who, worn with sickness and sleepless nights, answered to the question if the nights did not seem interminable: "O, no; I lie still and count up my blessings."—Selected.

LESSON FOR OCT. 31.

PAUL A PRISONER—THE VOYAGE

Acts xxvii:13-26.

Golden Text: "Commit thy way unto the Lord, trust also in him, and he will bring it to pass." Psalms xxxvii:5.

The pen of the modern writer pictures a voyage through the waters of the Levant as most charming, most delightful; the placid waves seemingly asleep, only moving in long, lazy rolls as they part at the bow of the vessel and unite again in the foamy whiteness of the wake. All speaking of an undisturbed peace, in forgetfulness of other times when the prospect was not so calm and serene.

Such a voyage was not for Paul, "the servant of Jesus Christ, separated unto the gospel of God." He was truly a servant, a servant and a soldier, and where he went bearing the gospel there was warfare, until it seemed that the elements were arrayed against him at the command of "the Prince of the power of the air." There comes a time for us all, as we struggle for spiritual existence, when the sky becomes leaden hued, hope all fled, until we look up, up above any earthly aid, and receive, for the looking, the fulfilled promise, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." So, like the waters of the Levant to the life of the Christian, some days full of sunshine, full of blessing from him of whom to ask is to receive; then other days when the soul is tempest tossed, when hovering clouds of sorrow veils the smiling face that is just beyond.

Paul was about to be sent far hence to the Gentiles, he was about to commence the consummation of the divine plan first revealed to him when the world was shut out from him by the brightness of the vision, in which he heard the voice of him who had called into service the zeal aforetime adversely exercised. It is strange that Paul, who was ready to obey the commands of the Master, should go to preach the gospel as a prisoner. It might have been that no other way was open, for his sect "was everywhere spoken against." He was a prisoner and under constant surveillance of an officer of the Roman army, the name of this officer was Julius, and he was a centurion of Augustus' band, probably a detachment of a guard used for special purposes. Julius was a man of estimable character, especially considerate towards his prisoner, in that he "courteously entreated Paul." All the centurions of New Testament account were men of high standing, honorable and devout. Jesus commended the faith of one as far above any faith found in Israel, and at the crucifixion it was a centurion that said: "Truly this was the Son of God."

Under the direction of Julius, Paul's surroundings were made as bearable as possible, which was very fortunate, as the very beginning of the voyage was beset with difficulties "because the winds were contrary." After many days of slowly sailing the ship passed along the south shore of the island of Crete, coming to a place called the Fair Havens, near the city of Lasea. On a direct line from Sidon to Syracuse, the ship had sailed half the voyage, but the remaining distance was the most hazardous. Much time was spent deliberating whether they should leave Fair Havens. Paul counselled the centurion to remain, but that officer was inclined to the decision of the master and owner of the vessel, and he decided that as the harbor of Fair Haven was not commodious to winter in, that they should at least make an attempt to reach Phenice, a city on the western end of the island of Crete, and there wait the winter through. They never reached the harbor of Phenice, although the start was made as the south wind blew softly. Just as soon as the vessel began to round the western end of Crete, the fierce Euroclydon came down upon them from the northeast, the course of the vessel changed and they were at the mercy of the storm. They were drifting now and passing the island of Clauda, they began to fear the quicksands of Sarty, a bay on the African coast. The storm increased in violence and no sail could stand such winds. Their only hope was in legway, which would give them a slow progress toward the northwest. The ship was lightened of everything that could be spared, and undergirded with cables from stem to stern. The storm abated not for many days, during which the sun by day and the stars by night were not seen. Then "all hope that we should be saved was taken away." Then came the time for Paul the prisoner to tell the perishing crew of the mighty power of the God whose he was and whom he served. An angel had been sent to tell Paul not to fear; he had embarked for Rome to stand before Caesar, and God's ways were immutable. God ruled the storm, and despite the gale the ship was then being driven over the course she had intended to sail; the ship and cargo would be lost, but not one of the hundreds of souls aboard should perish. Wherefore sirs, said Paul, be of good cheer, for I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me, but we will be cast upon a certain island. The truth of Paul's words was shown them with the morning light, when they found themselves near an unknown shore. Coming near, they saw the mouth of a creek, between which shores they wished to run the ship, but in this attempt the ship was run aground and broken to pieces, but not one soul perished in the waves.

Our God is the same good and kind Father now as he was in the day of Paul. He guided Paul through the storm, and there is nothing that can come between us and his constant care. There was a time when "all hope of being saved was taken away" from us, but even as the storm arose and the winds were fierce about us, there came a gentle voice calling us back to the way "Beside the still waters" and the guidance of Jesus, the tender Shepherd. The surging billows and howling winds kept not God's messenger from Paul, and the prayer of God's weakest child will mount upward, though the clouds shut out the sun and stars. Faith saved all on board the wrecked ship, the faith of one and our faith is just as full of power. Faith is the measure by which blessings are meted to us, for Jesus says: "According to your faith, be it unto you." Matt. ix:29.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

FROM MONTPELIER, MISS.

Dear Brother Editor: Will you please give space in your valuable columns for a few items from Montpelier Circuit.

I am now closing the most strenuous year of my life with the task growing heavier every day, but thank God and the good people of the charge the work has not been in vain.

The church at Woodland is making some progress, but we have been much hindered in our new building, owing to trouble in getting material, and sickness of contractor. We now have most of the material on the ground and the work, I trust, will soon be in full blast. This will depend, however, on the health of our good contractor, U. J. Wilson, who has been sick for some time. Will the church please join me in prayer for the health of this man. We have a fine, loyal people at this place, and I think we will soon have a half-station here. It is beautiful for location and favorably situated in a growing country.

The work moves on as usual at Palestine with two Sundays schools, conducted by our consecrated and zealous superintendent, T. A. Alexander. This church is the home of Brother C. C. Cross and wife, than whom no preacher ever had better friends. Always zealous, loving and liberal, to which all of my predecessors will bear witness. Here we have a large, loyal membership. I expect this church pays the largest salary of any country church in the Conference ($350).

Mantee is a new place with an organization of only nineteen members, but they are the brave and heroic little band that can be counted on to do all in their power. I trust they will soon be domiciled in their new church which is now going up. It will be creditable to the town, consisting as it does of two good Sunday school rooms and a very good-sized auditorium. A large part of this work is being done by four men supported and encouraged by a little band of as true women as can be found anywhere.

The stewards at Prospect are rejoicing over the assurance of getting their assessments for preacher in full with a probable excess. These are a fine set of people, with a good future.

At Foster's Chapel we had a great revival, resulting in nineteen additions to the church. This is one of our most promising fields, with an already progressive and loyal people, and all the field is left open to our church. At our last church conference plans were laid to move the church from its present stand to a more accessible one, and modernize it. When this is done, no country church in all North Mississippi will have a better future.

And Sparta, last but not least, and like its ancient namesake—little, but brave. They were the first to pay their assessment last year. I trust they may be as plucky this year. They have suffered much from a hegira in which they lost some of their best members, but we hope for the final triumph of this dear people.

All in all, we have a good charge, a fine board of stewards as can be found anywhere, and as truly good people as any pastor serves. May God bless them all. P. C.

FREE DEAFNESS CURE.

A remarkable offer by one of the leading ear specialists in this country, who will send two months' medicine free, to prove his ability to cure Deafness, Head Noises, and Catarrh. Address Dr. G. M. Branaman, 1100 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo.

MERIDIAN — SEVENTH AVENUE AND VIMVILLE.

Dear Advocate: While opportunity affords itself I will say a few words relative to my work.

I began my revival campaign the second Sunday in July, held two meetings that month, being assisted in the first one by Rev. J. E. Sampley of Meridian, Miss., and doing the preaching in the second myself. They were very fruitful meetings, especially the one Brother Sampley conducted.

About the close of this second meeting my wife was taken seriously ill with typhoid fever and for three weeks her life hung in the balance—two doctors giving her up to die, but faithful prayer was made for her by many of God's true children, and he heard them and spared her life, and she is now almost convalescent, for which I am devoutly thankful to good friends and a loving heavenly Father.

Aug. 3-17, Rev. J. B. Kendall, of Wilmore, Ky., conducted a tent meeting for the whole work at Seventh Avenue (Meridian), which resulted in between seventy-five and 100 conversions or sanctifications and a goodly number of accessions. I was kept away from this meeting with the exception of two services by the sickness of my wife. On the first Sunday in September I began a meeting at another point on the work and without a doubt it was the best meeting the Lord ever let me conduct. People were saved before they could bow at the altar, others in their seats, while some were saved on their road home. The power of God was so wonderfully upon us.

Brother L. B. Moore, a local preacher on the work, preached three effective sermons during the meeting. New family altars were erected, some of the worst characters of the community were gloriously converted, and some of the most influential members of the church were wonderfully sanctified, and to be sure the old-time Methodist shouts rang out good and clear. Amen!

I have since held two more meetings on the work, being assisted most of the time by Rev. W. W. Nelson, a local preacher on the work, and good meetings there were, too.

On account of my wife's sickness which kept me away from the work so long, and having the same work that two men had last year, I will not be able to bring up as good report as I otherwise would have done, yet I will have a better report than I had last year.

I will (D. V.) hold one more revival on my own work, besides helping other brethren some, and then I will begin in earnest to get ready for "Brookhaven." Yours in Christ,

J. A. WELLS.

BASTROP, LA.

Dear Sir: Possibly as the Bastrop Charge is one of the oldest in our Conference, many will be glad to know of progress here. The church building, a solid brick structure, has been repaired and repainted and a more hopeful spirit is shown by the congregation.

At Humphrey Chapel a fruitful meeting has just closed. Rev. T. S. Randle and Mrs. Randle rendered valuable assistance. As a result about twenty or twenty-five conversions and seventeen accessions to the church. Our Ladies Aid has materially added to the comfort of the pastor and family in much needed parsonage furniture.

Dr. Keener, our presiding elder, gave us two very instructive sermons on the "Truth Incarnated" and Truth Impersonated" on last Sunday. Fraternally, S. J. DAVIES.

WILSON CHARGE.

Dear Advocate: We have recently closed a ten-days revival meeting here in Wilson. Rev. S. D. Howard did the preaching and it was well done. Brother Howard is a true man, an uncompromising, Holy Ghost preacher and a good revivalist. I like to work with him.

As to the results of the meeting, they were not what we had hoped to see. However, we believe great good was accomplished. Eternity will only reveal the good that was done. We are following up the work, trusting that greater results will gradually develop.

It was in this very cottage in Brookside, 15 miles from Birmingham, Ala., that three Italians nearly died of Fever. They had been sick 3 months. Johnson's Tonic cured them quickly—read letter below:

Brookside, Ala., May 4, 1903.

The two physicians here had 3 very obstinate cases of continued Malarial Fever. All were Italians and lived on a creek 50 yards from my store. These cases were of three months standing, their temperature ranging from 100 to 104. The doctors had tried everything in vain. I persuaded them to let me try Johnson's Tonic. I removed all the printed matter and let the medicine go out in a plain bottle as a regular prescription. The effect in all three cases was immediate and permanent. They recovered rapidly and there was no recurrence of the Fever.

POOR RICH, AND RICH POOR.
Luke xvi:19-31.

In the parable the Master makes startling contrasts. He presents a man who is rich in this worlds goods, and then follows him into an eternal poverty and loss. Over against him he places the man who lives and dies as a beggar, and yet who proves to be possessed of eternal riches. It is well to realize the rich man was not lost because he was rich in this world, nor Lazarus saved because he was poor in this world, but the Master takes the incident that by its contrasts most forcibly brings out the great teachings of the parable.

The Jew felt that the Lord would prosper a man who was righteous, and to have great possessions was in itself an indication that a man was good. The beggar was supposed to have sinned against God, else why should he be so afflicted. To the rich man it is said, "In thy life time thou receivest thy good things." You received that upon which your heart was set. If a man's treasures are in this life, if his hopes and aspirations do not carry him to the higher things to come, then is he poor indeed, and he will have no inheritance with God. Without regard to the amount of their possessions men are setting their hearts upon the things which perish.

The heart of Lazarus was set on the things of the coming life and he had his good things there, and there received them, where they abide forever. It is the privilege of every man, without regard to whether he has a bank account or not, to have treasure incorruptible and undefiled, reserved in heaven, against the time of his coming.

Men do not cease to pray with life; even in hell the rich man raises his voice in prayer for his brothers, but it is too late, and his request is not granted. He is told that if men would not believe the evidence given to them here, they would not believe if one rose from the dead. The whole parable is a strange, realistic touch of the unseen life, by one who saw two worlds. To the Christ, the possessions of this world were as nothing compared with the treasures that the coming life would give. Even the beggar, who has treasure with God, is better off than the man who has great riches with men, but no treasure in heaven.

HER DUTY

"I feel it my duty," writes Mrs. Martha Dingus, of Lykins, Ky., "to inform you what Cardui has done for me. I have been a chronic invalid for years. I reckon I have had about every ailment that women are heir to. I have doctored a great deal with a great many doctors, as we have traveled a great deal in search of health, yet received but little benefit and got no better.

"Four months ago I commenced to use Cardui, and since then have been steadily improving all the time. I am now 46 years old, and am in better health than I have been in 20 years, and I give Cardui the credit for it."

Cardui has been known, during the past 50 years, as a reliable, effective remedy, for the ailments peculiar to women. It is a pure, non-intoxicating preparation, made exclusively from vegetable ingredients, having a special, curative effect on the female system. Cardui has been found to relieve pain and restore disordered functions to health.

If you're ill, don't wait until you have suffered for years before taking Cardui to relieve you. Isn't it your duty to spare yourself this pain? Get Cardui at once. All reliable druggists sell it.

REVIVAL AT POPLARVILLE, MISS.

A few days ago we closed a revival at this place which we considered fine. Some who have been here several years pronounce it the best that the Methodist Church has had since they have been here. As we see them, the visible results are nineteen accessions to the Methodist Church, a dozen or more family altars established, thirty or more conversions and reclamations, and quite a number of the members of the different churches very much built up spiritually. We don't feel that these results were obtained except in co-operation with the means of grace and the Spirit. As pastor for several months previous to the meeting, my preaching was done with reference to the coming revival. For sometime before the meeting a number of the members of the church had been praying for the revival. The meeting had been announced for quite a while also. Our presiding elder, who held our quarterly conference a short while before the meeting, preached us several splendid revival sermons.

The preaching during the meeting was done by Revs. M. L. Burton and D. E. Kelly. Brother Burton came first and preached several strong sermons that were very appropriate and did much towards laying the foundation for the success of the meeting. Brother Kelly followed Brother Burton, and seemed to known just how to begin where Brother Burton had left off. He did some splendid preaching with telling effect. The meeting increased in interest continuously from the beginning to the close. The other denominations of the town manifested a beautiful fraternal spirit toward the meeting. The spirit of harmony prevailed throughout. The pastor of the Baptist Church was with us in most of the services, rendering valuable and appreciated services in prayer, talking with penitents at the altar, and speaking good words for the meeting. This meeting leaves the denominations of the town with a splendid fraternal feeling.

To pastors needing good help in revival work I commend Brothers Burton and Kelly. Fraternally,

CAPUDINE CURES HEADACHE.

There isn't any headache remedy that does the work like Hick's Capudine. For sick of nervous headache, headaches from heat, cold, grip or stomach troubles—it gives immediate relief. Liquid, easy to take. Sold by druggists.

FROM HOLLY SPRINGS.

Our hearts are full of rejoicing over the gracious revival with which we have just been blessed. The good which has been accomplished is incalculable, doubtless much of it will never be reckoned up. But we can tabulate some of the visible results, and these are not to be despised. Twenty received into our own church by baptism, others upon certificate; several additions each to the Presbyterian and Baptist Churches; a great number of family altars pledged; a weekly woman's prayer-meeting instituted; these and even many other things might be instanced as the conspicuous results, while the enlarged spiritual life of the church, not reducible to figures, is even a greater occasion for ascription of praise to the Author of the success.

The preaching was done by Rev. Norman Guice, of Natchez, to my notion one of the best evangelists I have ever seen. He will pardon my saying it of him—he is an unusual man. A perfect gentleman, versatile, accomplished, scholarly, he combines with these qualities an earnest spirituality and a Christly humility that gives his message unusual power. He is entirely free from the professional cant which is observed in so many who give themselven wholly to evangelistic work.

It delights me to feel that my ministry here, which has been so grievously short of my ideals, will have the benediction of this revival as its parting note. My successor will be a fortunate man. He will live in the most delightful town I have ever known; his congregation will be composed of the most cultivated and gracious people I have ever enjoyed the friendship of; he will preach in one of the most stately and beautiful edifices in Southern Methodism, recently renovated and decorated; may he do a great work! My conviction is firm that no nobler folk live anywhere than are those who have so generously borne with me these years! May the blessings of God attend them always, and may they go from glory to glory, ever preserving inviolate the proud traditions of this historic church, whose noble record should ever inspire them to grander achievements!

RAINEY (MISS.) MISSION.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Will you give me space through the medium of the dear old Advocate to report the result of our labors this year on the Rainey Mission charge of the Corinth District?

We held our first meeting this summer with the Bethel Church, the fourth Sunday in July, assisted by Rev. J. W. Poston, of Holly Springs. The meeting resulted in eight conversions and six additions to the church on profession of faith, and the church was much revived.

Our next meeting was held the first Sunday in August at Rainey's Chapel, our home church, located seven miles west of Ripley at Shady Grove. We were ably assisted by Rev. J. H. Bass, pastor at Ripley. We had a fine meeting here with five additions, five infants baptized, seven conversions and the Christians greatly encouraged to better living. We then moved the battle on to Black Jack, where we had five conversions and six additions on profession of faith and baptism. We had no ministerial help at this or the remaining three meetings.

We moved on to Shelby Creek from Black Jack. Had a good meeting there with six conversions and four accessions to the Methodist Church.

Our fifth meeting was held at Marvin, beginning the fifth Sunday in August, and resulted in three conversions and no accessions.

We next held our sixth and last meeting for this charge, at Mt. Pleasant, the first Sunday in September, and had a very gracious revival. God honored our labors at this point with twenty conversions and five additions to our church, making in all forty-nine conversions and twenty-six additions to the M. E. Church, South.

Thus, you see, we have had a very pleasant and profitable year and expect to go up to Conference with all claims in full.

EUROPE IN 1910.

I am getting up a limited party for a trip through Europe in 1910, leaving about June 1st. The great Missionary Conference will be in Edinburgh, Scotland, June 14-24, and this is Passion-Play year. These alone will be worth a trip across the waters.

I have personally conducted several parties through Europe, and am familiar with all the details of travel. My wife will accompany me and act as chaperon for girls. Write at once for particulars, as only a limited number can be accommodated. I can give you the trip of your life at a small cost. The countries we will visit: Scotland, England, Belgium, Germany, Switzerland, Italy and France—64 days.

FROM KOSSUTH CIRCUIT.

Dear Dr. Boswell: I send you a brief report of Kossuth Charge. Owing to the serious affliction of my wife I have been very much interfered with in my revival work, but neighboring brethren have rendered the assistance needed. For this aid I am truly grateful to the brethren.

Brother O. L. Savage, of Iuka Station, began a meeting for me at Pleasant Hill Monday after the second Sunday in August, preaching twice each day until Friday night following. As a result the church was revived and two were added to the membership. I continued the meeting until the third Sunday at 11 a. m. Brother Savage did good faithful work.

Our second meeting was at Kossuth, fourth Sunday in August, when Brother L. M. Broyles, of Corinth Station, did the preaching from Sunday night until the following Thursday night, and it was well done. I continued the meeting until Sunday night. There were twenty-four accessions during this meeting and new life imparted to the memberhip.

Our third meeting was at Wesley, where I began on the third Sunday in September. Brother James Gullett came to our relief on Wednesday following, and rendered faithful service until the close of the meeting. There we had twelve accessions and the church was greatly helped. Brother Gullett is a new man in the ministry, having been preaching only about eleven months. He is serving Dry Run Mission as a supply and has been very successful in his work.

Conference will soon be on us. We hope to be able to present a good report.

G. W. GORDON.

HOW COCA-COLA RELIEVES FATIGUE.

Many people who have refrained drinking COCA-COLA thinking that it was injurious because it relieved fatigue, will be pleased to learn that Chemists of the Pure Food Department at Washington, also the Chemists of nearly all the States have made analyses of COCA-COLA obtained in the open market and find that it contains no "dope." In more elegant language it contains no cocaine, morphine or narcotics of any kind. What then does COCA-COLA contain, and how is it that it relieves fatigue? The analyses shows that COCA-COLA contains water, sugar, (syrup,) flavoring matter, and a substance called caffeine. Caffeine is the substance found in coffee beans, tea leaves and cola nuts. A glass of COCA-COLA, however, contains according to the Chemists, less caffeine than a cup of coffee of average strength.

The only difference between tea and and coffee and COCA-COLA is that tea and coffee both contain small quantities of another substance called tannic acid, or tannin, which is the material found in the tan bark of commerce. This tannic acid coagulates proteids such as white of eggs, gluten of flour, and lean meat, also pepsin of the gastric juice; that is to say, it tans or hardens these materials just as it tans the skins of animals, converting them into leather. Owing to the presence of this tannic acid both tea and coffee interfere more or less with digestion, and this is why some people find that tea and coffee disagree with them. However, the caffeine which is a tonic to digestion, overcomes to a large degree the bad effects of the tannic acid. COCA-COLA is entirely free from tannic acid. The caffeine contained in coffee, tea, COCA-COLA, etc., is refreshing to the nerves. It is "sedative" to the sensory nerves, or in other words it "steadies" them. There is no narcotic effect whatever, and it is a tonic rather than a depressant. The presence of caffeine explains why COCA-COLA, tea and coffee are refreshing and how they relieve fatigue.

Some people find that coffee, tea and COCA-COLA keep them awake if drunk at night, also that these beverages make their minds more active. This is due to the fact that their active principle, caffeine, increases the activity of the nerve cells of the outer parts of the brain, which nerve cells preside over the functions of the mind, sensibility, reason and will. In this way these beverages make the mind brighter or more active, and no harm is done in such case except for loss of sleep. People who are affected in this way, however, should avoid the use of these beverages at night, or in the late afternoon. Taken at other times they are harmless.

Bodi-Tone

The Bodi-Tone Company

wants you to try a full-sized one dollar box of Bodi-Tone at its risk and expense, so that you will get acquainted with this new scientific medicinal combination, which is going to become the foremost medicine used by the American People. We want you to send us the Bodi-Tone Coupon, giving us your full name and address, and the one dollar box of Bodi-Tone will be sent to you by next post, without a penny for you to pay unless it TONES ALL YOUR BODY.

Bodi-Tone

is just what its name means—A TONE FOR ALL THE BODY and we want you to try it and see what it will do for YOUR body. Bodi-Tone is a little round tablet that is taken three times every day. Each $1.00 box contains seventy-five Bodi-Tones, enough for twenty-five days continuous use, and we send you the full box without a penny in advance, so that you can try it and learn what it is, so you can learn how easy and simple it is to take, so you can learn how it works in the body, how it helps nature to tone every organ in the body.

Bodi-Tone

is a new remedy, but the ingredients which compose it are as old as the science of medicine itself. Its composition is not secret. Every one of the twelve valuable ingredients which go to make up Bodi-Tone are well known to all doctors of all schools; each one has a well defined, well known and thoroughly established place in the realm of medicine and is prescribed by physicians every day in the year. Among the ingredients which compose Bodi-Tone are Iron, for the Blood, Phosphate to help tone the Nerves, Lithia for the Kidneys, Gentian for the Stomach, Chinese Rhubarb for the Liver, Cascara, which restores tone to the Bowels and Intestines, and Peruvian Bark for the General System. We claim no credit for these ingredients, each of which has its own well-deserved place in the Materia Medicas of all the civilized world and are recommended by all modern medical writers and teachers—we simply claim credit for the manner in which they are combined, for the proportions used, for the remedy—Bodi-Tone, which they make and which we want to send you immediately, as soon as you write for it, so you can try it and learn how it acts.

Bodi-Tone

is no new-fangled, secret, mysterious, "discovered by accident," Egyptian, Indian, Chinese, Shaker or Quaker remedy. It depends upon no superstition or romantic story to make people believe in its efficacy. It is the scientific prescription of well known and competent doctors and chemists, and is compounded in one of the largest and best known pharmaceutical laboratories in the United States. It was conceived with the purpose, which we announce to all the world, to give the people a pure and safe household and home medicine, one that has medical authority behind it, one that doctors could sanction and approve, one whose composition could be boldly proclaimed and being all this, it is destined to become the foremost proprietary medicine of the century, a genuine pure food and drug medicine.

Bodi-Tone

though a scientific medicinal combination, is prepared from such remedies which the common people as well as the doctors KNOW TO BE GOOD, which they can place confidence in, which they know they can safely use, and most of all, is composed of things which make it a GOOD REMEDY. It is right all through, from the first to the twelfth ingredient, a remedy that knows its work in the body and does it in a way that satisfies the body-owner. It is a pure remedy that all the family, young and old can use. It contains no poisonous drugs, it contains no harmful drugs, it contains nothing that we are ashamed to tell all the world, it contains no ingredient that your own family doctor will not endorse and say is a good thing. It does not depend on drugging the body. It does not kill pain with opium or morphine. It does not excite the body with alcohol, but it tones the body with the remedies nature intended to tone the body, or that power would not have been given to them.

Bodi-Tone

offers its valuable services to you right now, right from this page, if you are sick, if you need medicinal help, if your body is not in right, natural and normal tone. That is what Bodi-Tone is for—TO HELP NATURE RESTORE TONE TO THE BODY, to help nature restore normal health, energy, vigor, strength and weight. If there is anything wrong with your Kidneys, Bodi-Tone helps to restore tone to the Kidneys, helps to set them right. If there is anything wrong with your Stomach, Bodi-Tone helps to tone the Stomach, helps to set the wrong right. If there is anything wrong with your Blood, your Liver, your Bowels or your General System, the ingredients in Bodi-Tone, which are endowed by nature with a special action in these parts, go right to work and keep on working day after day, exerting always a well understood, definite action that produces general results of the kind sufferers appreciate. If you have Rheumatism, Bodi-Tone, a splendid eliminant, helps to eliminate the Uric Acid from the system while it restores tone to the Kidneys, Stomach and Blood, thereby exerting a continual anti-rheumatic effect which makes it hard for rheumatism to obtain or retain a foothold in the system. Bodi-Tone should be used by all women suffering from any of the various Female Ailments, for its toning properties are especially valuable in such ailments.

Bodi-Tone

is especially urged for all chronic sufferers who have tried honest, reputable physicians at home and elsewhere without getting the relief and permanent benefit desired. If your local doctor is doing you no real good, if you have given him a real and honest chance to do what he can and the medical combinations he has used have failed, then give THIS SCIENTIFIC, MODERN COMBINATION of old-time remedies a chance to show what it can do for you.

A Trial of Bodi-Tone

is yours for the asking. You need not send any money—do not send any stamps. The Bodi-Tone Company wants to spend every penny of the trial's cost, wants to send the medicine to you, wants you to give it a trial for a full period of twenty-five days before you pay one single penny. Simply fill out the Bodi-Tone Coupon, mail it to the Bodi-Tone Company, Chicago, and let Bodi-Tone do its work for you.

PRAIRIE (MISS.) CIRCUIT.

When I came to the Prairie Circuit I found three preaching places—one at Prairie, one at Muldon and one at Strongs. At Prairie I found the nice, new church, with memorial windows, which Brother R. G. Porter built last year. At Strongs I found Pains Chapel, another nice church. But at Muldon I found no preaching place. One of the citizens told me that the best thing I could do was to build a church. Encouraged, influenced and helped by Brother Felts, our optimistic presiding elder, we have built a real nice little chapel at Muldon and we have two services a month there now.

Our protracted meeting at Prairie was a good one. Sister Haughton and other members said it was the best meeting they had had at Prairie in several years. I was assisted by Rev. Tom Smith, a local preacher of this State, who has since joined the St. Louis Conference. He is a promising young man, well equipped for the work, a good preacher, and a sweet singer. We had several accessions to the church, some on profession of faith and some by letter.

This prairie country is owned by a few white people and worked by many negroes; so you cannot expect any large number of accessions to the church. No country can do well when it is owned by a few rich men who live in the city and have their land worked by negroes. Towns, schools and churches cannot grow and flourish under these circumstances. Dispose of the negroes; cut this land up into 40, 80 and 160 acre farms and let white men own it and work it and they will make towns and schools and churches.

We had a good meeting at Strongs, also. Brother Broyles, of Corinth, helped me. Pain's Chapel, where he helped me, is near his old home, the home of his childhood. The people were delighted to have him and enjoyed the meeting. Brother Broyles, like Barnabns of old, is "a good man full of faith and full of the Holy Ghost." This is the highest compliment you can pay any man. O, how refreshing nowadays to meet with a man who is "without covetousness," unselfish, having the Spirit of Christ and the mind which was in Christ Jesus.

The people of Prairie Circuit are few, but they are cultured, refined, social and appreciative.

W. J. BURT.

FROM OLLA, LA.

Hello! Brother Boswell: How have you stood the long, hot summer? I see nothing in the paper to indicate that you are the worse for the hot summer, or your long life, or for your many years of constant work. On the contrary, I like our Advocate better than I have for the past twenty-two years that I have been reading it. Your "Glances at the World," your editorials and paragraphs are timely and wise, and, your financial support considered, the paper is extraordinary. You are bold and judicious in denouncing evil. Whenever higher criticism, or any other heterodox hyena pops up his head, you hit him a stunning blow. Am truly glad that you do, for if reports are true, unsoundness and inconsistent allowances have crept into our Methodism in many places, high and low. Some of our papers and colleges, it is said, teach erroneous and strange doctrines. And strange to say, according to reports, some of our city and town pastors wink at Sunday baseball playing and the skating rink. Now, if any one hollers, you may know that he is hit."

As to old editors and writers, I believe that a majority of the most brilliant and vigorous of the past and present have been and are to-day quite old. A man approximating seventy years is generally considered a "back number, a slow coach and unfit for anything." One's mind is alert and vigorous or inactive and weak very much in proportion as it is used. Mental employment keeps the mind "whetted," so to speak, but if allowed to lapse into disuse, of course, enervation follows. The great Gladstone, John Wesley, Wm. Cullen Bryant, Horace Greely and many others similarly employed, retained their mental vigor to the last.

FROM LONGTOWN, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: After a twelve weeks' battle with the devil, both in my own and other brethrens' works, I am back at the parsonage at Longtown, prosecuting my studies preparatory for the Annual Conference at Okolona. I am so glad to say that the blessed Lord has been so good to me again this year in giving us a great number of souls for our hire and seals to our ministry through the efficient and valuable helps of Revs. R. H. B. Gladney, of Starkville; S. L. Pope, of Senatobia; W. S. Lagrone, of Winona; J. W. McGehee, of Jackson; R. M. Evans, of Courtland, and J. H. Earnhardt, of Concord, N. C. We have added 122 names to our church registers. The Holy Spirit has been with us in all of our meetings in great power. Some very vile sinners who had experienced many years of spiritual infirmities came to the feet of the "Lowly Gallilean" and found relief, and like the one of old, picked up his bed and went on his way rejoicing. Isn't it a grand thing to know that this is the sweet experience of every one, whether of this day or in the days of the past centuries? What a loving Savior we have!

I wish I had time and space to properly eulogize the above-named preachers for the great services rendered to this people. Each and everyone of them preached the gospel in its purity and simplicity. I think this is why my people received it so freely and accepted it. God's Word should be presented to the people in the most simplified way; then there will be more of them to grasp it. Our Savior did this: the parables reveals this fact fully. I imagine in the presentation of himself as the "true vine" he knew those folks around him there at the close of that memorable supper would or could grasp quickly the idea he wanted to convey to them, for they no doubt had been husbandmen. Pretty much the same condition exists in this day and time as did in olden times. So if we, as Christ's representatives, will but present the gospel in its purity and simplicity and say, "Thus saith the Lord," it won't take long to save the world for Christ.

While I do praise the Lord for the great number of souls he has given us, yet I am anxious to have as many accessions this year as last. I have a number of others on the string, and if they don't slip out of my hands into the Baptist waters, I will have a larger number to report at Conference.

We have rebuilt and remodeled four churches this year and have also organized one church. One of my laymen has assumed a $250 debt on one church, and I do hope the brethren will help him bear the burden. Asking the prayers for this people and myself, I am,

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property-holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property-holders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically not outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co., for a detailed explanation.

For a long time past we have boasted that the white men of the South knew the negroes better than anybody else, and are "the best friends the negroes have." And we continue to make the boast. But, now then, among Southerners there crops out a disposition to do real injustice to the colored man, for no other reason than that he is colored. Recently Judge Lovett, who succeeded to the management of the Southern Pacific railroad, received a petition from men in the South to put white men in the place of negroes as switchmen and trackmen whenever vacancies occur. He declined to grant the petition. In his answer, among other things, he said: "After most careful and respectful consideration none of the reasons suggested and none I have been able to think of justifies me in committing this company in any way to a policy fraught with such far-reaching consequences, and so much opposed to my own sense of justice to faithful servants." Let the reader bear in mind the fact that Judge Lovett is a Southern man—Georgia born, and his words can be better appreciated. Had we jobs to be given out, other things being equal, we, of course, would favor the man of our own race, but our sense of justice as well as our humanity would forbid us displacing a faithful negro merely for the accommodation of another who has a far better chance in the race for life.

The actual existence and usefulness of wireless telephony will be a revelation to many. To thousands it will prove always a mystery. A writer in Harper's Weekly speaks thus concerning the wonder: "Until the American battleship fleet set off on its recent tour, the world scarcely knew that there was such a thing as a wireless telephone. That voyage demonstrated its practicability. Each ship was equipped with a radiophone, and was thus in constant telephonic communication with every other ship in the fleet. Since then development has gone on by leaps and bounds. It has been demonstrated beyond doubt that wireless telephony is as available overland as oversea. Trains and boats on inland waterways have been equipped and communication has been established for great distances. Conversations have been exchanged between widely separated cities. Automobiles have been equipped as well as airships, and the radiophone found practical in either case. Step by step the distance has been extended. Five miles was the limit at first. Last winter, voice communication was established between the Eiffel Tower (Paris) and Marseilles, a distance of some six hundred miles. As soon as a wireless station, now being built on the Metropolitan tower, New York, is completed, an endeavor to communicate between the two capitals will be made across the Atlantic. Scientists say this can be done. Following the lead of various governments, the commercial interests, particularly in America, are adopting the device. In fact, so great has been its recent extension and utilization that the wireless telephone is out of the realm of maybe, and firmly established in the land of is."

It should be a matter of profound concern to the good and law-abiding citizens of Louisiana or any other state, that criminals are so numerous, and their friends so strong and influential as to make the execution of justice doubtful, and in cases not a few, impossible. It is a serious thing when a wise and righteous judge feels compelled to confess in open court the prevalence of crime, and the helplessness of officials in dealing with it. In his charge to the grand jury of Rapides Parish, at Alexandria, La., last week, Judge Blackman characterized the state of things in the following language: "The jury system of the parish is a complete failure on the homicide question. When will it ever stop if it is to be handed down from sire to son? This thing of feeling it their duty to go to court the minute they hear that a friend is to be tried for homicide, flocking around the courtroom, getting on juries, perjuring themselves. It is a shame that such a condition of affairs exists. We must build up a better moral sentiment. Make these fellows who take human life suffer the penalty of their crime. You can't enforce the laws unless there is a strong moral public sentiment. It is your duty to enlist a strong sentiment against this thing." Judging by what we read in the papers of the number of killings, the violation of the liquor laws, of the Sunday law and other forms of lawlessness, Rapides Parish is not alone deserving of censure, and it should be understood that matters will never be any better until good, honest men are secured for jurors—men not afraid to render verdicts in accordance with the law and evidence. If Judge Blackman is right such is not now the case in some places.

Rumors are persistent to the effect that Mrs. Ruth Bryan Leavett, daughter of Mr. William J. Bryan, will be a candidate for congress from one of the districts of Colorado—the district including Denver, if we mistake not. The women of Colorado enjoy full suffrage—the same as men—but as yet none of them have offered for any office higher than mayor of small towns, and school directors. Mrs. Leavett, as far as we have learned, is the first to make known the desire to make laws for the United States. She has heretofore, according to reports, figured in politics to a little extent, prompted thereto by a desire to see her father elected to the presidency. We are sorry that she has assumed the role of politician, not because she is the daughter of Mr. Bryan, but because she is a woman. According to our way of thinking members of congress should be persons of the very highest order of intellect. If Mrs. Leavett is a person of that order or even much above the average intelligence of our educated women, the country has been slow to recognize the fact. That she has created a sensation or two—by a somewhat romantic marriage, etc., the country knows. Beyond that, it knows but little of Mrs. Leavett. Without question she has one qualification, not for congress, but for attracting public gaze. She has separated from her husband. We hope the rumor that she intends to run for congress is not well founded.

We are indebted to Rev. H. S. Johns for the following interesting notes concerning the two poles. Young scientists will read this with interest: "Since the discovery of the North Pole by those two eminent Americans, Dr. Cook and Commander Peary, the question of the North Pole and Magnetic Pole has become of curious interest. It is a fact not generally known that there is quite a difference between the two. In Louisiana and Texas the needle of the compass points so nearly to the north that it makes only a very little difference. This is because the Magnetic Pole is almost due north of these two states. A little further east or west the needle's variations amount to a nice mathematical calculation in all surveying or navigation, so much so, that in navigating the seas in most of the parts of the world, the sextant is of really more value than the compass. The cardinal points of direction were originally fixed by the sun's course through the heavens, and the stars in their fixed positions. Thus east, west, north and south were fixed, ages before the compass was known. The Magnetic Pole was discovered by Sir James Ross in 1831, which was done by calculation, precisely as the planet Neptune was discovered a few years later by the noted astronomer, Leverrier. It was found that the needle of the compass "varied" west on the Atlantic ocean, and east on the Pacific. Calculating the "variations" the true Magnetic Pole was found to be somewhere near the center of the British possessions in North America. However, in 1903, a Norseman by the name of Roald Amundsen, set out from Norway in a little walrus sloop and explored the magnetic area and found the Magnetic Pole to be in Bothia in King Williams' Land, just west of Baffin Land, and situated in latitude 70, longitude 90 west, which is almost due north of western Louisiana, and eastern Texas. The magnetic area is a section which shifts about in a small circle, but generally is of about one hundred square miles in extent. It may be supposed that the electricity of the sun and planets causes this perpetual shifting. Curious isn't it? So when Dr. Cook and Commander Peary were at the North Pole they were each about 1400 miles north of this Magnetic Pole."

BISHOP SETH WARD.

Memorial Service Held at Kobe, Japan.

(Taken from an account given in The Kobe Herald, Sept. 23, 1909).

A memorial service for the late Bishop Seth Ward, D.D., was held at the Kobe Methodist Church at four o'clock yesterday afternoon. The congregation was so large that the building was more than filled, many having to remain outside, and the gathering was a very representative one, all the missions in Kobe and some of the missionary bodies at Osaka being represented. Among the visitors from a distance was Bishop M. C. Harris, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, from Tokyo. His presence was much appreciated by the Japanese and foreigners alike. Dr. K. Usaki, editor of the Gokyo, was also present, having been sent as the representative of Bishop Honda, who was not well enough to come himself. The service throughout was a most appropriate blending of Japanese and English, and proved in the highest degree impressive. The pall-bearers—four missionaries and four Japanese—were: Messrs. W. R. Weakley, C. B. Moseley, W. A. Davis, S. A. Stewart, T. Kugimiya, N. Yanagihara, M. Akazawa, H. Yoshizahi.

The whole service was remarkable for the great depth of feeling which rested upon the assembly; and at times those present were unable to conceal their emotions. When one of the speakers told about the tender devotion of the Japanese woman nurse to the Bishop during his illness and related that she begged to be permitted to keep vigil around the Bishop's coffin during the whole night, adding that singing was heard from the room of death in the late hours, many eyes filled with tears. The addresses delivered by Dr. Usaki and Prof. Matsumoto were both warmly appreciative of the deceased Bishop's profound interest in Japan and the Eastern nations. Bishop Harris, who spoke by request, delivered a brief but most touching eulogy of the dead Bishop, and much comfort was given by his sympathetic words.

The Rev. T. H. Haden gave an impressive account of his conversations with Bishop Ward during the latter's last illness. In the course of his address he said that the Bishop's politeness, gentleness and appreciation of every kindness were unfailing to the last, often finding involuntary expression even when his thought was most incoherent. In this connection Mr. Haden quoted Bishop Ward as saying only a few days ago: "The Japanese nurses, the Japanese people and every man, woman and child have been as kind as kind could be. In this sickness in Japan, I have not been conscious of one moment's neglect. On the other hand, I have noticed how kind all have been."

Rev. J. C. C. Newton, in "An Appreciation with Lessons," paid an eloquent tribute to the deceased Bishop's character and abilities.

Rev. S. E. Hager then read the biographical sketch. (Only a part of the closing words are here quoted). "Different physicians assured him it would be well to take the sea voyage. So he came, arriving at Yokohama on August 8, quite sick. Bishop Harris, meeting him, kindly telegraphed me his condition, and asked me to come immediately to Yokohama. Arriving in Yokohama and consulting with the physician in attendance, we brought him to Kobe, August 10th. More than ten days later, it was evident that his illness was becoming serious. Slowly, silently and surely the fatal disease was gripping him in its hold; and, in spite of all that two skilled physicians could do, he passed away from earth at five o'clock on Monday afternoon, September 20, 1909. * * * He loved his family; he loved his church, he loved his state, he loved his nation, he loved the world, he loved the cause of missions in these eastern lands for which he has given his life. His soul had caught a vision from God; and he frequently said to me, these are stirring times. This is a great age in which we live, and God is doing great things among men; and I want to live to have a part in the mighty things that God yet proposes to do for the world. He desired to live; but was absolutely submissive to God's will. * * * We do not understand why he who seemed so strong and with so great a future of service before him should be taken. But, as he often said during his illness, 'One of these days we will sit down over there and talk it all over.'"

SOME REMINISCENCES.

By Hon. W. A. Belk.

One of the sweetest memories of my life is when I recall the twilight hours when my father used to get down the old family Bible, take his seat in his accustomed "corner" around the country fire place and read from its precious pages, and then ask God's blessings upon his family. About one year ago I visited in company with three of my children that old log house "still sitting on the hill" back in the country, sixteen miles west of West Point, Miss. As we drove up to the front gate, memories came trooping over me. I could almost hear my own childish voice still echoing about those old hills. We visited different points of interest in and about the place and finally went into that old room and there I paused. I saw in my memory scenes long since closed. I remembered that August morning when my father spoke his last word on earth to me and closed his eyes in death. The "corner" where he sat was still there and seemed to pronounce its very benedictions upon my head. In vain I "sighed for the touch of a vanished hand and the sound of a voice that is still." Leaving the old home we drove just one-half mile away to the spot known as the old Big Springs Camp Ground. What meetings have I witnessed there! It was in the days of such men as Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, Sr., grandpa Wiley Lewis (grandfather of our own T. W. and E. S. Lewis), Rev. David Wade, Uncle Jack Foster, Rev. William Foster, Rev. Thomas Lowry, Rev. E. G. Kilgore and many others of precious memory to me. I have seen at one time as many as fifty tents at that camp meeting. And such good things to eat we did have. Old fashioned potato custards, chicken pies, baked and fried chicken, cakes, ham, and in fact any and everything good to eat. I have seen as many as two thousand people present at one meeting. They used to drive out there from Houston, from West Point, from Starkville and from many smaller places at distances of eighteen miles off. In those days they used to "call mourners." I like that custom yet. I have seen them go up by the hundreds to be prayed for. I have seen fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters and friends "shout" in good old fashioned Methodist style. As we stood on that hallowed old spot I saw in memory's store house the old scenes all enacted over again. I am glad my father was a religious man. I am glad I was reared in the lap of the church. I can never get away from it. I do not care to do so. I may be sinful and wander far away from duty's path but those days will "linger with me still."

WERE I A PREACHER OR LAYMAN.

Whether a person be preacher or layman, in my opinion, determines in very small measure the character of the man. The man who, as a layman, is broad of vision, generous of impulse, unselfish in purpose, faithful to duty, a lover of God and man, would be so if called to preach.

The man who, as a layman, is narrow of vision, ego-centric in impulse, mean of purpose, self-seeking, careless in discharge of duty, thinking little of the glory of God and less of the good of man, would remain even so though called to preach. (We are assuming here that every man who preaches is called to preach).

I rather think that a politician out of the ministry would be a politician still, but not a still politician, though he respond to a call to preach. We can hardly think—can we?—that he would be entirely indifferent to the appointments of his friends and much less to his own.

I rather think that a censorious critic in the pulpit would remain one, even though he descend to the humble pew. He would hardly approve of all his pastor's words and works, and would most likely let slip a lamentation now and then.

When a person attributes certain virtues or vices to certain occupations, he is treating of symptoms and not of fundamental soundness or sickness. The strength or weakness belongs to the man and only the expression is different in different occupations.

When an un-perfect person in one occupation thinks that by stepping over into another occupation he would make a perfect performer there, he is, in my opinion, deceiving himself. It may be well for a preacher now and then to tell a layman his shortcomings; it may not be amiss for a layman kindly to help his preacher now and then in like manner; but, had not either better be careful when he says what he would be and do, if he were the other? To say the least, and also the most, it is speech without knowledge.

REVEREND AMOS KENDALL.

By Hon. Geo. J. Leftwich.

Much has been said and written of Reverend Amos Kendall of a purely biographical character. Birth and death, the dates of them, and the other details of life are like the boundaries of a state which set the mere limitations to territory, leaving the interesting features lying inside of these boundaries. The habits and bearing of Amos Kendall reach so nearly to the ideal minister and gentleman, that too much note cannot be taken of them.

My first sight of Mr. Kendall was about twenty years ago when I first came to Aberdeen. I started in the gray of the morning for a long trip to the country, and on the outskirts of the town I met a trim, well poised, non-clerical looking gentleman sitting triumphantly on a big gray horse, his face set steadily toward the west. He greeted me amiably and his horse cantered on away. He sat with such dignity and rode so buoyantly that I looked backward at the retreating figure. Soon afterward when the quarterly meeting came on this same high spirited, hopeful, dignified gentleman appeared as presiding elder. He was then about fifty-nine years of age. When I had seen him, at early dawn, "Knocking with hasty steps the dews away," he was starting on a long ride in the discharge of his ministerial duties. The first discourse I heard him deliver at the aforesaid quarterly meeting was wholly characteristic of him. The sermon was excellent and the mien and manner of the preacher and the matter of the discourse was such as to attract the attention of the hearer, (the very opposite of the perfunetory), a joyful message full of thought and reflection and individuality, the old theme worked out in the crucible of the speaker's own mind. As the Greek or Roman athlete entered the Stadium to run a race, with joy, vigor and determination to excel, with victory written on every lineament of the face, so Amos Kendall entered the sanctuary to preach. Others might linger and be tardy, he never. The good housewives could as well have set the clock by his entry into the pulpit as those of the days of Thomas Carlyle could fix the time by his methodical habits. The writer heard him say that he missed one quarterly meeting—that is my best recollection—in twenty years of service as presiding elder, and was never late in the whole period of time at a quarterly meeting. His very entrance into the church and pulpit was an inspiration. Neither was he ahead of time—he was on time. This prominent characteristic was not peculiar to his preaching habit. When election day came and he was confronted with the duty of discharging the functions of a citizen, the duty to vote, among the first at the polls was Amos Kendall, then off abou. his affairs. It was the same with his taxes—his tribute to Cæsar—he was among the first at the sheriff's desk. And so with his store accounts, if he happened to owe any. I mention these incidents to illustrate his exemplary life as a citizen of his state. When a moral question like prohibiton was involved, he took great interest in the contest, but never to the extent of doing or saying extreme or fanatical things. After he was far in the sixties, the writer knew him to sit up with the committee in charge of the temperance work preceding an election until two or three o'clock in the morning, alert and vigilant, and it never occurred to him that he was doing more than was his due. It is doubted if a man in his Conference was so widely and favorably known in and out of his church among all classes, and his presence anywhere carried strength and power for good. Nothing derogatory, nothing even of jest was said, and evil was sure to hide at his approach. He curried no favor with, nor fawned upon any man, and yet all loved him. The writer in an appreciation for the superannuate column of the Nashville Christian Advocate, not long before his death, used this language, and it will bear repeating:

"Rev. Amos Kendall, with his good wife, is spending the closing period of his ministry in Aberdeen. He is really the 'junior preacher' on the charge and preaches often at home and abroad—and splendid preaching it is wherever he occupies the pulpit. He feeds the people and they hear him gladly. He is one of the superintendents of the Sunday School. He is a great reader of books and a constant student. If seven cities contended for the honor of being blind Homer's birthplace, more can be found that contend for the honor of having Brother Kendall and his wife as citizens. He is the spiritual father of many and the friend of all."

This writer first heard him preach in about his fifty-ninth year, and last heard him a few weeks before his death, on the Martyrdom of St. Stephen. He grew all the while and was a richer and better preacher when he died than twenty years before. When he removed from Sardis, where he held his last pastorate a few years before his death, to Aberdeen, he said to the writer that he had given away most of his library to young preachers to keep from moving it around, and he wanted me to bring him some books. I ran over quite a list of books on a wide range of subjects and he said he was too old now for anything very heavy, so I chose his books for him mostly, the rest of his days. He read rapidly and almost constantly. The five or six volumes of McCarthy's History of Our Own Times, the fifteen volumes of Dr. Lord's Beacon Light of History, Boswell's Johnson, and Garner & Lodge's History of the United States, were the class of books he relished, often reading a volume a day. Not long before he died, he came to the office of the writer and remarked that he wanted to read a little law, and as he had heard much of his countryman, Sir Wm. Blackstone's works, he would like to read them. Blackstone was gotten down for him and he soon read and returned it.

His method of dealing with his text was analytical and some times novel; his own pattern was set years ago, but the matter of his discourse and the comment were ever new and peculiarly his own. The application of the truth to his hearers' own lives was ever stirring and zestful. He was never illiberal with his money but always frugal; his family never being large he saved up an abundance for his old days, and died as he lived, happy, contented and surrounded with plenty. When the stewards were fixing his salary during his last pastorate at Aberdeen, it was remarked that his predecessor got "so and so." "That is more than I want, more than I need," he said, and he reduced the sum two hundred dollars. When on his death bed, he said to his wife, "Julia, when I am gone you must go to your sister's in Texas; send for your nephew to travel with you; it is too long a journey to go alone; but do not let him pay his way, you must bear all of his expenses." And so with every detail. Socrates, the heathen philosopher, sentenced to death by revengeful enemies, was not more careful in providing for the details of his death and burial than this Christian philosopher, and the latter had a vision far brighter of the life to come. Ripe in years, widely and deeply loved, fruitful in his labor, joyful and happy, he said good-bye and crossed over.

THE MIDWINTER BIBLE AND MISSIONARY INSTITUTE.

It is the purpose of the Methodist Training School to make the Midwinter Institute an American "Keswick," where the most spiritually minded leaders of Protestantism may be brought, as far as practicable, to give instruction and inspiration to those who may come from year to year seeking the highest experiences possible for the Christian life.

The Institute is open to both men and women, and aims to be of benefit especially to pastors, to missionary candidates, to young people's leaders and to other church workers engaged in active service either in the home or foreign fields.

The next session of the Institute will be held for eight days, from December 30 to January 6, at the Methodist Training School, Nashville, Tenn.

The Institute will provide courses in the English Bible, in city evangelization, in foreign missions and in church methods. The purpose is to make these courses thoroughly instructive, practical and inspirational. The strongest spiritual leaders of the church will be secured as far as possible, to conduct the class work, while men of commanding ability will deliver addresses on vital subjects. The Institute will be conducted throughout in the spirit of prayer, in the hope that the students may ascend to a spiritual height which will enable them to get a new vision of life and be empowered for service.

Expenses for the Institute.

The school building will be used to accommodate the delegates to the Institute. The necessary expenses for the delegates will be thirteen dollars for the eight days, which will include the five-dollar fee, board and furnished room in the school.

REV. M. L. BURTON AND THE CHURCH ON "COW ALLEY."

In reading the article from Rev. M. L. Burton in a recent ADVOCATE which purported to give a history of Methodism on the Mississippi gulf coast, I was surprised to note that he had given so little study to the history of the church in the beautiful little city of Biloxi. The only period of the church life that he touches with any degree of appreciation is that embraced in the pastorate of my good friend, H. W. Van Hook. It is not my purpose, in writing what I do, to be offensive in the least, but that fairness may be done the congregation whose loyalty and struggles for a great many years are a matter of pride to those who labored with them for many years before the new church had any beginning. All honor to the man who enterprised the new church proposition, and who for seven or eight years contributed of his brain and brawn to the partial construction of the building which represents the sacrifice of some, and the friendship of many who had no vital connection with the church. The building in which the congregation worshipped from the latter part of 1891 until some time in 1904, while not a new building was a substantial brick, oblong, and had been purchased and remodeled into a very creditable auditorium in 1891. This building occupied the same lot that the new church now occupies and the people had cause to be proud of their achievement.

I was appointed to the church in connection with Ocean Springs, in December, 1891, and took charge in January, 1892. It was that same year with Bishop Galloway's help that we applied to the Parent Board of Church Extension for a donation of $1000, and we secured $800. This gave the congregation much encouragement, and during the remaining three years of my pastorate, the auditorium was beautifully furnished with pews, pulpit furniture, carpet and lights. The auditorium compared very favorably with any in the Conference.

In addition to this improvement, the Woman's Home Mission Society—at that time the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission—under the special leadership of Mrs. W. A. White and my wife, accumulated a neucleus of $300 for a parsonage. This fund continued to grow until it became possible for the church to erect the very comfortable home that has been occupied by the pastors for the past ten or twelve years. For the last three years of my pastorate there the church paid rent for a house that was used as a parsonage.

I would not mention these facts except for the reason that the impression is made by the above mentioned article to the effect that until the present building was ready for occupancy, the congregation worshipped in a very crude building on Cow Alley—which, in fact, was Washington Street when I resided in Biloxi, and had been known by that name for some years before I lived there.

I am sure this little bit of history will be appreciated by those who are specially interested and will be the means of correcting a mistake which occurs in the article which provokes this one. With the kindest feeling for the author of the above mentioned article, and at the same time a high appreciation for the devotion and heroism of those who wrought for the church's good and the glory of God in the years agone,

I am fraternally, ROBT. SELBY.

Natchez, Miss.

TIMELY.

BY DR. J. M. WEEMS OF MISSISSIPPI.

The conclusion of your editorial on "A Lesson" is timely and to the point. That great saying of Paul in Rom. 14, 23, "And he that doubteth is damned if he eat," has other applications in the ordinary affairs of life, than that of personal salvation.

The man who loses confidence in the stability of any establishment, or doubts the effectiveness of its basis of being or operation, is a lost entity in the active purpose of the body. If he holds on to the organization, it is not in aggressive energy, but with a tentative hope of the final discovery of the missing cog in the wheel; and yet with a sufficient reserve doubt to destroy the active effectiveness. The past several years of our history has been but food for this unrest in the church. Preachers have felt called of God, and of the faith and works of the fathers, to resent the constitution of things, while the church has looked on in doubt and the world with derision.

At first we were afflicted with a scholarship, so called, and yet struggling to become so accepted in fact. Old issues that had been fought out and the enemy routed on every field of action, were restated and pressed to the front as a new thought and a new discovery. The old books of study that had made logicians and theologians of our fathers, unsurpassed by any age or church, were deposed and new books with a more subtle restatement of doubt were substituted.

And then followed the young type of this cursing doubt with the stamp of authority, who read verses and whole chapters out of the Book of God as glibly as the good house wife brushes away dead flies. We were boldly told that the day of the heresy hunter in the church was past, while notable instances illustrative of the contention were freely given.

Then we were boldly told that our schools and colleges built in our poverty and through our self-denial did not belong to the church, but to the local board of trustees, and that they had the legal right to divert the property as they pleased, and that neither our claim nor our money invested, constituted either a legal or a moral barrier to their action. Finally, came the climax of all our ills, when the wise men informed us that we were without a creed; that the poor old thing that had cheered our hearts, and had directed our fathers to Christ and to glory was superannuated and should be buried, while the ruddy youth of their creation would take the whole earth.

Thus not only the faith and energy of the church and of universal Methodism has lost momentum in action, but all others feel they have just cause to doubt the stability of our future. And we are told by the friends of this movement that while the grace and sanity of universal Methodism has saved us from the folly of ourselves, they favor the final accomplishment of the act, by our church alone.

I speak advisedly when I assert that many in our church look to the assembling of our next General Conference with fear, and even with a degree of alarm. Will they make it possible for us to hold our place and do our work in peace? Or will they force another heated battle in our own ranks? Men with pet theories are only worth the value of their theories. But it is not safe to suffer them to estimate that value, when it can only afflict others, while it glorifies themselves.

A NEEDED LEGISLATION.

It has been my pleasure to read the several articles appearing in our General and Conference organs relative to needed legislation in our forthcoming General Conference. Some of these suggestions are wise and some otherwise. About them all we find great diversity of opinions. In what I have to suggest, I recognize also that there is much difference of opinion. But there is a desire that our General Conference take some definite action in this matter, and I want to express myself heartily in its favor.

It is a matter that many of the brethren feel a delicacy in speaking about, because it strikes at a habit common among some of our preachers, and because of their esteem for these brethren and the places they fill in the church, many hesitate to advocate openly and aggressively a cause that will prove a restraint on some preachers' "liberties."

The question, like all others of any worth, has two sides. One claiming it a "needless self indulgence," unbecoming in one filling the "sacred desk" and ministry to man's spiritual needs, and positively harmful as an example before the young. We are called upon to be "ensamples to the flock," and we are enjoined by Paul, that while all things are lawful, yet all are not expedient; all edify not. So one side claims that this habit is not expedient, nor is it edifying to the church or the cause of Christ in general. Hence ministers should abstain from it.

The other side claims that legislation against this habit would be passing a law that destroys their right of personal liberty. That it is pure and simple fanaticism. That they have a right to govern their own habits relative to this matter as they see fit. This right they consider as absolute as the right to buy their own food and clothing. And this right should not be sacrificed to the fears and fanaticism of those regarding it harmful to a minister. They point with pride to Bishop —— and Rev. ——, D. D., L.L.D., and Rev. ——, pastor of the First Church in —— City, one of the first appointments in our church who indulge in this habit, and claim that many of the preachers who do indulge can and do out preach and out class those who don't. All the above may be true, but it does not prove the fact that the habit is becoming or expedient in a preacher.

So I am in favor of uniting with the good women of the Woman's Board of our Home Mission Society, in asking our General Conference to prohibit the use of tobacco by ministers of our church. To aid in bringing this about I suggest to both preachers and laymen that we elect as delegates to our General Conference men whom we know to be free from this habit, and who will feel at perfect liberty to give their strongest support to a movement that will prevent its use by ministers.

SOME EXPERIENCES.

By Rev. Robt. B. Downer.

Just a few years before my forty years of active ministry ended, I was sent to a circuit in Jasper County, where I was among strangers. The leading steward, though exceedingly courteous in treatment, still had an impression that I was a "misfit," until one day, in passing along the highway, some three hundred yards south of the parsonage, he espied me adjusting a martin bird box to the top of a rural telephone pole; instantly it flashed upon his mind, that in my nose, the Southern "Hook Worm" had not found lodgment. Those intimately acquainted will willingly attest that though crippled, I have lived a strenuous life. I rejoice that God gave me the strength and will to be industriously inclined; I think I really loved to work and did it for God's glory. I learned much of God in the industrial field. Since June the first, I have not touched the earth with my feet. I am confined to bed and chair, and consider it extremely doubtful of ever getting about again upon my crutches. About a month ago, Dr. T. J. Krouse, of Suggsville, Ala., presented me with a new wheeled invalid chair—giving me great comfort and cause for reverent thankfulness to God for such a thoughtful, kind friend. About six weeks ago, wife in opening a tin can, suffered a slight abrasion of index finger of the right hand. As simple remedies failed to heal the trouble, recourse was had to medical aid, and it was diagnosed as a possible felon, and so was lanced and treated. A few days after, the doctor said "blood poison" had set in, and the finger must be removed. The next day three physicians called, and after an examination decided that the cut must be made between the hand and elbow joint. The amputation was successful but this maimed limb with my physical weakness compels our relinquishment of house keeping. Henceforth we must live in the homes of our children. I trust that our good pastors will not forget that the treasurer of our Joint Board of Finance grieves, that boll weevil ravages are affecting his ability to promptly scatter sunshine in the homes of Conference claimants. Lessons of trust in the promises of God are not learned in the home of the millionaire. Money can't purchase the joy, peace and solid satisfaction experienced by Peter, when by invitation of the Master, he walked by his side upon the waves of the stormy sea. I do thank God that his holy presence in my soul, more than compensates me for all my deprivations. Once in a while some old friend thinks to write me a cheery letter, then again some stranger writes that some ADVOCATE talk has proved a blessing. It can't be long before the angels come. I draw nearer to the Master, every day. I am praying for a Pentecostal blessing to be poured upon Bishop and members of next Conference session, although I fear I can not be present. Friends wishing to address Mrs. Downer, write to Barlow, Copiah County, Miss. My address continues at Long Beach, Miss. Brethren pray (if God's will) that I may meet you once more in Conference session.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

RESSOLUTIONS BY THE STUDENTS.

Whereas, Dr. W. L. Weber has notified us that on account of his health he intends to go away for a rest, therefore be it resolved,

First—That we, the entire student-body of the Centenary College of Louisiana, express our love and heartfelt sympathy for him.

Second—That we, recognizing his unusual ability as president and teacher, wish him a speedy recovery, and that a short absence may be the means of continuing his work with us at an early date.

Third—That a copy of these resolutions be presented Dr. Weber and copies be furnished the Maroon and White, the Shreveport Times, the N. O. ADVOCATE, and the Nashville Advocate.

"I believe few of us are aware how much consciousness of wrong, and even conviction of sinfulness, is latent in the hearts of cowards who worship in our churches; and when they see their experience mirrored, not in the unhealthy pages of a sensational novel, but in the wholesome utterance of the truth, the conviction often becomes irresistible.—Vincent W. KEEPING THE SOUL CLEAN.

The Japanese talk in figures of speech; metaphors seem to come natural to them. At the Christian lecture meetings which are so commonly held in this land, it is quite usual for the first speaker to apologize for "presuming to appear before this assembly and venturing to defile their ears," by some such explanation as the statement that he is merely going before the great speakers who shall follow, in order to "brush away the dew from their pathway." Knowing this trait in the Japanese character, it was no surprise to me when the entire remarks of the prayer meeting to-night circled round the various lessons to be learned from seeing a water-fowl on a lake.

The leader made some two points, as follows: Looking from the car window yesterday, I saw two water-birds, one frequently diving in search of food; the other calmly resting upon or gliding smoothly through the water. The diver goes under the water often and remains long, but his wings are never wet.

Because of the kind provision of the Creator, the natural unguent in his feathers enables him to rise to the surface as clean and dry as if he had never been under. We Christians are placed in this evil world for the present and obliged to mix with the people; if we are fully endued with the unguent of God's grace, yet we may plunge in wherever duty calls, yet come up again as clean as when we went in.—Rev. R. E. McAlpin in the Christian Recorder.

It is not only from the study walls of pastors, but from the walls of every shop, every counting-room and every hall of justice and legislation, that the countenance of Jesus is looking down, and saying, "Do all for me."—T. L. Cuyler.

FROM OKOLONA, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Every member of the North Mississippi Conference and others will be turning this way in a few weeks, and already we have had our minds on the members of the Conference for some time. I have completed my canvass for homes to entertain the Conference. The town as a whole is looking forward with much pleasure to the coming of the Conference. The people, regardless of church affiliation, are throwing open their doors. I wish we could entertain every one who wants to come, but you know an Annual Conference is such an interesting occasion that a great many people other than the preachers and delegates always want to attend. We can take care, and will take care, of the Conference handsomely; but I cannot promise to entertain any others who have not been invited by friends. Some few of the preachers' wives have already been invited by friends, and of course we are expecting them to come and will be glad to have them. Oklahoma is a railroad town and all of the passenger men on the road, as well as freight men, change here, this being the division point, and a great many of the large two-story houses have all their rooms filled with young men on the railroad and the young men clerks of the town.

Posibly some of the wives of the brethren who want to come will not be able to come. If I find later that I can get a place for those who have made such requests, I will gladly notify them; but let no one outside of those who are sure of a home arrange to come unless they hear favoraby from me. We hope to do our part as far as entertaining is concerned. We will send out cards of entertainment by the middle of November, so that every one can notify his host of time of arrival.

Wednesday night of the Conference has already been set apart as a Memorial Service to Bishop Galloway. Tuesday night, before Conference convenes, there will be a meeting of the Historical Society, at which service, our three brethren, you among the number, who have labored for fifty years in the cause, will make addresses touching their experience in the work, etc.

We will have the pleasure of having Brother Randolph, who is now stationed at Missoula, Mont., with us during the Conference, so he writes. We will as a town and as a church, greet you all gladly.

ROBT. A. CLARK.

NOTICE! LOUISIANA PREACHERS!

As the session of the next Annual Conference approaches, it becomes a problem of no small proportions to those who know the conditions as to how we are to provide for the Claimants on our Conference list. We now have thirty-nine Claimants, all of whom are in great need. Should every dollar of the Assessment be secured, it would mean but little over $200 to each Claimant. But if the same proportion of the Assessment is raised this year that was secured last year, it will mean a scant $150 per Claimant. All other sources of income to this fund will be practeally cut off this year, and we have only the amount raised by the preachers to distribute to these noble veterans and those dependent on them. Let every preacher do his utmost to bring a full report for the Conference Claimant Fund this year. The pitance allowed will be small enough at best and every report that falls short will mean that much more suffering for our superannuates and their widows and orphans.

Please let those of our pastors that have living within the bounds of their work any of the Claimants of our Conference to make through them or write to me, a statement for the Joint Board of Finance at the approaching session of the Louisiana Annual Conference. Fraternally,

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN,
Secretary Joint Board of Finance.

AN IMPORTANT MATTER.

The St. Louis Preacher's Meeting has taken action with reference to the large number of Methodists lost to the churches, who, after coming to the city, connect themselves by membership with none of the city congregations. It is estimated that Methodists residing in St. Louis, having in their possession church letters and yet who are not affiliated with any of the churches, outnumber the actual members of the twenty-three congregations in the city. A committee composed of the presiding elder and five pastors, located in different sections of the city has been appointed, and this committee has been instructed to provide means of securing the names of Methodists having church letters, and who are not connected with any church, and the names of those who may come to the city hereafter bringing with them their church letters, and to distribute these names to the pastors of our various churches. It is desired that the name and St. Louis address of any person about to take up residence in this city should be sent to one of the following members of the committee:

Dr. S. H. Wainright, presiding elder; Rev. L. E. Todd, Centenary Church, for the down-town section; Rev. C. N. Clark, Scruggs Memorial, for the central section; Dr. C. M. Hawkins, Lafayette Church, for the south side section; Dr. Theo. Copeland, St. Pauls Church, for the north side section; Rev. C. W. Webdell, Wagoner Place, for the west end section.

THE BON FESTIVAL IN JAPAN.

Eevery year from the thirteenth to the fifteenth of the seventh month, according to the old lunar calendar, is held what the Japanese call the Bonmatsuri, or the feast in memory of the dead. This year the three days embraced in this festival were Aug. 28-30. As it can be seen to much better advantage in country towns than in large cities like Kobe and Osaka, I thought it might be of interest to send you an account of it as seen here in Nakatsu.

On the evening of the 27th, I visited several of the cemeteries in town and found most of the graves freshly cleaned, and decorated with flowers, ready to welcome the returning spirits on the morrow. On the evening of the 28th, I again went to the cemeteries and found many people visiting the graves of their loved ones. At many of the graves, there were lanterns, candles and incense sticks all lighted. At some of the graves there were also offerings of food. On my return through the streets, in some places I saw the people kindling small reed fires just in front of the yard gate to welcome the spirits back to the home. In other places, especially where the house was on the street, they simply illuminated the house. The doors and windows were thrown open; and the hall and most of the rooms were brilliantly lighted with lamps and fancy lanterns. Inside the house, the spirit is welcomed as a real guest. Words of welcome are spoken, tea, wine, cake, etc., are offered; and, in some families, a small piece of matting is spread on the floor in the room formerly occupied by the deceased, and some one fans the spirit, who is supposed to be sitting there. (I could not help thinking that, if an old time southern negro were given that job, he certainly wouldn't want the lamp to go out.)

During these three days, various articles of food and drink are offered; and, on the third night, when the spirits are supposed to leave the house, a reed fire is again kindled; offerings of food and drink are put into a small boat, made of reeds, which is then taken to the river or seashore, and floated out on the ebb-tide. Where death has occurred in the house during that year, these boats are sometimes quite elaborate. This year, one of our neighbors had one five or six feet long, with masts four or five feet high, and gaily decorated with small lanterns, etc.

Down the river, or a short distance out from the seashore, these boats are generally seized by boys, beggars or fishermen; and the offerings of food are actually consumed. Of course this is known to those who send them out; but the custom continues.

Among some of the present-day Japanese, you may find a few who will tell you that death ends all; but, among the great masses of the people, belief in the continued existence of the soul after death is strong and deep-rooted. But this belief is mixed with many hurtful errors; and it comes so far short of the Christian doctrine of eternal life that we feel that the two can hardly be compared. Our mission to the people here is to bring them to a full knowledge of eternal life as it is in Christ Jesus.—B. W. Waters.

THE HAPPY HEART AND HELPING HAND.

By Rev. W. L. Childress.

Two things there are for you and me
That money may not buy,
The happy heart and helping hand
Beneath the sunny sky.

The heart that holds the word of hope,
The lifted hand to bless,
The soul that asked for help in need,
Will always answer yes.

The song that in the day of gloom
Will ring so loud and clear,
That in the sky of doubt, the clouds
Will fade and disappear.

The lack of gold, we all may know,
But, still at loves command,
The happy heart can scatter gifts
From out the helping hand.

And so in roads of joy that lead,
By faith and trust, to rest,
May leave in lives when we have gone
The memory of the blest.

For all the riches of this earth
And that in heaven above,
Belong to those who live to help,
Since God himself "is love."

Jennings, La., Oct. 20, 1909.

THE GUEST'S ROOM.

It is said that the guest's first look into the room set apart for her almost decides whether the visit is going to be enjoyable or not. While everything in the guest room should be pretty and expensive as your means will allow, comfort should be the first consideration, for if your visitor has an uncomfortable bed to sleep in and uncomfortable chairs to rest in while in the room, she will not be apt to enjoy her visit and above all else, there should be plenty of bed clothes so she can arrange the coverings to suit herself. Keep a hand brush and dust pan conveniently near, as the guest may like to care for her own room, and have a nice, clean dust cloth ready for use and a clean dust cap will be appreciated. Vacate one or two drawers in the bureau for the use of your guest, and leave a clothes brush, and hair brush and comb in the drawers, as very dainty people often forget to bring these articles; but be sure to rinse the brush and comb thoroughly before they are used, as the cleanliest head may have dandruff, or a skin disease.

If a girl cannot afford to have expensive furnishings for her guest room, she can keep everything in the room in perfect order, and order is itself beauty, and an industrious girl can have a lovely room for a very small expenditure of money as she can make nearly all of the furnishings with her own hands. See that there are space hooks in the closet and plenty of small towels in the drawer, and a cake of good toilet soap in the dish. First make the room as comfortable in every way as possible, then as dainty and attractive, and then convenient, and it can be all of these, no matter how cheap the furnishings of the room may be nor how plain.—A. M. H.

DAILIES AND DAISIES; OR, THE FEEL OF IT.

"Paper, paper, mornin' paper!" was the cry which came to our ears, as we threaded our way among the many passengers leaving the boat landing.

"Paper, paper!" And this time the little newsboy stood before us; small indeed was he, with flaxen hair, eyes as blue as the sky above us, and a face which was right sunny, but, just now, overcast with disappointment.

For every one was hurried, preoccupied and wanted neither mornin' or any kind of paper.

"Oh!" said one of our party, "I do want a paper, don't you? and you appealing to each of us.

Before the exchange of pennies and papers could be made, with a glad cry of joy the lad had left us.

Curious as to his sudden flight we waited, but only a few moments passed and he was again before us, and with a few flowers in his hand.

Touching his cap like a true little gentleman, he said, "Excuse me ladies, but I just had to run to the 'Flower Lady;' she most gener'lly comes along about this time and always brings flowers to us kids, so we call her the 'Flower Lady.'"

"Are you not afraid they will wilt before you sell your papers?"

"Oh, no, ma'am, you see I takes 'em right home to me mother, she is that fond of the pretty flowers. When she was a 'slip of a girl' she lived where they growed, and now she feels lonesome-like without 'em; I know the feel of it, and try to see the 'Flower Lady.'"

Having a sympathetic audience of three he became quite friendly, and to our query as to whether he had ever been where the flowers "growed," he replied, "Jimminy, yes!" Last summer the Sunday school sent a whole lot of us kids away into the country for two whole weeks, and there the flowers growed everywhere; you could lay down among the daisies and have 'em almost cover you; they didn't have no signs up neither to 'keep off,' and we could just pick and pick all we wanted.

"Oh, but that was a dandy time, the bestest I ever had! and so I know the feel of it when me mother can't see the pretty flowers grow."

"Do I want to go again? Yes, sir-ee!" I mean, ma'am, you just ought to see how pretty it is in the country where the flowers grow."

The little face that less than ten moments before had been overcast, was now wreathed in sunny smiles of pleasure, with the flowers and the thought of the country he had once seen.

"Paper? Yes, sir;" and so we left him as with a face full of sunshine he served the newcomer to a mornin' paper.—Selected.

IT CURED HIM.

"Were you ever in your life glum and discontented?" asked one.

"Yes, once I was plum down in the mouth," owned Uncle Henry, with an air of candor. "But I got cured right off, and I ain't ever had an attack of the blues since then."

"Do tell us about it."

"Well, it was when I was a young man. I had just got a job workin' on the Erie Canal. It was gettin' late in the fall, and I hadn't any shoes to my name and I had to send home every red cent, except what would feed me. I didn't see how I was to get a pair of shoes before winter set in."

"Well, that was hard lines."

"So I thought," said Uncle Henry, smiling, "until one day I saw a fellow on the street that hadn't any feet. I can't rightly say as I've ever been discontented since then."—New York Times.

NOT EVEN THE FIRST STEP.

Mr. Morse having bought a new bicycle of the most improved pattern, presented his old one to Dennis Halloran, who did errands and jobs for the neighborhood. "You'll find the wheel useful when you're in a hurry, Dennis," he said.

The young Irishman was loud in his thanks, but regarded the wheel doubtfully.

"I mistrust 'twill be a long while before I can ride it," he said.

"Why, have you ever tried it?" asked Mr. Morse.

"I have," said Dennis gloomily. "A friend lint me the loan o' his whiles he was having the moomps. 'Twas t'ree weeks I' had it, an' what wid practising night an' morning, I niver got so I could balance mesilf standing still, let alone riding on it."—Selected.

"Power for Service."

BY REV. J. B. LAWRENCE,

Corresponding Secretary, Board of Missions, Baptist Convention of Louisiana. Editor of Baptist Chronicle, Published at Alexandria, La.

This is a book of 270 pages, printed on heavy paper, and finely bound in cloth. It discusses in a clear and forcible way one of the great questions of the day. In these days men are preaching a practical gospel, impressing the fact that "we are saved for service." This book discusses "Power for Service," or the secret by which saved men do the work of the Lord. It is written in a pleasing style, and cannot fail to interest and benefit all who have any desire to become one of the Lord's co-workers. It is to the credit of the author that in the very first paragraph of the book he sets forth very distinctly and truly what our Lord meant when he said to the disciples: "Tarry ye at Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." This is the key-note of the book.

A NEW EDITOR FOR THE ADVOCATE.

The Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, met in Annual Session, in the Advocate office, at 10 a. m., October 27, 1909. Every member of the Committee was present, viz.: For the Louisiana Conference: N. E. Joyner, J. M. Henry, W. W. Drake; Mississippi Conference: M. L. Burton, W. H. Lewis, C. W. Crisler; North Mississippi Conference: J. T. Murrah, W. W. Woollard, H. S. Spragins.

The principal business before the Committee was the election of an editor, the term of the present holder of the position having expired. Rev. R. A. Meek, of the North Mississippi Conference was elected. A note from him informs us that he will accept the position. At present he is closing a quadrennium of service as presiding elder of the Greenville District, and, as his Conference does not meet until the 1st. of December, he will not be able to take charge until about the middle of that month.

Brother Meek is young and strong and active, a man of fine mind and liberal culture, a Christian gentleman, and a thorough Methodist. He will worthily represent our great Church. We extend to him a brother's hand.

Let this short introduction suffice for the present. We will have more to say later on, the Lord willing.

SANCTIFICATION.

A brother for whom we entertain great respect requests us to give the readers of the Advocate an editorial on "sanctification." In complying with the request, we shall doubtless say some things that will not meet with general approbation, but we desire it understood they are not put forth in the spirit of controversy. We write what we believe to be Wesleyan and according to the Scriptures.

We do not claim to be an infallible expounder of Mr. Wesley's views, but we have made a careful study of Mr. Wesley's "Plain Account of Christian Perfection," and feel persuaded that we have a fairly accurate knowledge of what he taught. The results of our analysis are preserved in mansuscript ready to issue in book form should there ever be a demand for it. No reference, however, will be made to that manuscript in this article.

What is santification? The term is used by many, perhaps a majority of writers and speakers, to designate the highest degree in grace possible to attain in this life. Not a few believe that it is imparted as a separate and distinct blessing after regeneration, and is to be so sought and consciously obtained. To those who so hold santification is the "second blessing"—a blessing of more importance than regeneration, inasmuch as without it regeneration is practically useless.

Mr. Wesley held to no such idea. He held that the higher state in grace begins in regeneration, thus making the fact of sonship with God the basis of all other blessings of the Gospel. We must therefore as Wesleyan Methodists hold to the paramount importance of regeneration, by which we are made sons of God; and whether a Christian consciously obtains any knowledge or experience beyond the fact that he is a son of God or not, if he is that, and has the witness thereto, we can but believe that he is in a state of salvation and prepared to "go on unto perfection." St. John recognized no higher relation to God than that of a son—nor can any one conceive of a higher or nearer relation; and St. John based everything, even the final glorification of humanity on sonship: "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."

If we could all agree on the meaning of the term "sanctification" as commonly used in the Scriptures, and then confine ourselves to the term Mr. Wesley preferred and used in designating the advanced stage of grace, we would be saved a great amount of confusion in our thinking. The word "sanctify" as ordinarily used in the Scriptures simply means "to set apart for holy use." The Lord "sanctified" the seventh day, that is, he set it apart from common to holy purposes. Moses "sanctified" Aaron and his sons, and their garments (Leviticus viii, 30). The sense in which this word is here used is too evident to need explanation. In this same sense our Lord used the term when he said: "I sanctify myself." In many other expressions it is used in the same sense, but nowhere, as far as we know, in the sense of imparting a separate or peculiar degree of grace. On one occasion our Lord prayed: "Sanctify them through thy truth." Here the word is used in a different sense from which it is used in the expression, "I sanctify myself." It is doubtless used in the sense of "purify," for that is the great purpose of the word. Still, there is nothing in the expression itself, nor in the connection with which it stands to lead to the conclusion that Jesus prayed the Father to give his disciples something different from what they already had. Jesus meant no more, as one author remarks than to ask of the Father "the advancement and completion of the sanctification which had already begun in them."

If Bible students will turn to the many passages in which the word "sanctify," "sanctified," "sanctification," etc., occur, a thing they can easily do with the aid of a concordance, they will find that in a majority of instances the word is used in the senses above indicated. On one passage St. Paul puts more than ordinary emphasis, to give it, we think, double force rather than to insist on a double blessing: "The very God of peace sanctify you wholly: and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ," words expressive of no more than a desire on St. Paul's part that the whole man—"spirit and soul and body"—be sanctified or consecrated to God and preserved blameless.

Mr. Wesley in treating of the higher state of grace preferred to use the word "perfection"—"Christian perfection." This is evident from the title of his book, "A Plain Account of Christian Perfection," in which he discussed the question in full, which book, from the beginning, has been the Methodist standard on the subject. The Fathers of the Church who framed the questions to be ask of all preachers admitted into full connection, likewise preferred the word "perfection": "Are you going on to perfection? Do you expect to be made perfect in love in this life?"

Doubtless Mr. Wesley preferred the word "perfection," because it is a clearer expression of the Scriptural teaching in regard to the operation of grace than the word "sanctification." He did sometimes use the words interchangeably, naturally so, as evidently the word "sanctify" in some places is employed by sacred writers to express the idea of thorough consecration to God. But Mr. Wesley taught that "regeneration is sanctification begun," which, if we understand the words, means that regeneration is the undeveloped work of grace. That such is regeneration, we presume no Methodist will deny. None of us believe that Christians are born full-grown; but that they have in them all the elements of Christian maturity, just as a new-born babe possesses all the elements of manhood, all must admit. As a child must grow to reach maturity, so must a Christian grow to reach perfection. This is brought about by cultivation and the proper use of all the means God has placed within the reach of his intelligent sons and daughters. It is thus that day by day the diligent Christian grows—not into grace, but in grace, and more and more partakes of a divine nature. Hence we are exhorted to "grow in grace;" and "leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, to go on unto perfection."

It follows that, if perfection is reached by growth, the approach thereto must be gradual. This does not mean that it necessarily requires a life-time or even a long course of years. Nor does it mean that there is not a precise moment when the perfect state is reached. That moment is when there is a free, full and complete surrender to God, when the individual feels that "he loves God with all his heart and all his soul and all his mind and all his strength and his neighbor as himself." This is perfection, the perfection of love, and "Christians can be perfect in nothing else." That the opening of the heart thus to God is accompanied with "joy unspeakable and full of glory"—the realization of a blessed baptism of the Spirit—is not to be denied. This is what Mr. Wesley said "is the second blessing, properly so called." But that it is a work of grace imparting something essentially different from that which is imparted when the soul first comes into communion with God does not appear either from the Scriptures or the teachings of Mr. Wesley.

The sum of all is, perfection is the development of grace in all the fullness possible in this life—in kind, though not in degree; for there are no attainments in grace beyond which it is impossible to go. Otherwise, were it reached, there would be nothing to incite to farther progress, and stagnation and death would ensue. Progress must be maintained. It is the law of the Kingdom. And no matter how high the attainment, or how much the enjoyment, there is more and more beyond. The promise of more and more as the good man advances urges and encourages him in his progress toward God.

A REMARKABLE ESSAY.

"The Pleasure of Reading the Bible," by Temple Scott. The publishers say: "This is a remarkable essay." Such it is. It would be hard to find any essay of 47 pages of superior merit. Any one whether of a purely literary taste or a devotional frame of mind, will, after reading this volume, be inclined to turn immediately to the Bible to see whether or not "these things be true." The author more than estimates that it is not only a pleasure, but a spiritual benefit to read the Bible. The book is in no sense a critical essay. We quote the author's last sentence: "It is a book to take by the hand; to turn to in hours of joy; to look to in times of sorrow, and to accept at all times as the sincere efforts of men and women like ourselves toward perfection. Above all, it is a book to be happy with."

As a book for the young, to encourage the reading of the Scriptures, "it is ideal."

The price is fifty cents net. Address: Mitchell Kennerly, 2 East 29th Street, New York City.

Friends who desire to communicate with Rev. R. A. Meek, editor-elect of the ADVOCATE, will please address him at Greenville, Miss. We do not feel authorized to open letters for him addressed to this office.

An appreciative reader of the ADVOCATE, in renewing, adds this encouraging word: "I derive much pleasure and benefit from reading the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE—do not feel that I can afford to be without it."

The article in last week's issue from Olla, La., was written by Rev. H. Armstrong. His name was duly attached, as is always the case when he writes, but it was inadvertently left off. We beg Brother Armstrong's pardon.

Rev. C. M. Morris, of Keatchie, La., sends us more than thanks, and good wishes for the paper we are giving the people—he adds considerably to the list of readers, and cash to the fund to keep it going." We thank God and take courage!

Our old friend and brother, Rev. F. G. Hocutt, whom we knew in Mississippi, in the seventies, was in the city on Saturday last and paid the ADVOCATE a pleasant visit. He is now on the superannuate roll, but working still as health and strength permit.

We had a pleasant caller on Tuesday last in the person of Rev. R. P. Fikes, of Pass Christian, Miss. He was accompanied by his life-long friend, Rev. L. A. Sims, of Epworth Mission, New Orleans. Brother Fikes reports everything in good shape in his charge.

Rev. C. C. Miller has been engaged the past week in a meeting with Rev. R. S. Walton at Hammond. He has given the people some good, gospel preaching, and they have given the Word the best of attention. Farther than that, at this writing, Monday, no results are apparent.

Rev. G. W. Bachman is at his "old tricks," and seems to be renewing his efforts in behalf of his "helping hand," the ADVOCATE. If he and other friends keep up the work as it is going now until December 1st, we will submit the best report ever made in the history of the paper.

Under date of October 23, Rev. O. G. Halliburton, Bogue Chitto, Miss., says: "I am in a glorious meeting. Brother W. M. McIntosh is doing the preaching, and his singer, Brother Tatum is leading the music. The outlook is hopeful—the prospect good for a great meeting."

In a private letter to the editor, Dr. W. B. Murrah, of Millsaps College, who, like Napoleon "knows men," cordially commends Rev. R. A. Meek as editor of the ADVOCATE. He declares him to be "a true, good man, capable, and loyal to all of our interests." In all of which we heartily concur.

Rev. S. L. Riggs, of St. Francisville, La., has been in the city the past week waiting on his wife who is in the Touro Infirmary for treatment. We are glad to learn that she is rapidly recovering, and hopes to be able to go home in a short while. Matters in Brother Riggs' charge are in fine shape.

Sister T. S. Randle, writing for Brother Randle, of the Gilbert (La.) Charge, says, "We have been in eight good meetings," in which there were "many converted. Brother Hunter preached and sang for us eight days, and the Lord wonderfully blessed his labors. We go to our last meeting, at Old Magnolia to-morrow, October 22. Pray for us."

Rev. L. Carley, of the Mississippi Conference, father of our Brother, H. T. Carley, of Carrollton Avenue Church, has been on a visit of several days—including the past Sabbath. He preached morning and evening for the Carrollton brethren—both sermons being good to the use of edifying. During the visit, he baptized his grandchild, infant daughter of Brother and Sister H. T. Carley.

A brother beloved complains that his copy of the ADVOCATE does not reach him as soon as it should. This is a matter we would remedy were it in our power. Our mail is all delivered at the New Orleans postoffice at the same time. From that moment "Uncle Sam's" agents are responsible. As a rule, "Uncle Sam" gets there as soon as he can. We have never yet found a way to "hurry him up." We assure our brother that the trouble of which he complains is not at this end of the line.

Rev. M. A Burns, of Okolona circuit, has been greatly blessed in his work. Seventy-five members have been added to the church, $500 spent in improvements on the parsonage, and other things done "as the Lord gave strength." He had in his meetings "the assistance of Brothers Goforth, of Shannon; Babb, of Verona; Simpson, of Ackerman; Clark, of Okolona Station, and Shipman, of Amory, all of whom did fine preaching with good results." No wonder, Brother, you report success.

Unless plans have miscarried, Rev. John Paul, is at this time in a meeting at Pearl Street Church, Natchez, with Rev. H. P. Lewis, Jr. Enclosed in the envelope bearing the above message was a few thoughts from Brother Lewis on "the use of tobacco by preachers." We print what Brother Lewis says instead of a clipping from a secular paper sent us with the endorsement of a strong anti-tobacco brother on the opposite side of the State from Natchez. We think he will like it better than the clipping.

A letter from "St. James Parsonage," Augusta, Ga., is refreshing. It was written by our friend and brother, Dr. Richard Wilkinson. He is closing his third year at St. James Church—the best of the three—having had an accession of 110 members. The finances are in splendid shape. He will doubtless be returned for the fourth year. Bishop Hendrix preached for him Sunday morning, Oct. 24. The sermon mightily pleased and helped the people. We thank our friend for personal greetings, as well as good wishes for the "dear old ADVOCATE."

Rev. H. P. Lewis and his people of Liberty Charge, (Miss.), are in great sorrow. In less than three weeks, three members of his church have passed away. On October 7th, Mrs. Steve Roberts died leaving her husband and ten children. On the 22nd, Miss Fannie Webb went home to rest, and on the 26th, Mary, daughter of T. B. and Lou Butler passed quietly and happily away. She was thirteen years of age, and had been a member of the church about eighteen months. Her death was most triumphant. Just before she passed away she said to her weeping parents: "I know I am dying. I shall soon be in the arms of Jesus. I am not afraid." Thank God, our people still "die well."

The Memphis Commercial-Appeal of October 29, leads off on the editorial page with a fine endorsement of the editor-elect of this ADVOCATE, as follows: "The election of Rev. R. A. Meek to the editorship of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is an honor of which the recipient is worthy. He is a scholarly man, a practical man, and a modern man. In the editorship of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, he will occupy the chair held by such men as McTyeire, Keener, and Charles B. Galloway, and the Commercial-Appeal predicts that Mr. Meek will discharge his duties so well that he will be pronounced a worthy successor of these strong men. We congratulate Brother Meek and we congratulate those who elected him—they could not have selected a better man."

A short time since a good sister, who has long read and appreciated the ADVOCATE, reluctantly asked us to discontinue it, as she was unable to pay for it longer. Having a small amount to the credit of the "Helping Fund," we placed her on the list, and so informed her. She appreciated this, and wrote us saying: "I so appreciate the extension of my subscription, and if I should be able between now and October, 1910, I will certainly send the amount due, that it may again be added to the fund for others who cannot pay. I did not want it to run on for fear I might not be able to pay at all. As it is, I will not feel that a debt is hanging over me." Will not a few well to-do brethren and sisters add to this Helping Fund? We use it as judiciously and religiously as we know how. Please help it along!

Sunday, the 17th ult., was a "red letter day" at Bogalusa. Twenty-three were taken into our church. The Sunday school has more than doubled its attendance in the last month, and is now the best in its history, so says the pastor, Rev. J. M. Alford, who adds "My superintendent is a lawyer, the Bible class teacher is a lawyer, one of the stewards is one of the leading physicians here, another is the general manager of the Great Southern Lumber Company, and still another is cashier in one of the banks here. And another of our members, who is a trustee, is the chief deputy sheriff here and special policeman of the mill company. So you see we ought to be good, wise, law abiding, healthy and rich. We are now engaged in a meeting with Rev. L. F. Alford, of Laurel. Congregation good and interest fine. Rev. D. E. Kelly, of Purvis, will be with us for several days."

LESSON FOR NOV. 7.

PAUL A PRISONER—THE SHIPWRECK.

Acts xxvii:39 to xxviii:10.

Golden text: "The Lord redeemeth the soul of his servants, and none of them that trust in him shall be desolate." Psalms xxxiv:22.

Sometimes in the life of the Christian he is so confronted with difficulties that they seem almost insurmountable, yet while he is using every effort to overcome, he is in the spirit of prayer continually; and after the critical time is passed and light breaks upon him at the joyful deliverance, he is lost in wonder and thanksgiving over the mighty power of God.

For fourteen days the storm raged, tossing the Alexandrian ship with Paul and his company on board, until all hope of being saved was taken away. Not all hope, for Paul knew that in some way he was to be rescued from danger, for had not the Lord told him he must stand before Caesar. Yet, amidst the howling winds and beating waves he prayed, not for himself but for those who were in the ship with him. There were two hundred and seventy-six men, many of whom knew not how to call upon him that "rules the storm." It was for those that he pleaded. And then, when the storm was fiercest, came the angel of God to tell Paul, "God hath given thee all them that sail with thee." After Paul had told this message, and from whom it came—"God, whose I am, and whom I serve"—Paul, the prisoner, became Paul the commander, and they all bowed to his authority, even the centurion, who at first only listened to the captain and owner of the ship, and harkened not to Paul as he warned of danger.

During all that fearful fourteen days the ship was guided by the hand of God. Paul knew it, and we know it; for have we not had the assurance of faith that our God has directed us through many troubles and trials, through which there was no other way? Take the map and draw a line from the island of Crete to the island of Melita, and you will find the direction is almost east and west. So almost due west was the course of Paul's ship, as it was driven by the storm. They might have crossed and recrossed the line, as they were driven "up and down in Adria," yet the course was always westward toward Malta. We believe this, for the Scripture tells us, and that is enough for us. There are many, however, that look for proof of everything. To such we would say, Go to any sailor who has trained on a sailing vessel, and he will tell you that a certain course can be maintained with only enough sail to answer the helm, slow, of course, yet still directed to a certain point. He will tell you of how the "leeway" is sometimes the only way left.

It was about midnight, the darkest hour, when the quick ear of the sailors must have heard sounds that betokened the nearness of land. They began sounding for the depth of the water, finding that it grew more shallow; they feared striking the rocks on the shore. They tried to get away from the ship. See how Paul influenced the centurion to order the soldiers to cut the ropes that held the small boat, saying, "Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved."

As day came on, not knowing how they were to leave the ship, Paul advised that they should take something to eat, for they all must have been in a weakened condition after so long an abstinence, assuring them again that not one of them should perish. So saying, "he took bread and gave thanks to God in the presence of them all,"—then the rest followed his example. After this they began to lighten the ship by throwing out the cargo of wheat. Paul and those of his company assisted in every work. Even when, by faith, we know that God will preserve us, it is our duty to use all means in our power for our preservation; it is God that worketh in us, and we work out under his guidance.

When it was day, they saw the land, but they knew not what land it was. Any land was welcome. On looking closer they saw the mouth of a creek, and into this they hoped to run the ship, but before they reached it, the ship ran aground, and while the bow was stuck fast the stern was at the mercy of the beating waves and was broken up thereby. From this perilous position they all escaped to land, some swimming, some on boards and pieces of the broken ship, all were saved, not one was lost; just as the angel had told Paul, so it was. The people of the island received them with kindness, and Paul's introduction to them was through a miracle. They built a fire, for they were all wet and cold, and Paul, always ready to help, gathered a bundle of sticks to put on the fire. Out of the bundle of sticks there came a viper, a deadly poisonous reptile, and fastened its fangs in Paul's hand. All expected to see him die and they watched him closely, some thinking him guilty of some great crime, and vengeance let him pass the perils of the storm to grasp him by other means lest he finally escape. When he calmly shook the reptile off into the fire, and he remained unharmed they changed their minds and were ready to deify him. This was not an accident, nor even a mere incident, for Paul had a work to do in that island, and the manner of his coming into notice was doubtless under the direction of Providence.

Although Paul was always humble and unassuming, his speech and manner showed that he was not as other men, that there was a certain deference due him. The world cannot understand the respect that a godly man commands; they only wonder while they unconsciously yield. Though Paul was a prisoner under constant guard, yet the governor of the island invited him to his house as if he was some visiting prince. Paul began his work, just as Jesus did, as soon as the need appeared. The father of the governor was sick, and the apostle went in where he lay, and prayed first, then laid his hands on the sick man and cured him. After that others of the island who were sick came to Paul and were healed. We know that the apostle did not fail to tell by whose power or in whose name the healing was done, and following the practical illustration of the saving power he did not fail to preach that gospel that saves eternally. Just how much he preached is not told us, but we do know that Paul was ever ready to tell of the great salvation, the knowledge of which was so much to him that he counted all else but loss.

Let us think as much of our own relation to Jesus. He has promised never to leave us, though trials and troubles come mountain high, he will guide us safely through it all. Paul's confession of faith before the distracted passengers of the ill-fated ship should be ours always. The angel had told him the words of God, and he said before them: "I believe God." God's word tells us of his will concerning us and of all his blessed promises to us. So, then, let us say with all our heart: "I believe God, and it shall be done even as it was told me."

UNFORTUNATE SLAVE TO DRUGS.

If you happen to know of any one, dear reader, whose life is being destroyed by addiction to morphine, cocaine or liquor, you can do him a favor by telling him of Dr. B. M. Woolley, the specialist in Atlanta, who is so successful in treating and curing such cases. Dr. Woolley has a record of over thirty years' continuous practice in his field and he succeeds in many instances where relatives—and the patient himself—had given up all hope of reformation. Perhaps there is some one in your town or neighborhood who would be overjoyed to know that there is a specialist in the South who can cure. Dr. B. M. Woolley, conducts the Victor Sanitarium in Atlanta. An able corps of nurses under the resident physician is maintained and all the appointments of the establishment are conducive to tranquility of mind and physical rejuvenation. Communications will reach Dr. Woolley at his office, 200 to 207 Lowndes Building, Atlanta, Ga.

THIS WILL INTEREST MANY.

JESSIE MAY, infant of Mr. J. M. and Mrs. Mary Neill Eley, of Montrose, Miss., sweetly fell on sleep Sept. 15, 1909, having spent a year and five days of useful service for the Redeemer. Among the immortals that surround the throne of God, the spirit of this precious child has an eminent place, no doubt—for her brief life was productive of great and lasting good. The fond parents are sorely bereaved by her departure, but sweetly comforted in the expectation of a glad reunion above. The grandparents, Brother C. F. Neill and wife, are likewise greatly grieved, but share the blissful hope of a joyous greeting in our Father's house. "It is well with the child." The Baptist and Methodist pastors of the town conducted the obsequies from the Presbyterian Church. The little body reposes in the church yard nearby.

W. A. BETTS.

On Aug. 16, 1909, the death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Young and claimed for a victim, little REX, the jewel of this good father and mother. He was 11 years old the 15th of August. He was almost idolized by these parents and everybody learned to love him as they came in touch with him. To-day the home is sad, and friends are made to mourn on account of the loss of little Rex. He was as bright in Sunday School as any of his age. His father was heard to say, "We will meet again." All who knew him loved him, and all was done by loving and willing hands and skilled physicians to get little Rex to stay on earth longer, for they knew some day that he would be a bright and shining light in the church. But God in his providence saw best to take the precious little jewel who had builded on earth to bloom in heaven where there is no sin, no sorrow, no sighing, nor sickness, nor pain, but where all is peace and happiness.

A. H. WILLIAMS.

Mrs. EMILY V. BOYD.—The subject of this sketch was born May 22, 1847, and died July 21, 1909. She was Miss Emily Virginia Pierce, and was married to Lemuel Milton Boyd on April 6, 1864, who died July 26, 1900, and who was a local preacher of the M. E. Church, South. Boyd's Chapel stands as a monument to his memory. Sister Boyd had been a member of the M. E. Church, South, for forty years and lived a pure, devoted and consistent Christian life, and though she was suddenly called into the presence of God, we feel sure she was "ready to go." She leaves eleven children, five boys and six girls, and a host of friends to mourn their loss. Her home was ever the resting-place of the preachers of the gospel who passed that way. May the good Lord in his manifold, tender mercies comfort and sustain by his grace and spirit, the bereaved ones who linger upon the shores of time and prepare them for a happy reunion beyond, where they all may "rest under the shade of the trees."

JOHN G. SLOANE.

Mrs. MARY ELLA LEE, a good lady of the Curtis Chapel (Mayhew Charge), and wife of John Herbert Lee, steward of the same church, has died lately. Mrs. Lee was an excellent Christian and so regarded by the entire community. Brother Lee has sustained a great loss, as has also the children of the home and the church and people will greatly miss her good example which was indicative of faith in God and constant consecration to his service. A great congregation gathered to witness the funeral services and all departed from the cemetery feeling that a devoted follower of the divine Christ had gone from honored service to the reward of heaven. Brother Lee and family have the respect and sympathy of all who know them. They read the New Orleans Advocate, and are prompt in business and in the work of the church, and glad always to worship at the house of God. Sister Lee was leading her family toward heaven. May they keep the good way and follow as God may appoint.

W. T. PHILLIPS.

Mrs. LULA M. WHITE (nee Hickman) was born Feb. 4, 1869, in Bossier parish, near Haughton, La., and departed this life July 17, 1909. She had sometime previously been sick, but had gotten up and had been visiting the evening she died. She was stricken with heart failure and died almost without a moment's warning. Her husband died several years before, and she was living in the town of Haughton with her sisters. She leaves three sisters and two brothers to mourn her loss. Sister White joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1890, in which she lived a devoted Christian life till death, and now she has joined the church triumphant. We miss her kind and happy face from the home and from the church, but we would not call her back from the bosom of Jesus, in which she rests secure from this world's sin, sorrow and suffering. May her loved ones emulate her example of Christian piety and deep devotion to God, and may his grace abundantly comfort and sustain them in this hour of trouble. Her pastor,

JOHN G. SLOANE.

Brother A. J. PYRON was born July 4, 1834, and departed this life Sept. 3, 1909, being in his seventy-sixth year. He was buried at Shiloh Church, Sept. 3, 1909, with Masonic honors. Brother Pyron was married Jan. 10, 1869, and is survived by his devoted wife and five honorable and faithful children. At the age of twenty-two he joined the Methodist Church and since he has lived a devoted Christian life, serving for twenty years as steward. He was true and steadfast in every relation of life. He was full of good words and works. For many years he served the people of Mars Hill Church as Sunday School superintendent. He continued in this labor until ill-health forced him to forego it. His work in this capacity, as well as in every other relation of life will remain a monument to him and a priceless heritage to the loved ones left behind. But it was his home life that his lofty character shone brightest. It was an inspiration to anyone to be in that home and see the devotion of that father and husband and also of the wife and children to him. The last few months of his life he was in poor health and great deal of the time was confined to his room. But he bore his sufferings with fortitude, patiently awaiting the summons which will sooner or later come to us all. And there again the purity of his life shone with a new lustre. There was no hurried preparation for him to make. He had always lived close to God, knowing always that the summons would surely come for him to leave the scenes of his earthly life. His motto was: "Thy will be done and not mine." From his home a large number of affectionate relatives and friends followed him to his grave. Dear Brother, May we all seek to emulate your piety and many noble virtues, striving to meet you in that bright celestial kingdom where affliction and sorrow and pain and death never come!

It was in this very cottage in Brookside, 15 miles from Birmingham, Ala., that three Italians nearly died of Fever. They had been sick 3 months. Johnson's Tonic cured them quickly—read letter below:

Brookside, Ala., May 4, 1903.

The two physicians here had 3 very obstinate cases of continued Malarial Fever. All were Italians and lived on a creek 50 yards from my store. These cases were of three months standing, their temperature ranging from 100 to 104. The doctors had tried everything in vain. I persuaded them to let me try Johnson's Tonic. I removed all the printed matter and let the medicine go out in a plain bottle as a regular prescription. The effect in all three cases was immediate and permanent. They recovered rapidly and there was no recurrence of the Fever.

AN EARNEST PLEA FOR MEADVILLE CHURCH.

Dr. Boswell: In the last week's issue of the Advocate I noticed a plea from Mrs. Gough of Meadville, asking the people in general and the Methodist people especially to help in building a Methodist Church in Meadville. This is a worthy claim, and I will ask all our preachers to help Brother Lane and the good people to build this church. Also I ask the laymen to take hold of this matter. The reason I write as I do is that I have been placed in similar circumstances, and we are due Brother Lane our help in this struggle to build. I had the pleasure of spending eight days in Meadville in July helping Brother Lane in a meeting. Then their greatest trouble was on.

We have a good membership there, but they are not able to build a church such as would lead the people to respect Methodism.

I wish the Woman's Home Mission Society would take up the matter, too. May these women of Meadville and Brother Lane expect, and may they get, a contribution from every one who reads this appeal.

Please send your contribution to Rev. W. H. Lane, or to Mrs. Gough, or any of the building committee. Brother Lane has a hard work to serve, but many good people to preach to, and let us help this good man and these good women who are trying to build this church.

FIRST AID TO PARENTS.

Every father and mother is frequently called upon to treat the simpler maladies of the household, and no home is complete without a medicine shelf. In thousands of homes both in America and foreign countries the remedy most valued and most frequently used is "Gray's Ointment." For boils, old sores, carbuncles, chronic ulcers, burns, festering cuts, bruises, poison oak, and many other ailments it is the parent's faithful helper and reliance. Get a 25c. box at your druggist's or if you have never used it send your name for a small free trial box which we will gladly send postpaid to demonstrate our claim that Gray's Ointment is indispensable in every home. Address Dr. W. F. Gray & Co., 809 Gray Building, Nashville, Tenn.

Mrs. H. E. Jackson of Mt. Jackson, Va., writes: "Please send me one box of Gray's invaluable Ointment. I have used it in my family for 15 years and have not found any ointment equal to it."

Peacefulness is not inconsistent with activity. The opposite of rest is not work, but restlessness, and the source of peace is not inaction, but single-mindedness.—Francis Greenwood Peabody.

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the propertyholders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the propertyholders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically not outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C Hartwell & Co., for a detailed explanation.

Obituaries.

JOHN CLEM WILLIAMS was born near Hamburg, Franklin county, Miss., June 24, 1827, and died at his home where he was born and reared Sept. 21, 1909, being eighty-two years and two months and twenty-seven days old. His parents were religious and gave their son the proper training for a useful life. Thus trained by religious parents, he was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, at the age of eighteen years, and was a true and faithful member until his death, often being Sunday school superintendent, class leader, trustee and steward. Brother Williams loved his church and preacher, and was never happier than when entertaining the preacher in his own home. In 1861 he joined the Confederate army and was a true and valiant soldier, as is attested by all his comrades. Brother Williams was twice married. His first marriage was blessed with seven children, six daughters and one son; his second marriage with one daughter. His wife, six daughters and one son live to mourn their loss. Brother Williams was a good citizen, a true friend and neighbor, a devoted husband and a loving father.

W. W. SIMMONS.

WILLIAM SAMUEL DAVIS, son of Rozier and Margaret Davis, of Garlandsville, Miss., was born Dec. 12, 1839, and passed to his reward on Oct. 1, 1909, at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Margaret L. Blackwell, of Montrose, Miss. He leaves a wife and daughter, at whose hospitable home for the last three years he dwelt. For several years he had been sorely afflicted with a cancer that caused his death. In his affliction he bravely bore the pain and cheerfully was resigned. Brother Davis first united with the Green Vally Congregational Methodist Church. Later he joined the M. E. Church, South, at Clear Springs about eighteen years ago. On moving to Montrose, he placed his letter with the Methodist Church here, and was a devoted member, and highly respected. June 27, 1866, is the date of his marriage to Miss Harriet Craven, of Jasper County, Miss. He was a Confederate soldier and saw service during the most of that conflict, under Capt. Lafer, of Company K. During his last illness our venerable brother suffered severely, but patiently, and gave testimony of his triumphant trust in the Redeemer. A large concourse of people attended the funeral and his body was interred in the village cemetery to await the resurrection of the just.

Mrs. MOLLY LAWRENCE (nee Haughton) was born Sept. 11, 1848, and departed this life Sept. 25, 1909. She was married to Dr. Paul Lawrence, of Haughton, La., Nov. 26, 1870, and God blessed this union with nine children, who are all grown and married except one, and only one daughter preceded her to the glory-world. Sister Lawrence had been a great sufferer for many months and her death was not unexpected, but it was a sad parting when the end came. All the family were present except one daughter, who arrived a few minutes after her mother's spirit went to God. Sister Lawrence was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1885 under Brother Blocker's preaching, and she lived as pure and perfect a Christian life as was possible in this world, and always adorned and exemplified the doctrine and experience of entire sanctification. She was an earnest and zealous Christian as long as she had strength to work, and her place in church, Sunday school, prayer-meeting and the societies of the church was always occupied by her as long as she was able to attend. To the bereaved husband and children we extend our deepest sympathy. May God's grace and spirit comfort them in this greatest sorrow, and finally unite them all in our Father's house above. Her pastor,

JOHN G. SLOANE.

ABRAHAM NEWTON PERKINS was born in Jasper county, Ga., June 18, 1823. His early life was spent in Jasper and LaGrange counties. At eighteen years of age he moved with his parents to Perry county, Ala. His first marriage was to Miss Sibley of Uniontown, Ala. To this union two children were born. His second marriage was to Miss Marshall, of Perry county, Ala. Eight children were the fruit of this marriage. Two of these died in childhood, two in adult life, and four are now living. The living are T. T. Perkins, of Bond, Miss.; W. L. Perkins, of Mound, Fla.; Mortimer Perkins, of Burnsville, Ala., and Mrs. Fannie E. Payne, Laurel, Miss. During the civil war Brother Perkins was employed by the Confederate government on the Tombigbee river in keeping a warehouse and in securing salt for government use, hence he did no active service as a soldier. His only daughter, Fannie, was happily married to Jno. W. Payne in 1885, and with her he lived to the time of his death. Brother Perkins joined the Methodist Church at eleven years of age, and lived a pure, consistent Christian life until God called him to his reward on the 15th of August, 1909, just as he had well entered his eighty-seventh year. His body was laid to rest in the cemetery at Union Church, near Laurel, Miss. Brother Perkins enjoyed a rich Christian experience, and talked freely about the peace and satisfaction he had in the love and service of God. As his pastor, I visited him frequently during his last illness, and found him always happy in the consciousness of God's love and ready for God to call him home. He gave seventy-five years of his life to the service of God, filling various offices in the Methodist Church. He was almost entirely helpless during the last seven months of his life, but was tenderly ministered to by his loving daughter and her family. A pure, good man has passed from us. We shall miss him, but we know where to find him.

COCA-COLA AND HEADACHE.

COCA-COLA has never relieved a headache that could not have been relieved by a good cup of tea or coffee. It is the caffeine contained in these three drinks that is refreshing to the nerves and relieves the headache, and yet you have heard people argue that COCA-COLA must contain morphine, whisky or some other injurious drug because it relieves headache. Well, there are more ways of relieving tired, weary nerves than by benumbing them with cocaine, morphine, whisky, bromide or coal tar remedies.

Tea, coffee and COCA-COLA relieve headache by refreshing the nerves and not by deadening them. In relieving headache COCA-COLA is superior to tea or coffee, not because it contains more caffeine, for it contains only about one-half as much, but because COCA-COLA is free from tannic acid. There is no necessity to argue, guess or conjecture what COCA-COLA contains, or does not contain. It has been analyzed by Chemists of the National, City and State Governments as well as by the Professors of Chemistry in the leading Universities, Colleges and Polytechnic Schools. They all find that it does not contain cocaine, whisky, morphine, opium, bromide or any narcotic drug. They find that it does contain about half as much caffeine as tea and coffee. Copies of the above analyses will be sent free to any reader of this paper who has any doubt whatever that COCA-COLA is not what it is claimed to be—a pure, harmless, delicious, refreshing, temperance drink. Address, The Coca-Cola Co., Atlanta, Ga.

TOPIC FOR NOV. 7.

Nov. 7. In Business on Borrowed Capital. Luke xix 11-27.

The Master was making his way towards Jerusalem. In Jericho he stopped at the house of Zaccheus, the publican. When men murmured, he spake many things to them, among others this parable of the ten pounds. The king who was preparing to take his journey into a far country, gave to each of his servants a pound. When he returned from his journey he required of them an accounting for the money. One returned to him ten pounds, another five pounds, while still another had simply hid his pound in a knapkin until his lord's return.

These men were in business on borrowed capital. It was theirs to use only for a season. They had to acount for it. We, like them, hold in trust that which is really another's. The houses and lands that come into men's hands must be acounted for before the king. We must likewise give acount for all the powers we possess, and all the opportunities which come to us.

The Lord has promised that he, who is faithful in his appointed place, shall receive reward at his hands. This parable seems to teach that according as a man uses the powers given him, so shall the reward be. The man who brings forth the best results from the pound in his care shall receive the greatest honor at the Lord's hands.

The man who buries his pound and does not try to bring forth results shall not only fail to receive reward, but shall lose the pound which was in his possession.

In the parable of the ten talents, each receives according to his ability. In this parable, each one has equal opportunity, and an equal capital with which to work. The requirement of our Father is that each of us shall do our best, and for this we are given equal opportunity.

When each of us shall stand before the Father, he will not ask how much we have done, but how well we have done. To him who has done his best, there is no real failure. Canon Farrar has written, there is but one real failure in life possible, and that is not to be true to the best one knows.

WOMAN'S BEAUTY

A woman's beauty is dependent on her health. To keep her beauty, she must keep her health. Sickness and suffering leave their trace, pain leaves its marring imprint. Ladies have come to realize that to be beautiful and attractive they must give attention to physical fitness and health.

Countless women suffer from ailments designated generally as "female complaint," thinking it is the natural lot of their sex to suffer.

This is a mistaken belief. Nature invariably has a cure for her children's ills. Thousands of women have found permanent relief for their sufferings by using that natural, herbal medicine,—Wine of Cardui. Cardui is a pure, non-intoxicating remedy, specifically for women, which has grown steadily in favor during the past fifty years. Letters pour in every day, expressing the gratitude of the writers, who have been relieved of their misery and restored to health.

When you are nervous or sick, get Cardui from your druggist, and try it.

N. B. Upon request, we will send you, free of charge, our valuable, illustrated 64 page book "Home Treatment for Women." In it you will find valuable information regarding the treatment of female troubles.

REVIVALS IN THE VAIDEN CHARGE.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Our protracted meetings are over, and precious times of refreshing from the Lord they were. Churches were revived and sinners converted, about thirty having joined the church in our bounds. Some precious seasons of grace were enjoyed with other brethren. I seem now sometimes to hear the songs of praise and the earnest prayers as the people wept and rejoiced together.

Brother J. W. Dorman, of Lexington, assisted in the meetings at Vaiden and Kilmichael. He is an earnest messenger of God; he needs no words of commendation from me. He is a sucessful and very pleasant fellow-laborer.

Brother E. B. Sharp assisted me at Columbiana Church, "the young man eloquent," his pleasant, earnest words will be remembered in days to come. Brother Sharp is a worthy young man, with a bright future before him. He is finishing his four years' term on the Poplar Creek charge, and the people regret to give him up.

Say, Doctor, the prospective delegates to the General Conference are riding their hobby-horses right lively. I wish they would let our "grand old church" alone. She just suits me as she is. I can easily adjust myself to every part of her machinery, and as she is in the greatest prosperity of all her glorious history I would not have any restatement of doctrine or change of polity. Let our glorious Zion still echo her prayers and songs and ringing gospel calls to a lost world. She does not need patching up now.

Well, we are looking toward the Annual Conference now. Of course, we expect to be there with "everything in full, Bishop." I am sorry to note that some of the brethren have had sickness. Hope they may all soon be restored to their usual health and to their "Lord's employ."

J. H. SMITH.

A GOOD MEETING AT MONTROSE.

Dear Brethren: It was a providence beyond doubt, that brought to us lately at my request a good man and father in Israel, the Rev. C. McDonald, to assist in conducting special religious services in our church and Training School. Every night at the church and at the opening and closing exercises of the school daily this man of God broke the bread of life and fed our souls most helpfully. There were at least ten who found peace. The membership was greatly blessed and lasting good was done in the community at large.

REPORT OF THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

The annual meeting of the Publishing Committee of the three patronizing Conferences of the New Orleans Christian Advocate met in the Advocate office, in New Orleans, Wednesday, Oct. 27. All the members of the committee were present. N. E. Joyner was elected chairman, and W. W. Woollard secretary.

N. E. Joyner, who was appointed last year to see to certain needed repairs in the Advocate building, reported that the repairs had been made in part, though there were other repairs yet needed.

The report of the publisher, Mr. Chas. O. Chalmers, showed that the Advocate was in a flourishing condition. While other church papers were conducted at an actual loss, the Advocate had given a small per cent. on the invested capital. The average weekly circulation for the year had been 6438; the present subscription list is 7000. It may be a little startling to some to know that the entire amount received for subscriptions gives only 91.6 cents for each subscriber. This is due in part to the failure of the publisher to collect on subscriptions. Another source of loss here is that the publisher has to pay 10 cents for the collection of so many personal checks that are sent in payment of subscriptions. The cost of production of the paper was found to be $1.13 for each subscription. The paper, however, is not run at a loss, as these figures would indicate; for the advertising enables the publisher to meet all expenses and give him a little more than 5 per cent. interest on his $10,000 plant. This however is a very inadequate income, as the wear of his machinery is continually going on, and the outfit will ultimately have to be replaced. With a subscription list of 10,000 he would get a fair remuneration for his investment, and at the same time be enabled to make some needed improvements in the Advocate.

The report of the editor, Rev. J. W. Boswell, D.D., called forth from the members of the committee words of hearty congratulation for the success of the Advocate, especially during the year just closing. It was said from all sides that the paper had given more general satisfaction this year than ever before. The following resolutions express the committee's official approbation of the administration of the editor and the publisher. (See report of the Committee on Resolutions.)

The secretary was instructed to make official report of the Advocate, its condition and needs, to the three patronizing Conferences at their next sessions.

A committee was appointed to formulate a code of By-Laws to govern the Publishing Committee's proceedings, to be acted upon at its next regular meeting. The charter of the publishing committee requires that its chairman shall be a resident of the city of New Orleans. It occasionally happens that no member of the committee is a resident of that city; so the Committee on By-Laws was instructed to have the charter so amended that the residence of its chairman would not be so restricted.

The committee elected Rev. R. A. Meek, of the North Mississippi Conference, the editor of the Advocate for a term of two years. Brother Meek will move to New Orleans and assume the duties of editor January first.
W. W. WOOLLARD, Sec'y.

NOTIFICATION AND REPLY.

Tupelo, Miss., Nov. 1, 1909.

Rev. R. A. Meek, Greenville, Miss.:

Dear Brother Meek: The Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, in its regular annual meeting, in the Advocate office, in New Orleans, on Oct. 27, ultimo, elected you to be the editor of the Advocate for a term of two years, beginning Jan. 1, 1910. Your management of the Advocate, together with your relation to the publisher, Mr. Chas. O. Chalmers, are defined in the contract the committee has with Mr. Chalmers, a copy of which I hand you enclosed.

Trusting that you may accept the place to which the Church is here calling you, and praying that God may bless your service as editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate to his glory, and to the upbuilding of his Church in Mississippi and Louisiana and wherever else our organ may go, I am, most respectfully,
W. W. WOOLLARD,
Sec'y Pub. Com.

Greenville, Miss., Nov. 4, 1909.

Rev. W. W. Woollard, Secretary of the Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate:

Dear Brother: Your letter of the 1st inst. informing me of my election to the editorship of the New Orleans Christian Advocate has been received. Having always attached great weight to the voice of the Church as expressed through constituted authority, I do not, with the light before me at present, feel at liberty to decline this second summons to the tripod of the organ of Louisiana and Mississippi Methodism. In signifying my acceptance, subject to the approval of the North Mississippi Conference and its president, Bishop E. E. Hoss, I am not unmindful of the large responsibility which the position will necessarily impose, or the magnitude of the task which you have invited me to assume. And but for my desire to contribute the utmost in my power to the upbuilding of the Church and the cause of Christ, nothing could influence me to abandon the pleasant and familiar work of the pastorate for the laborious and difficult field of religious journalism.

But be that as it may, I shall accept your action as a call to duty, and in accordance with your instruction, take charge of the Advocate not later than January 1, and give to it the best service of which I am capable.

Please express to your committee my heartfelt thanks for this confidence which they have seen fit to repose in me, and assure them that I shall faithfully endeavor not to betray the important trust which they have committed to my hands.

With best wishes, and an earnest prayer that our historic paper may speedily attain to still larger prosperity and usefulness, I remain yours respectfully,
R. A. MEEK.

THE OKLAHOMA CONFERENCE MEMORIAL.

At the session of the Oklahoma Conference in 1908 the following memorial to the General Conference was adopted. It was recently forwarded to us by Dr. Anderson, of the Western Methodist, with a request to publish. We comply with the request; not because we endorse the action of our Western brethren, nor simply because we have been asked to do so, but that our readers may see what kind of opinions are being put forth before our people.

MEMORIAL.

"Whereas, We believe the present relations of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Methodist Episcopal Church are not pleasing to the great Head of the Church.

"Whereas, A divided Methodism in the United States of America, though formerly unavoidable, is, under our present circumstances, a reproach in the sight of the whole Christian world; and

"Whereas, Such a divided state involves and must always involve antagonistic waste and consequent loss of power;

Whereas, A great Church must, in the very nature of our gospel, provide for differing local conditions in all the externals of racial and national life, insisting only upon the unity of the life of Jesus Christ; therefore be it

Resolved, By the Oklahoma Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in session at Oklahoma City, this the 11th day of November, 1908—

"1. That we declare for one Methodism in America.

"2. That we favor such a union as will bind the several Methodist Churches of this country into one body, agreeing in all the essentials of Methodist doctrine, polity and practice, and yet such a union as will preserve local autonomy for the several sections of a vast and growing country, and such a union as will respect racial lines—that is such a union as will allow sections and races to develop along their own peculiar lines, so far as affects the externals of civic and social life.

"3. That we suggest one Methodism with five General Conference jurisdictions, four for the white people and one for the African people of these United States.

"4. That we hereby memorialize our next General Conference to appoint commissioners, to meet like commissioners from other Methodist Churches, if it shall please them to appoint such like commissioners, to carry into effect such a union as is here described."

The above memorial outlines the plan for the federation of Methodism in the United States, advocated by Dr. Anderson for several years past. In reference to the matter he says in the Western Methodist, of Oct. 7:

"We especially desire our brethren in the South-Atlantic Conferences and the Gulf Conferences to give consideration to this question. It is easy enough for those who labor in fields all to themselves, who suffer no friction in their work, who see none of the disgraceful situations so common in the West, it is easy enough for them, we say, to pooh-pooh the whole question. But it is not an exhibition of statesmanship to do it. There are antagonisms in hundreds of places between the two great Methodisms of this country which are the shame of common Methodism. There are wastes, of men and of money, that cry to heaven; and will cry till we abolish them. There is loss to the kingdom of God which is a consequence of a house divided against itself.

"The Southern Methodist Church can afford to make the adjustment contemplated in these resolutions. It provides for everything for which we need to contend. The South desires to preserve a measure of local autonomy; this arrangement provides for it. The South knows that it must guard against race blending, can never enter into any arrangement that does not guard against it; and this is provided for. What more should we ask?"

MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

The executive committee of the board of trustees of Millsaps College had a very satisfactory meeting last week. The college is making constant advance, and continues to grow in power and influence.

Our receipts from tuition this year are somewhat smaller than than they were last session. Also, on account of decreasing rates of interest, our income from the endowment funds shows a decline as well. This makes it imperative that our friends who have subscribed to the increased endowment should pay their subscriptions by December next. Remember, brethren, that every dollar you pay counts two. Brother T. W. Lewis is too busy with his important pastorate at Columbus to give much time to this work; but he will be glad to receive your payments. If all our charges in Mississippi will enable their pastor to pay in full the assessment for education they will help the trustees to solve problems that are causing them anxious moments, both at Millsaps and Grenada. We do not plead for favoritism, but do nisist that no cause is more worthy, important and needy.
J. R. BINGHAM.

A new light for buildings, offices, etc., has been introduced, and may possibly supersede all other lights in many places. Zion's Herald, of Boston, gives expression to the following on the subject: "What is to be the light of the future? A good light ought to have not only strong illuminating power, but also freedom from heat, softness to the eyes, and a proper balance of light and shadow. The candle was a soft but weak light; the gas light was stronger but it radiated much heat. The incandescent mantle lights for gas or gasoline are intense but according to the occulists highly injurious to the eyes; the electric light is heat producing. The new Engineering Club of Northwestern University heard an address Thursday, Oct. 21, by Mr. George C. Keech on the Cooper-Hewitt mercury lamp. This lamp has such chemical effect that under it all people have a ghastly appearance. But its radiation of heat is so slight that it is possible to hold the hand on a tube emitting as much light as a large size arc lamp. Owing to its small heat loss the light is the most economical lamp known, its efficiency being about three times that of the arc light and six or seven times higher than incandescent lights. The United States Government has found the lamp of special service in the large city post offices as the green light brings out sharply the contrast between the black ink of addresses and the white of envelopes."

If President Taft and Cabinet, and the Senators and Congressmen who attended the deep-water convention in the city last week, received cards of invitation to the "Women, Men and Bull Wrestling Matches" scheduled to be "pulled off" on the evening of November first, we are not aware of it. All the same the things were advertised to take place in New Orleans, the metropolis of the South, the center of civilization, and with more church members in proportion to population than any city in the country. A bull was furnished by a citizen of St. Bernard Parish, and a man agreed to wrestle with it, and to forfeit $100 if he did not throw the animal to the floor inside of thirty minutes. At the same exhibition, two women were advertised to wrestle a straight catch-as-catch-can match to a finish." Whether they came out on the stage in regular prize-fight garb or in the latest style of women's wear, the card did not state—the former, we suppose, as a picture of one of the women designed to show the strength of her muscles appeared in one of the leading daily papers. About two years ago, a like exhibition was given in the city "before an audience that packed the theatre from pit to dome." New Orleans is a veritable paradise for pleasure-makers and pleasure-seekers—and we are sorry to say, the pleasures offered and indulged are not always of a refining and elevating character. We can but say: What a pity!

New Orleans has been much excited the past three weeks. The excitement reached its height on Saturday, October 30, when President Taft, who had come down the river from St. Louis, reached the wharf, and was escorted through the city by the mayor and other prominent citizens. His trip from St. Louis by water was for the purpose of inspecting the Mississippi River, with a view to making an intelligent recommendation to Congress, based on his personal observation, in regard to the deep water way to the gulf. His visit was timed so as to meet the deep water-way convention assembled in the city, and to address the people on the subject. Not only the citizens of the city, but thousands of people from the country met and greeted the President. No President was ever more heartily welcomed to New Orleans, and no President ever seemed to enjoy the welcome of the people more. On the trip he was accompanied by several members of his cabinet, and something like two hundred members of Congress—Senators and Representatives, and more than a score of governors. It was the largest gathering of civic dignitaries ever witnessed in the South—perhaps in the whole country, outside of Washington City. Mr. Taft committed himself thoroughly to the deep water way project, and we may expect to see in a few years from now more boats, large and small, and more traffic on the Mississippi than our fathers ever dreamed of in days of their greatest prosperity.

One of the town papers, or the town paper of Mineral Wells, Texas, is somewhat facetious in prophesying as to how social functions will be written ten years hence. Here is the way, it says, weddings will be treated: "The bride looked very well in the traveling dress, but all eyes were centered upon the groom. He wore a dark suit that fitted him perfectly and in his dainty gloved hands he carried a small rose. His curly hair was beautifully done, and the delicate odor of his hair oil of the best quality floated down the aisle as he passed. The young people will miss him now that he is married. He is loved by all for his many accomplishments, his tender graces and winning ways. The bride commands a good salary as book-keeper and the groom will miss none of the luxuries to which he has been accustomed. A crowd of pretty men saw him off at the depot." Of course, that is mere burlesque, but the rapidity with which women are going into business—often crowding men out, makes the matter more serious than many people are willing to acknowledge. As a matter of fact, many hundreds of women in town and cities are to-day working for the support of the family while the husband is doing nothing. Whether the men are idle from choice, or of necessity, we are not prepared to say. But we do say that if the well-to-do women who are in business of choice and not of necessity, would quit and fill their places in the home, there would be fewer idle men, and industrial conditions would be better all around. This is the way a plain, old-time Southerner looks at it.

Much opposition was arrayed against Speaker Cannon in the last election for Congressman, but he came out of the contest triumphant and things went well. He was again elected Speaker at the opening of Congress. His friends seemed to think that all the trouble was over. Recently, however, they became really alarmed, and it is said, are at work to overcome the opposition. They have, if report is true, adopted a novel scheme to save their friend. "The word is being given out that the plan now in view as a means of resistance to the attack on the Speaker will be the adoption of some supposedly popular legislation. The two items that are named in connection are the postal savings bank scheme and the parcels post idea. The notion seems to be that if Speaker Cannon should let through a couple of measures of this character, it would point as an argument against those who are charging that the Speaker is reactionary and refuses consistently to permit the passage of popular measures. The noise and controversy which would rage around these measures, or some of the same variety, might, in the opinion of those who are now engineering the campaign for the support of the Speaker, distract attention from the Speaker himself, and thus tend to relieve him of the burden of unpopularity against which he has to struggle." And yet, it is said that Mr. Cannon is not arbitrary—that he does not block legislation. We call to mind that something over a year ago Mr. Cannon's attitude toward temperance legislation was such as to cause the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church to send a delegation to wait on him and ask his aid—which delegation was received with little courtesy, and their message with no consideration.

Prison reform commands a great deal of attention. An association of respectable proportion devotes the whole of its time to its consideration, with what success we are not informed. Considerable advance has been made in one of the largest prisons in California, in reference to which we quote from the Christian Intelligencer: "There everybody seems to be on his good behavior. The whole discipline of the institution turns on a question of obedience. The man who keeps the law can eat at the warden's table. It has passed the experimental stage, for it has been tried long enough to be found successful. The old saying, 'That the best way to reach a man is by way of his stomach' has been tried and proved true. There are three tables in the institution: 1. The first is for men against whom there is no bad mark for rudeness or disobedience for one whole month and who do their work well. The board is first-class at this table and each convict is entitled to a napkin. They are allowed to converse with each other and have waiters. 2. The second table contains the regular prison fare. It is for those who rebel against doing their work or willfully disregard the rules of the institution. The table is made of plain pine boards. The plates and cups are tin. Here they eat their food in silence, without tablecloth, napkin or any one to wait on them. 3. The third table is called 'Bread and Water' and is for the incorrigibles. For their meals three times a day they receive plenty of dry bread and an unlimited quantity of water. When they are confined to their cells for extra bad conduct the bread and water are brought to them. When this was first tried it was found that at the end of three months, one-half of the men were able by their good-conduct marks to secure a seat at the warden's table. At the end of six months two-thirds of the men sat at the first table. After a few years' experience nine men out of every ten are able to keep the law and behave like gentlemen so as to sit at the best table. This change has wrought wonders in every prison where it has been tried."

Mr. Rockefeller has again brought himself into notice—this time by the gift of one million dollars to provide a commission to investigate the "hook-worm" disease supposed to be peculiar to the people of the South. Two men widely separated; Bishop Candler in Atlanta, Ga., the other a citizen of New Orleans, use language wonderfully alike in speaking of the gift. The Daily Picayune was the first to condemn the gift, and question the motive of Mr. Rockefeller. Bishop Candler read the Picayune's criticism, and bearing in mind Mr. Rockefeller's gift for education in the South, said: "The editorial of the Picayune shows both sense and self-respect. 'It is to be hoped that our people will not be taken by Mr. Rockefeller's vermifuge fund and hook worm commission. This habit of singling out the South for all sorts of reforms, remedies and enlightenments is not for our benefit, and the too-ready acceptance of these things upon the part of some of our people is not to our credit. Mr. Rockefeller would take charge of both our heads and our stomachs and purge our brains of ignorance and our bowels of worms.' It is time the Southern people had begun resenting this officious disposition to take care of them, which certain parties are addicted to. Donations may easily as dum-dum bullets wound where they hit and leave a mortal poison in the hole they make after being received. We are certainly able to get rid of our hook worm without Mr. Rockefeller's $1,000,000 dose of vermifuge.'" The New Orleans citizen thinks this is one of the schemes to divert immigration, and says: "None of these things are sufficient to keep the 'dirt-eating Southerners' from rising in prosperity and power, and it is necessary to conjure up all sorts of goblins to frighten people of other lands away from us. Slavery and Ku-Klux are gone, but there remain in the South awful ignorance, 'poor mountain whites,' 'dirt eaters' in the piney woods, 'pellagra' on the coast, and everywhere hook worms. And, then, in dulcet tones of dum-dum benevolence calculated to wound and poison where it hits, there is offered to the ill-fated South board-fed schools and a box of vermifuge." Mr. Rockefeller may be all right in his motives, but he certainly has a rocky road to travel.

AN ARRAIGNMENT.

By H. W. Featherstun, D.D.

In the October number of our Methodist Review Dr. Alexander arraigns certain theological schools. The arraignment occurs incidentally in a review of Robertson's Grammar of the Greek New Testament. The gifted and learned editor evidently wrote out of a full heart an arraignment, which was not intended when he began his review of this Greek Grammar, but which came because of his righteous resentment at a prostitution of high position to an evil end; and because his love for our young preachers impelled him to be silent no longer. What he says ought to be read and well considered by every preacher in the land.

After illustrating by a series of striking examples that a clear knowledge of the Greek tenses will enable the preacher to discover "the main point, the vital point," which is often obscured in our English translations, he is led to say: "And it is a pity that the professors in many so-called theological seminaries do not use their opportunity and spend their time in opening up these hidden riches to the preachers that are in the making, and train them thus to interpret the word of the Lord, instead of spending so large a part of their time, in some instances the most of their time, in forever discussing questions of authorship, sources, date, composition, destination, etc., etc.; as for example, whether Matthew's Gospel was made up of a compilation of the Logia of Papias in Aramaic and an Urmarkus Evangelium with other hitherto unidentified 'sources,' or in some other guessable way. These learned investigations are, of course, punctuated with endless citations of the opinions, on the points involved, of Rabbi Harnack, of Rabbi Julicher and Rabbi Zahn and Rabbi Schmiedel, and Rabbi Baur, and Rabbi Lightfoot, and Rabbi Von Soden and Rabbi Bacon, and Rabbi Wellhausen and Rabbi Burton and Rabbi Tom and Rabbi Dick and Rabbi Harry. Indeed, the more Rabbis and the more opinions to quote, the better; for this display of variegated erudition will impress the admiring theologues with the imposing learning of their professors, which of course, is a great thing—in some instances the main thing. I am not opposing a sane and constructive use of historical criticism, with a reasonable amount of time devoted to critical questions. (Amen and Amen!) What I do lament is that so much of the time of the professors in many of our theological schools is given to these details of external framework, and a demoralizing disproportion of emphasis is put there, while the exhaustless riches of the vital truth within are never brought out, are apparently never discovered, even by the teacher himself."

These words are bravely uttered, and none were ever more timely. Thinking men of heart and of learning are growing sick of the twaddle current now under the pseudonym of "historical criticism." No sensible man opposes historical criticism or any other that is sane and supported by proof; but much that we hear reminds us of what Matthew records of Jesus and the scribes: "He taught * * * as one having authority (the authority of original and conscious possession of truth) and not as the scribes," who taught with the logic of quotation and big names.

Dr. Alexander continues his arraignment in these strong, true words:

"Hence arises the anomalous and deplorable situation that some of our theological schools and teachers 'suggest' doubt, weaken faith, and really unfit men for the preaching of the gospel and the work of the ministry. It will seem a hard saying, but being painfully convinced that it is true and that somebody ought to say it, I venture to say that some of our theological seminaries are the most unfit places to fit men for the preaching of the gospel and the delicate work of the ministry, and the fittest places to unfit them for it, on the face of the earth. Men have gone into some of these seminaries believers and come out skeptics. Men have gone into them spiritually strong and have come out spiritual paralytics. Men have gone into them with an eager enthusiasm for the work of the ministry, and have come out as limp and good-for-nothing as a dish-rag."

This last statement of the Doctor's can find literal verification even in our own church, and the fact is intensely pathetic. It will not do to try and sneer away the force of this charge by suggesting that the trouble was with the boy and not in the teacher. When we men on districts, circuits and missions and in stations gather these fine fellows from the villages, the pine hills and brush creeks, thoroughly converted and full of fire and rich in brain and brawn, and send them to our church schools, we demand—yes, sir, we demand—we have a right to demand, and do demand that they come back to us, certainly no less pious and consecrated that they were when we sent them out.

Dr. Alexander speaks strongly, but justly and wisely. I trust that he will speak again and again.

A TEMPEST IN A TEAPOT.

By Rev. H. M. DuBose, D.D.

In his issue of Oct. 21, the editor of the Western Methodist undertakes with a few strokes of his pen to dispose of a burning issue in Methodism—namely, "The Vanderbilt University Question." The Tennessee Conference at its recent session memorialized the General Conference on this matter, and this action and the discussion attending it are styled by the Western's editor a "stir," a "hubbub." The men of the Tennessee Conference are, however, allowed by Brother Anderson to have "reasons of their own" for the action which they took. Had Brother Anderson been thoughtful or careful enough to prefer a request, the Tennesseans would no doubt have shared their reasons with him. He might thereby have "elicited" some useful facts. As it is he has quashed their indictment without so much as permitting the presentation of a single view of their cause.

The Tennessee Conference is not alone in this action. Other Conferences have adopted similar memorials or entered similar complaints, and yet others may be expected to join in the demand for General Conference action. Brother Anderson will no doubt be privileged to witness a "hubbub" in the general body next May. The Tennessee Conference adopted its memorial without a dissenting vote. Does Brother Anderson take the position that he is better informed on this Vanderbilt matter than nearly three hundred Methodist preachers who live in and about Nashville, the seat of the University? But Brother Anderson is sure that the judgment of the Tennessee Conference should be summarily set aside. He is equally sure that he knows exactly how matters stand. He has made "diligent effort to ascertain." If his exhibit discloses the entire content of his "scoop," why then it is plain that his diligence has, like charity, begun at home—and remained there; or else he has tapped an empty or an unwilling source of information. He quotes from an interview with Dr. Kirkland, printed in a Nashville newspaper, and on that mainly rests his argument. The evidence is ex parte to the last degree, though Chancellor Kirkland is acknowledged on every hand to be a gentleman of unquestioned integrity. It is well known that the issue of the Church on this matter is with Chancellor Kirkland's publicly-announced views on the Church's ownership of Vanderbilt University and his no less publicly-announced policy with reference to the Theological Department of that institution, and especially his relation to a bill introduced in the Tennessee Legislature last spring, to which bill I shall make a reference later.

Why did not Dr. Anderson quote from an interview with ex-governor Porter, "the grand old man" of Tennessee, Chancellor of Peabody College (University of Nashville), on the same subject, in which the aged Chancellor asserts that a plan has long been on foot to secularize Vanderbilt University and relate it to the Peabody schools? Why did he not quote a statement credited to Prof. Wickliffe Rose, of the Peabody College, giving an account of a plan to secure an option on a part of the Vanderbilt campus as a site for the new Peabody buildings? Why did he not print any one of twenty other interviews and contributions appearing in Nashville papers within recent weeks and throwing light on this matter? Possibly they were not clipped and sent him as a supplement to his general diligence in getting information.

The Tennessee Conference has had abundant reason for being suspicious of somebody in authority, and has said so. It now asks the General Conference to remove or make impossible, further grounds for distrust.

In the same number of the Western Methodist in which Dr. Anderson's editorial appears is printed a letter from Dr. Winton, of the Christian Advocate, in which he takes to task those who indulge a zeal for the Church's ownership and control of Vanderbilt University. But he also believes in Church ownership, yet of a sort that is just now producing the actions that are described by the Western's editor as "stirs" and "hubbubs." Brother Winton's notion seems to be that when the Church creates a board of trust it creates something about as big as itself. A little while ago he informed us that when a board of trust abuses its authority the Church's only recourse is to the courts of the country. Let Brother Winton for himself and Dr. Kirkland—or for himself alone, if he cannot speak for the Chancellor—answer, and that in language that those who run may read, these two questions—namely: First. Does the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, own Vanderbilt University absolutely? Second. Has the General Conference the right to remove the members of the board of trust and appoint their successors?

If Chancellor Kirkland and others for whom Brother Winton vouches, believe in the Church's absolute ownership of Vanderbilt University why was such a show of resistance and learned argument made by them before the commission appointed by the last General Conference to settle the question of ownership and control? If these brethren were unfeignedly loyal to the unconditional claim of the Church touching the ownership of this property, why did they not sit quietly down and wait for the commission—which was a Church court—to decide? The naked laws of Tennessee were the real defendants in this case. But these brethren made themselves respondents against the Church's claim on parts, if not on the whole ground, of its contention.

If Brother Anderson wants more information, let him peruse the briefs and other presentations of this case as made by Chancellor Kirkland and his attorneys before this commission. If an effort was not made to weaken the Church's claim, then the actions of the Chancellor and his party were truly "a tempest in a teapot."

Brother Winton seeks to make a light matter of "a certain bill in the Tennessee Legislature a few months ago." From the way in which Brother Winton and other friends of that bill urged its passage through the Senate one would not then have suspected that they regarded it as "unimportant." Brother Winton thinks it was "innocent." By that token it is clear that he understood this bill as little as he now seems to understand the Vanderbilt situation in general. I happen to know a good deal about the bill, and I assert that it was anything but "innocent." I gave much labor and a good deal of time to its defeat in the Senate. Before the Senate committee Dr. Kirkland admitted that one object of this bill was to separate the Theological Department from the University and put it under a separate board of trustees, and one which, as he expressed it, would "bring it more directly under the Church's control." I protested that it could not be brought more directly under the Church's control than now. The Chancellor was at much

NOTICE.

The District Convention of the Woman's Home Mission Society will be held in Alexandria, Thursday, Dec. 9, morning session commencing promptly at 9 o'clock. Each auxiliary is requested to send one or two delegates.

MRS. M. N. JAMES, District Sec'y.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies of the Hattiesburg District will hold a district meeting at Broad Street Church, Hattiesburg, Miss., Nov. 18-21. Let every society send delegates, and churches that have no societies send representatives. Every preacher in the district is especially invited to attend. Send names to Mrs. Dan Gillman, Hattiesburg, Miss.; Mrs. S. S. Ferguson, District Secretary, W. F. M. S.; Mrs. J. A. Bishop, District Secretary, W. H. M. S.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

One of our parsonage queens, Mrs. H. R. Singleton, who, on account of the illness of both the president and corresponding secretary of the W. H. M. S., of Louisiana, represented us at the Board Meeting in Savannah, Ga. She writes: "I am trying to represent Louisiana, but as this is my first Board Meeting, I am trying to keep as near quiet as I can, which is hard for one used to having her say." This speaks well for Brother Singleton. We regret the illness of the other officers, and appreciate our silent (?) representative.

Mrs. Kennedy is "at home," and will be glad to hear from her friends.

As usual, Lafayette was ahead in the Week of Prayer offering, $36. They have a live Press Superintendent, and did not forget the Orphanage at Ruston.

Seventeen new Auxiliaries and five Brigades have been organized in the State since March. The Crowley District Meeting will be held in Morgan City, Nov. 3-5. The Ruston District, in Ruston, the latter part of November.

Sister Wynn, the marvel of untiring, unwasted energy, writes: "We had a fine Week of Prayer at Monroe. God's presence consciously felt, with deepening interest. Membership and subscriptions to Our Homes both increased. Offering, $21.65. Good for a new society." To all of which we say, Amen!

Ruston Auxiliary observed the Week of Prayer, with a fairly good attendance, and the usual interest.

We trust that no Auxiliary failed to observe the Week of Prayer, and that all will report later. We are indebted to Mrs. Wynn for a printed copy of a fine paper written and read by Mrs. Jno. B. Parker, Jr., of Monroe. We wish that all who are interested in our Rescue Work could read it.

Sister, if "thy soul should be required of thee this night," could it be said, "She hath done what she could?" The victims slain by "worldly pleasure" are legion. "How shall we escape?"

MRS. ALICE CARY MCKINNEY.

DISTRICT MEETING.

The Alexandria District Meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society will be held in Bunkie, La., Nov. 22, 23. Let each auxiliary send a delegate. Mrs. J. B. Cobb, associate secretary of the Woman's Board, will be with us, and we are praying that our meeting will be a great blessing to all who attend.

MRS. E. G. SEWELL, District Sec'y.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Let me call the attention of the Methodist women of New Orleans to the fact that Mrs. J. B. Cobb, associate secretary of the W.B.F.M., will be in the city Nov. 18-21. A general meeting for all the churches in the district will be held at Rayne Memorial Church Thursday evening, Nov. 18, followed by one all-day meeting (with lunch served at the church), Friday, Nov. 19. On Friday night, Nov. 19, a special service for Young People will be held, and it is hoped that the young people from all the churches will rally to this meeting. It is a rare opportunity that none can afford to miss.

Sunday morning, Nov. 21, at 11 o'clock, Mrs. Cobb will speak at the Second Methodist Church, and Sunday night at Algiers. The public is cordially invited to all these meetings. The meeting will be presided over by the district secretary, Mrs. D. C. Worrel.

MRS. S. A. MONTGOMERY, Cor. Sec.

NOTES FROM THE BOARD MEETING.

The Woman's Board of Home Missions held its Twenty-third Annual Meeting in the historic city of Savannah, Ga., in Wesley Monumental Church, Oct. 14-23. The weather was beautiful and balmy in this quaint city by the sea, and everything conspired to make the session a delightful one. The ladies of the four Methodist churches served delicious lunches every day during the meeting, and such harmony and fellowship existed that everyone felt it was indeed good to be there. Miss Belle H. Bennett, in her address on Thursday evening, spoke on "Work of the Woman's Home Mission Society." It was interesting to note the comments of some of her listeners after the large congregation had been dismissed. "What a magnificent speaker!" "Such consecration and love as is manifest in her person!" "I had no idea the women of our church were doing such a grand work," etc.

We who are in this work were saying, "O, that we had more money to put into these enterprises which have been so wonderfully blessed of God and used in his service!"

Of the 900,000 women and children of our church only 86,343 are enlisted in this work for the mental, social and spiritual uplift of our people, and if the victory ever comes it will come because of the consecrated, efficient zeal of less than 10 per cent of the women and children of Southern Methodism.

Before we can enter any new field our Society has to support the Cuban Work, with three institutions; the Mountain Work, with two; the Pacific Coast Work, with four; the Industrial Work, with three, and the Gulf Coast Work, with three, besides the donations to parsonages. More equipment is needed in almost all of our institutions.

We were fortunate in having Miss Emma Tucker conduct our morning devotionals, and Dr. John A. Rice our noontide Bible studies. These devotional hours were full of inspiration and refreshing to every one.

On Friday evening Bishop Hendrix preached a masterful sermon and consecrated three deaconesses (seven had already been consecrated in Kansas City, in May, and five in Nashville, in June).

The report of the corresponding secretary showed that there are 4554 societies, including the Young People and the Brigades, with a membership of 86, 340, showing increase during the year of 14,010 members. The total amount reported for connectional work is $167,818.50, and for local work $283,428.44, making a total, for all purposes, of $451,246.94. Reports show 427,768 visits to sick and strangers, 11,145 cottage prayer meetings, 158,779 garments given away, and 1040 boxes of supplies sent to our preachers, our orphanages and our schools.

The report of the editor of "Our Homes" was enthusiastically received. Miss Helm was given a rising vote of thanks and a Chautauqua salute for her splendid report. The subscription list numbers 19,833, an increase over last year of 3944, and after paying all the running expenses, including the salary of the editor, Miss Helm was able to turn into the treasury the sum of $2000. Every new subscription price now goes into the treasury of our Society, so let's try to double our number of subscribers before the next annual meeting.

The New Membership crusade was decided on, and the last quarter of this fiscal year selected in which to make the canvass. Members of the Louisiana Home Mission Society, we must fall into line and forward march! Let's double our membership, and try to get each member, new and old, to subscribe for "Our Homes." Intelligent, effective work is done only where the periodicals and mission study books are read.

A memorial, asking that women be given the rights of the laity, with the signature of all except five members of the board, was sent to the General Conference, and also one requesting the General Conference to preserve our autonomy.

The board gave $500 to the French Mission for a parsonage, at Houma, and $500 to Louisiana Avenue, together with a loan of $3000.

The next meeting will be in Nashville, Tenn., in April, 1910. MRS. H. R. SINGLETON, Alexandria, La. Rec. Sec'y of La. Conf.

There is a world of difference between saying things well, and appreciating them when well said. One of the marks of true genius is its ability to so state great truths, that the man of ordinary ability feels as if he knew these things always, and could have said them as well, if only the circumstances had offered opportunity.

My faith is that there is a far greater amount of revelation given to guide each man by the principles laid down in the Bible, by conscience and by providence, than most men are aware of. It is not the light which is defective, it is an eye to see it.—Norman Macleod.

If we had prayed more, we need not have worked so hard. We have too little praying face to face with God every day. Looking back at the end, I suspect there will be great grief for our sins of omission—omission to get from God what we might have got by praying.—Andrew A. Bonar.

JEPHTHA F. RANDALL.

The first protracted meeting that I attended after being licensed to preach in October, 1854, was held at Bethlehem Church, four miles north of Fayetteville, Ala., in November following.

Among the preachers and active workers at this meeting was Jephtha F. Randall, a young man about twenty-two years of age. He was not yet licensed to preach, but was looking to the ministry. He was modest and unassuming, yet pleasant and companionable, and willing to bear the cross.

Of the preachers present, was Dr. Silas H. Cox, of consuming zeal and fervid spirit; another was William Cameron, brother of the sainted J. D. Cameron and T. Cameron of the North Mississippi Conference; still another, was Gabriel Hawkins, licensed during the year, but already a strong, good preacher. He was the father of President Hawkins, of Port Gibson Female College. John Davis, "Uncle Johnnie," was a local preacher of the neighborhood. By his lively religious experience, he was very helpful; a sort of kindling wood to the meeting. At this meeting I met John C. Brogan, a son-in-law of Brother John Davis. He was born in Ireland and educated for Catholic orders. He afterwards became a Methodist preacher, and died in 1888, as I understand, a member of the Mississippi Conference. He was the father of Rev. W. E. M. Brogan, pastor of the Methodist Church at Aberdeen, Miss.

It was a good meeting; the autumn weather was pleasant; the people were kind and hospitable; the fellowship of the brethren was delightful. There was earnest gospel preaching. There were professions of faith and reclamation; good was accomplished, and God was glorified. Such in a general way, was the meeting at Bethlehem, as memory now recalls—it continued for some days; other visiting brethren had left, and Brother Jephtha Randall and myself remained to bring up the concluding services. I do not remember now, whether Brother Randall or myself conducted the closing service at night. Uncle Johnnie Davis suggested that while they should sing a closing or farewell song, we should go around and shake hands with the people. This was a little embarrassing to Jephtha and myself, as we had little or no experience in this kind of service. But we did the best we could, and so the meeting came to a close. There is great good in a hearty religious handshake. It is a means of grace that we might profitably use oftener than we do. We spent the last night together, perhaps, and separated the next day for our respective homes. Thus was I brought in close touch with Brother Randall at this meeting, and after all the intervening years I cherished a tender memory of his companionable, brotherly and devout spirit.

Jephtha F. Randall was born in Pickens county, Ala., Nov. 11, 1832. He was admitted into the Alabama Conference at Selma, Ala., in 1857. He was married to Nancy J. Ramsey, Feb. 6, 1861. He was for nineteen years on the effective list. At two different times, five years in all, he was supernumerary, and one year, 1871, local. In the fall of this same year he was readmitted into the North Alabama Conference. In this Conference, it seems, he closed his active ministry. In 1882, at his own request, he located and remained local until his death. He died at the home of his brother-in-law, Rev. John A. Egger, in Lowndes County, Miss., Feb. 16, 1900; and was tenderly laid to rest in the Egger Cemetery. His funeral services were conducted by Rev. Eugene Johnston, of Columbus Circuit, North Mississippi Conference.

To our minds there is a touching pathos in the life and labors of our Brother Jephtha Randall. Most of the charges served by him might, I suppose, be termed "outside rows in the itinerant field, affording but a meager support at best. So far as we have any knowledge, he never asked for, or had the benefit of the superannuated relation.

His wife and eight children passed away before his death, all indeed of his immediate family save one daughter, fifteen years old, who was spared to him, and who tenderly ministered to him in his last days.

Left without means of support, his family gone, save the daughter mentioned, and his own health broken down, he was kindly sent for by his friends and cared for by them, until God called him to his heavenly home. He died trusting in the blessed Savior Jesus Christ, whom he had so faithfully preached to others. This imperfect sketch is offered as a slight tribute in memory of the unassuming goodness and faithfulness of our worthy brother. His record is on high!

IN MEMORIAM.

There is no person living, who is in any measure conversant with topics of the day, who has not heard something of what is known as the Laymen's Movement. All through this grand and glorious land of ours the laity of the Christian Church have been carrying on a great work, a work which, in its exactness, could not have been accomplished by the ministers themselves. And, to my mind, there has never been a single member of the laity who has exceeded our late Brother, J. W. Ratliffe, Sr., in the good done to his fellow-man. He, for forty years, served his pastor as steward of the Methodist Church, never shirking a duty. A friend of his, said not long ago: "Picture an ideal man, and you will have an excellent conception of Brother Ratliffe."

And this is true, for he well understood his relation to his God and to humanity. He never failed to ease the breaking heart if the power was his, for he was ever charitable and sympathetic. His fellow citizens say of him, briefly, but to the point: "He was a good citizen." Their meaning is apparent; he recognized the rights of them—and worked for the upbuilding of his town and the betterment of the morals of his townsmen.

Some one has well said that the home life of any man is the best index to character, no matter how great his public life may be. Our brother's home life is well known to me; he was always gentle and kind, exacting obedience from his children, but with a perfect understanding of their aims and desires. He was a true father and a true husband, in deed and in truth. He and his beloved wife worked together for the good of all, and there is no memory sweeter to his loved ones than the thought of the beautiful life he lived before them day by day in their own homestead. The devotion his children held for him was ideal, and he returned it in kind. If all of his friends could speak, they would truthfully say that, to his loved ones, he was above all, and their greatest pleasure was found in giving him happiness.

J. W. Ratliffe was born March 30, 1834, passing to his reward April 15, 1909. He was ready to go for he had the consciousness that God is good, and that his reward would be the divine words: "Well done thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many." His life speaks for itself; other means of expression seem powerless beside the strength of the influence which lives on, even though death's sickle has cut him down at the close of his career of Christian service.

I know of no man for whom I had a more sincere regard than for this friend. Personally, I knew him well; it follows, I loved him well. May God's sunshine come into the hearts of his loved ones! May divine love banish the darkness from the aching hearts!

I. W. Cooper.

"HE IS APPROACHABLE."

I have noticed in different Church papers, when some preacher in discussing a favorite bishop, after elaborating his superior character and qualifications, would close by saying "and he is approachable." As much as to say, the most remarkable thing about the Bishop is that he will allow ordinary men to approach him, and talk to him. Is it possible that promotion so elates and puffs up some Methodist preachers that they lose their humility and spirituality? Was not the Lord Jesus Christ who had all power in heaven and in earth approachable? Did not John, without hestitation, and with impunity lovingly lay his head in his Lord's bosom? Did not Jesus invite the vilest sinner, the troubled heart, and suffering humanity to come unto him? Did not the loathsome leper approach him and was healed with a touch? Our Lord took a towel, girded himself and washed the disciple's feet, and he said: "The disciple is not above his Master, nor the servant above his Lord." Such was the spirit of our Savior, and Paul says: "If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." An anonymous author writes:

"O why should the spirit of mortal be proud,
Like a swift-fleeting meteor, a fast-flying cloud,
A flash of the lightning, a break of the wave,
Man passes from life to his rest in the grave."

NOT BIG ENOUGH TO DIVIDE.

The bright-faced lad who had applied for the position of office boy stood anxiously waiting while the proprietor pondered. The latter surveyed the young applicant with a gaze half humorous, half doubtful. He had much experience, and was not very hopeful of really valuable services.

"I wonder whether you expect to engage as a whole or half boy—half boy, most likely," he said, musingly. The gray eyes in the freckled face flashed inquiringly wide, and he explained: "Oh, I don't mean to question your having the requisite number of arms and legs. Your body is all right; it is your mind I am thinking about—your thoughts, wits, memory. I suppose you have a host of schemes and employments of your own that will be a great deal more important than anything here. You are interested in ball games and—"

"Yes, sir; I like ball first rate. But when I am here, I'll be all here; and when I am through here, I'll be all there. I'll play for all I'm worth in both places, but I ain't big enough to divide."

He gained the place, and he is true to his word; but his opinion of himself is one that might well be widely adopted. Few of us are "big enough to divide" in the sense of giving only half of our mind to the duty in hand. This is the reason so many people fail to do aceptable work.—The Young Evangelist.

JYP.

Jyp kept asking mother whether it was not time to go. And she kept saying, "No, not yet, dear."

But at last, she said, "Well, I think you may start now. Your teacher will be there."

Jyp was very anxious not to be late. He was going to Sunday School, and his teacher, Miss Adeline, had begged all the boys to learn the habit of coming in time. "You would not like to be late at day school," she had said. "Don't you think that you ought to be as particular about Sunday School?"

This is the reason Jyp was hurrying, but when he reached the house were the Boyds lived, Prissie Boyd, was standing at the gate, crying.

"What's the matter?" asked Jyp, slowing up for just one minute.

"I can't go to Sunday School! I'm too late!" wailed Prissie. "Jack is sick and can't take me."

Jyp was sorry for her. He knew how it felt to like to go to Sunday School; he hated to miss.

Prissie had an idea. She rubbed the tears out of her eyes to see what Jyp would think of it. "Mother would let me go with you," she hinted.

"Oh, I'm in a great hurry!" said Jyp, beginning to move on. "I can't wait for you."

"It won't take me long," urged Prissie. "I am all ready, almost."

But Jyp walked along as if he did not hear her, and as if he did not hear her begin to cry again.

But he did hear, and it made him ucomfortable. "It is just like meanness," he told himself. "It seems as if it was better to be a teenty bit late than for Prissie not to go at all. I should think Miss Adeline would rather."

He was not sure. He had not known this teacher long. She was a very tall and a very straight young lady, and she had said a great deal against lateness.

A bird that was apparently waiting for Jyp on a fence post flew away when he came near. Jyp looked up after it and noticed how very bright and blue the sky was.

"Well, any way," said he, stopping short. "God would rather! And mother would. And," turning suddenly around, "I would!"

He called to Prissie. "You go in and get ready! And hurry! I'll take you!"

She went in. May be she hurried, but it seemed to Jyp a long time before she came out again.

He started to tell her that he thought she never was coming. "But," he decided, "I won't. It isn't very polite and it isn't very pleasant. It can't change it now."

So he shut his mouth tight and walked fast, and did not say anything.

But Prissie said a great deal, until she was so out of breath from their haste that it was more comfortable to stop.

"You are a lovely boy!" she said. "Mother thinks you are. Mother thinks very likely you learned it at Sunday School, because they teach every kind of goodness there. She wants me to pay attention and learn, too."

A smile crept between Jyp's lips and undid their stiff line. He was glad that he had waited for Prissie. He would not be a bit surprised if Miss Adeline would be glad, too.

But the funny part of it all, and the delightful part of it was, that when he and Prissie got to Sunday School they were not late at all!—Sally Campbell, in the Young Christian Soldier.

"WHAT A PRISONER DID."

Under the above it was published in the ADVOCATE last week that the word Lord is found 1853 times in the Bible, but in different forms it occurs 7910 times; Lord occurs 7736 times; Lord's, the possessive, occurs 132 times, and in the plural 42. The word girl occurs 1 time, in the singular, Joel 3:8, and 1 time in the plural, Zech. 8:5. The word Jehovah does not occur 6855 times, but only 4 times, according to my best knowledge at present. The 117th Psalm has only 2 verses, and hence the 8th verse of it cannot be the middle verse of the Bible.

ISAAC L. PEEBLES.

NOTE—In printing the matter alluded to by Brother Peebles, we beg to say that we printed it as we found it, without verifying the figures. We could not have done it had we tried, as we had no source of information outside the Book, and we did not have time to go through it. We take it for granted that Brother Peebles has the correct figures, and we thank him for the corrections.—Editor.

TRAVELOGS IN MISSION FIELDS.

The Educational Department of the General Board of Missions announces that the Board has united with the Christian Lantern Slide and Lecture Bureau of Chicago in an interdenominational movement for missionary education and missionary evangelism in the Church. Two lectures on missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, are now ready, namely: "The Dragon Empire, or John Chinaman at Home" and "The Brownies of Dai Nippon, or a Tour in Sunrise Land." These two lectures are carefully prepared in booklet form and the sets of slides are the most artistically executed hand-colored work. The rental rates on these sets are very reasonable, and after keeping up the repairs, the returns all go to building lectures on other fields.

Doctors W. R. Lambuth and Ed. F. Cook have been elected members of the Advisory Board and represent the interests of the M. E. Church, South, in this movement to place at the command of our constituency excellent materials for up-to-date illustrated lecture work. For terms, etc., address Dr. E. F. Cook, Nashville, Tenn.

The exercise of patience involves a continual practice of the presence of God; for we may be called upon at any moment for an almost heroic display of good temper, and it is a short road to unselfishness, for nothing is left to self; all that seems to belong most intimately to self, to be self's private property, such as time, home and rest are invaded by these continual raids of patience. The family is full of such opportunities.—F. W. Faber.

WESLEYAN EPISCOPACY.

We are surprised that Rev. G. G. Smith, a frequent contributor to the Church press, usually so correct in his positions, and uniformly orthodox in doctrine should go astray in the matter of Methodist Episcopacy.Brother Smith, in common with all Methodists, repudiates the idea of "apostolic succession" as held by Roman Catholics and Episcopalians. He is of the opinion that such a claim is absurd, and adds: "The efforts of some high church Methodists to show a prelacy originating with John Wesley and transmitted by him to America is still more absurd." Brother Smith says further:

"That Mr. Wesley did propose to do this I think no one can justly deny, that if Frances Asbury had acquiesced, we should have had an Episcopacy originating not with the preachers, but with Mr. Wesley, I am sure is true, but Mr. Asbury's firm refusal to accept such a place other than by the choice of his brethren prevented this scheme of Mr. Wesley's and Dr. Coke from being carried out, and while all the power that the Ancient Bishops selected by the Pope or King was given to Mr. Asbury, it was conferred."

We quote the above paragraph as we find it in a recent letter by Brother Smith to the North Carolina Christian Advocate. The latter part of it is somewhat obscure (perhaps misprinted), but the question is not thereby affected.

In reference to Wesleyan Episcopacy, we feel free to say:

First. That Mr. Wesley never intended the introduction of prelacy among Methodists, as prelacy is understood among Roman Catholics and Episcopalians. In those churches, the Bishops, supposed to be in a direct line of succession from the Apostles, presume to possess and exercise functions, never contemplated by Mr. Wesley or the organizers of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1784. In both the Roman Catholic and Episcopal Churches, authority to administer the rite of confirmation inheres in the Bishops. Methodists know nothing of such a rite. Besides, prelacy includes the idea of government by hierarchy, and it is certain that whatever Mr. Wesley intended by the ordination of Dr. Coke and sending him to America, he never intended to fasten a hierarchy on American Methodists. Prelacy, we think is not the term to use in characterizing our Episcopacy.

Second. Mr. Wesley was the father and founder of the Methodist Societies. He felt responsible for their spiritual training. They looked to him for it and expected it. They accorded him also the right to make rules for their government. This right he exercised according to his godly judgment. This right was accorded not only in England but in America where Methodism found a welcome and flourished. At the close of the war of the revolution, the Methodists being without the sacraments, having no ordained preachers, Mr. Wesley "considering the exigency, determined to organize the American Methodists into an independent Episcopal Church." Accordingly, he ordained Dr. Thomas Coke as superintendent and sent him to America, in connection with Richard Whatcoat and Thomas Vasey whom he had ordained elders, "with instructions to organize the societies into a distinct Church and to ordain Asbury joint superintendent with Coke." He furnished these men with "a Sunday service," or liturgy, a collection of psalms and hymns, and also "The Articles of Religion." Armed with these, together with a letter "to the brethren in North America," these three hastened as soon as practicable to the United States. Sixty preachers met them in Lovely Lane Chapel, Baltimore, December 24, 1784. Dr. Coke took the chair by virtue of authority invested in him by Mr. Wesley. Mr. Wesley's letter was read, and without a "dissenting voice," the preachers "agreed to form a Methodist Episcopal Church." The organization included the acceptance of both Dr. Coke and Mr. Asbury as superintendents. There is no word of history to the contrary. Only the fact is made known that Mr. Asbury hesitated until Mr. Wesley's appointment was "ratified" by the preachers. This was wise, and "both he and Coke were formally and unanimously elected superintendents." Nevertheless, it is a fact that the Methodist Episcopal Church was organized by authority of, and under the instructions of Mr. Wesley, who ordained Dr. Coke superintendent or Bishop, and sent him to America to organize the church, which clearly shows that Episcopacy as it exists in American Methodism antedates the organization of the church. To surrender this contention is to invalidate the position of our fathers, who in the General Conference of 1844 maintained that the Episcopacy antedated the organization of the church, was a co-ordinate branch of the church and not the creature of the General Conference, and that those who occupied a place in it could not be deposed without cause. The Northern delegates took the opposite view (and hold it to this day), and insisted that Bishop Andrew should no longer exercise the office, notwithstanding they urged nothing against his moral character, thus virtually deposing him. And the division of the church was the result.

Third. It is rather late to charge Mr. Wesley with an effort to operate a "scheme." Possibly Brother Smith did not intend to be harsh, but his words evidently imply that Mr. Wesley and Dr. Coke conspired to fasten an unwelcome and repulsive Episcopacy upon American Methodists, which conspiracy was thwarted by Mr. Asbury. To say the least, the choice of the word "scheme" is unfortunate, since no more frank or open-minded man ever lived than Mr. Wesley, and since he distinctly repudiated high church Episcopacy, and believed that he was reviving Episcopacy as it existed in the primitive Church. And certainly, though he felt authorized to appoint and ordain Dr. Coke and Mr. Asbury, as the first Methodist superintendents, he could not as a wise man fail to see that their successors must come into office by the suffrages of the independent church. The fact that he left no advice or instruction gives color to this view.

RINGING WORDS.

The Southern Baptists have a theological seminary at Louisville, Ky. Dr. E. Y. Mullins is president. Nobody will accuse him of being ignorant or in anywise a "back number." He seems not to be afraid to speak out when occasion requires. Speaking some time ago—where or to whom, makes no difference—he said: "The Seminary stands for the whole teaching of the Bible as to God, the person of Christ, his atonement, sin, redemption, the Church, baptism and the Lord's Supper, and all the distinctive views held by the Baptist denomination." To many persons these words may sound sectarian. Be it so, the sound is clear and loud. Every man is a sectarian if he accepts the creed of any sect, and is in its fellowship. The difference between Dr. Mullins and some others is this: They are afraid and ashamed to let it be known what they are and what they do; Dr. Mullins is not. Not a few schools are advertised as "denominational, but not sectarian."

PERSONAL.

Rev. O. W. Bradley is closing out his first year at Rosedale and Beulah, Miss. It has been a pleasant and successful year.

Rev. E. W. Lipscomb, Biloxi, Miss., is engaged in revival services this week. Rev. O. S. Lewis, of the Broad Street Church, Hattiesburg, is assisting in the work.

Rev. G. P. Fikes, Walnut Grove, Miss., says: "We are marching slowly, but I hope surely, towards a full report at Conference." May Brother Fikes' hope be realized!

Rev. H. M. Young, Belzona, Miss., favors us with fifteen dollars for new subscriptions and renewals, and says he thinks he "can add more names to the club by the time of Conference." We appreciate this evidence of interest in the Advocate.

Rev. G. D. Purcell, Boyce, La., says: "Boyce charge is closing well this year, in spite of the hard times. We have had good meetings and sixty new names have been added to the church roll. We hope to have a good financial report at Conference."

Rev. D. W. Babb, Verona, Miss., as is his wont, is closing a successful year, and will present a "clean balance sheet" at Conference. We have in hand a good report from him, accompanied by some suggestions, which it would be well for us all to heed.

After an engagement of two weeks at Felicity Street Church with Rev. A. S. Lutz, Rev. W. G. Harbin began a series of meetings with Rev. H. Whitehead at McDonoghville, just across the river from New Orleans. There is every prospect of a gracious revival.

We regret to learn of the sickness of the son—nine years of age—of Rev. and Mrs. H. R. Singleton, by whose bedside the parents have been watching for several days. We trust by this time the disease has been checked and the little fellow well on the way to recovery.

In the list of transfers from the West Texas Conference we read as follows: P. D. Hardin and N. B. Harmon, to the Mississippi Conference; R. E. Duke, to the North Mississippi Conference, and H. M. Whaling, to the Louisiana Conference. These brethren are simply coming back to their old homes.

We thank the author, Rev. H. G. Hawkins, for a copy of the "History of Port Gibson, Mississippi"—reprinted from publications of the Mississippi Historical Society. In this history Port Gibson Female College occupies a conspicuous place. It would be incomplete history without mention of that splendid school. It is a big part of Port Gibson.

We have received this week more communications than usual—long and short, official and otherwise—accompanied by urgent requests to "print this week if possible." We have put all of them in the printer's hand and told him to do his best. If any one fails to appear, the author may know the reason why. Printers' forms cannot be made to stretch.

The Maroon and White is "the official journal of Centenary College, edited and managed by Centenary students, and is one of the best-looking college journals. It bears every mark of young and sprightly minds. We are sorry to learn from its columns that a collar-bone of one of the boys was broken in an early football game with an outside "eleven."

Rev. J. C. Ellis, Galiman, Miss., retains the favor of his people—they are nice to him. On October 19 the people, headed by the pastor of the Baptist Church, "slipped up on the parsonage" immediately after prayer-meeting, and "all were loaded with good things for the preacher and his family." Besides, "there was a large wheelbarrow well loaded." The work has advanced during the year, and Brother Ellis is in good spirits.

A press dispatch was sent out on Tuesday morning last from Wesson, Miss., to the effect that Rev. F. A. Grimes has closed his pastorate at that place, and that "Rev. Hardin" (meaning the Rev. P. D. Hardin, of San Antonio, Tex.) will be transferred to the Mississippi Conference and appointed to Wesson. As a matter of fact, Brother Hardin fills out the remainder of the Conference year in place of Brother Grimes, but it would be a little premature to say that he would be appointed there at the Conference, yet four weeks off.

All that was mortal of our dear Bishop Ward was laid to rest in Glenwood Cemetery, Houston, Tex., Oct. 28, 1909, after an appropriate sermon by Bishop Candler. Many preachers of Houston and vicinity were present to pay honor to the memory of their fallen leader, and multitudes of friends were present to sympathize with the bereaved wife and children. Bishop Ward was a great man. Not only Texas, but the whole church mourns over his early fall. May his mantle fall on the manly son who accompanied the father to Japan, and the only member of his circle of loved ones who looked into his dying eyes and heard his dying words!

Press dispatches went out last week to the effect that Rev. I. D. Borders, of North Mississippi, and pastor of our church at Holly Springs, had been transferred to the Los Angeles Conference and appointed to Holly Wood Church, Los Angeles. A note from Brother Borders confirms the news. We deeply regret to lose Brother Borders from our ranks, but rejoice that California gains a man so true to God and our beloved church. Anything like eulogy we know to be distasteful to our brother, but we cannot refrain from saying that he stands at the very front as a man of intellect and piety. He is a courtly Christian gentleman, prepossessing, and never disappoints those who are attracted to him. He leaves us at the call of duty. May his career be long and useful!

CHURCH EXTENSION.

Dear Brethren: As we near the close of the Conference year, it becomes more apparent that our collections will be far below our pressing need. Already calls that are long and loud and urgent are reaching your Board, and we will have great need for ten times as much money as we will have. Now, brother preachers, please make an earnest effort to raise full collections, so we can at least in part help those who so much need it. I know other parts of our work surely need help, but just now none more so than this. We must help to build a church at Natchitoches, and other places are in great need.

Oh, brethren, if you knew how piteous are some of the calls that come to us, and then see how little prospect there is that any adequate help could be given, you would, at least in some measure, see how important it is that all our assessment, and far more, should be collected. Can we not do it? Will we not do it?

J. D. HARPER.

SOME MISSIONARY STATISTICS.

To the Pastors and Laymen of the Mississippi Conference—

Dear Brethren: Through the kindness of Brother W. L. Linfield, our Conference Treasurer, who has furnished me the figures, I present for your consideration the following comparative statistics as to missionary collections this year and last year up to October 26:

Foreign Missions.

Brookhaven District	$ 619.30	$ 508.00
Jackson District	831.00	405.00
Meridian District	191.25	331.46
Natchez District	243.01	146.39
Newton District	363.75	335.20
Seashore District	776.00	589.38
Vicksburg District	343.00	269.75
Hattiesburg District		457.77
	$3367.31	$3042.95

Domestic Missions.

	1908.	1909.
Brookhaven District	$ 646.05	$ 493.00
Jackson District	373.45	625.85
Meridian District	162.20	284.04
Natchez District	158.75	151.05
Newton District	391.35	317.50
Seashore District	1048.50	814.00
Vicksburg District	436.50	350.35
Hattiesburg District		443.25
	$3216.80	$3479.44

Specials	$ 464.20	$ 425.10

The foregoing is an encouraging showing, and it indicates that if all our pastors and stewards will bestir themselves during the next few weeks our missionary assessments can be raised in full. Taking into consideration, however, the financial conditions that prevail, I feel sure that it is absolutely necessary for each pastor to be extraordinarily diligent in pressing the missionary claim, if we are to avoid having a large deficit on our assessments. Failure is certain to overtake any pastor who gives way to pessimism, and who takes it for granted that the assessments on his charge cannot be raised in full. For several years our Conference Board of Missions has met all its claims, and it is of the utmost importance that at this time, when the call for an advance rings through the Church, we shall not fall behind. Let us make a strong pull and a pull all together to bring about the much-to-be-desired result. "We can do it if we will."

Yours fraternally, M. M. BLACK,
Sec'y Board of Missions, Miss. Conf.

LESSON FOR NOVEMBER 14, 1909.

PAUL A PRISONER IN ROME.

Acts xxviii:11-31.

Golden Text: "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."—Romans i:16.

For three months Paul and the shipwrecked company remained on the island of Melita, or Malta as it is now called, where they were honored with many honors, and as to Paul, it was only rendering honor to whom honor was due. Then they boarded another ship from Alexandria and resumed their voyage toward Rome. The sign, or name of the ship, Castor and Pollux, is probably mentioned in the Scripture to remind the reader of the influence of the mystical worship of those to whom the apostle had come to preach the gospel of Christ.

After sailing some eighty miles almost due north, the ship made its first stop at Syracuse, a large city of southern Sicily, then on to Rhegium, another eighty miles. Then sailing through the Strait of Messina, the scene of the late disastrous earthquake, the course of the ship on towards the north was over the line that marked that subteranean upheaval, beginning near Mt. Etna and losing its force near Mt. Vesuvius. A favorable wind soon brought the ship to the end of her voyage, Puteoli, the port to which ships from the south brought their cargoes of corn. Puteoli was near to where the city of Naples now stands. If the ruler of this great Empire had known who it was that approached his domains, an ambassador of Christ, a minister of the kingdom of God; if he could have appreciated what the entrance of the apostle to his kingdom meant to the condition of his people, he would have welcomed him and escorted him to his capital with the greatest honors at his command. Nero knew not Paul, for they were opposites; in station in life, in the motive of life. Nero was the impersonation of all that would serve to render his subjects miserable, degraded and vicious; he was a monster, he murdered his own mother: Was he not truly anti-Christ? The mystery of iniquity that did already work? The advent of the gospel, as preached by Paul, was opportune: they, the Romans, must listen when told of a life of love and peace, being in despair from a tyranny unbearable. Paul knew to whom he was to preach, and he came among them, the impersonation of faith in God; he, bound in chains, could have no other hope. Some, there were, that knew Paul; a little faithful band. Paul had written a letter to them about three years before. It was of these that came as far as Appi Forum to meet the Apostle, and when Paul saw them, he thanked God and took courage. Perhaps some of the names of those who came to meet him can be found in the last chapter of the Roman Epistle. Rome was reached at last; and the long journey, with all its trials and troubles, at an end.

It saddens the heart to see, with the mind's eye, this little procession, Paul in front, bound with two chains, followed by his loving and sorrowing friends. The time came for parting with the centurian, Julius, who had been so kind to Paul; he may have become a Christian. However that may have been, God gave him reward for the kindness shown his servant. "Whatsoever good thing any man doeth, the same shall he receive of the Lord; whether he be bond or free." When Julius turned his prisoners over to the captain of the guard, he must have told him about Paul, for the apostle was allowed to dwell by himself, though a soldier was always with him as guard.

Paul loved his countrymen, and he always remembered that to them the gospel must first be preached. So, after three days, he called the chief of the Jews together. They came together, not stopping to consider by what authority they were summoned; there was that about Paul that obliged obedience. When they had assembled he addressed them as "Men and brethren," telling them that it was from no fault of his that he was a prisoner at the instigation of the Jews of Jerusalem, and that he was compelled to appeal his case to Rome to save his life. He also assured them that in his defense he had nothing to accuse his nation of. At the very beginning his desire was to set himself right with his own countrymen, saying that it was, "For the hope of Israel that he was bound with this chain." That was enough to enkindle a desire on their part to hear about a sect that was everywhere spoken against. They were concerned in the "Hope of Israel," but their hope was for a worldly deliverance. They looked for a Messiah that would come and deliver, and establish them as a nation. Hoping for an earthly king, and for expecting one, was the cause of their being banished from Rome. It was the Jews that were banished, not the Christians; but the authorities knew not enough to designate one from the other, confounding Judaism with Christianity. So it was that such as Aquilla and Priscilla were sent away.

When a day was appointed, many of the Jews came to Paul's lodging to hear him tell "Of the Hope of Israel," and he took their own law, the law of Moses, and out of it he "expounded and testified the kingdom of God," persuading them concerning Jesus out of that same law, also from the prophets, "from morning till evening." It was then, as it had ever been, when Paul preached to his countrymen, some "believed, and some believed not." After having performed this act of obedience, the giving of the gospel first to the Jews for their acceptance, Paul turned to the Gentiles, for to them he was sent, but consoling himself with the Prophets words: "Thou shalt call a nation that thou knowest not, and nations that knew not thee shalt run unto thee." (Isaiah lv:5.)

For two whole years in his own hired house, Paul received all that came in unto him, preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ with all confidence, no man forbidding him." Thus was the gospel-seed sown in the central city of the then civilized world, so that those that heard could bear the fruits away to every land. Now Paul, through many trials and much tribulation, and many dangers had obeyed the Lord's command, and the Lord was always with him to help him obey.

So it shall be with us, as we try to follow Jesus, surrounded by a godless people, and seemingly alone in the struggle, yet our Lord is always near. We cannot follow him unless by his help, for he said, "Without me, ye can do nothing." He is very near, he hears even our whispered prayers, and he has answered them many times. Let us ask him for great things; let us pray for the outpouring of his Spirit upon places that seem to us "a dry and thirsty land."

Mrs. SARAH D. TANNER (nee Thornton) was born in Smith county, Miss., July 28, 1857, and departed this life Sept. 12, 1909. She was married to B. A. Tanner February, 1878. She joined the M. E. Church, South, in early life and was always faithful to the vows she had taken, and was a member of Fairmount Church for over thirty years, ever taking a lively interest in her church. No woman was ever more faithful in ministering to the sick and needy. She could always find time to see and wait on the sick in her community. She leaves a husband and five sons to mourn their irreparable loss, and these boys are evidence of the fact that they were reared by a Christian mother. Sister Tanner was a true Christian, she was ever ready to praise God under all conditions of life. She filled her place well in all the capacities of life. She was a true wife, a devoted mother, and a faithful church worker. D. C. LANGFORD.

Mrs. EVIE SMITH (nee Armour) was born Oct. 28, 1863, and died Oct. 6, 1909. She was married to Jas. Smith Dec. 22, 1881, and became the mother of three children, two boys and one girl, all grown. Sister Smith was converted in August, 1892, and joined the M. E. Church, South, at Gilbert's Chapel. She leaves, besides three children, a sorrowing husband, two brothers (one of whom is the writer) and one sister to mourn her departure. On Monday, Oct. 4, we had a long distance-telephone message from Holly Springs saying, "Come at once," as it was thought that our sister was dangerously ill. We arrived at her bedside the next morning and found her sinking very fast. But she recognized her baby brother. Oh! how she suffered, but she bore it with Christian fortitude. Wednesday, at 4:39, p. m., the soul took its flight back to the God who gave it. The following day we buried her remains at the Mt. Pleasant Cemetery, Rev. J. M. Huggin reading the burial service. We expect to meet her again on that shore of eternal bliss, and pray that her husband and three children may prepare to meet her where parting is no more. May God console all the mourning relatives and friends by his continuous presence. O. P. ARMOUR.

Brother JOHN W. GODDARD, son of J. H. and M. R. Goddard, was born in Cass county, Ga., Nov. 12, 1868, and passed suddenly away Oct. 14, 1909, Pittsburg, Tenn. He came to Mississippi when a child, and has made it his home ever since. He was married to Miss Ellen Jones Dec. 23, 1894. He leaves a widow and six children, all boys, the oldest of whom is about fourteen. Brother Goddard was converted in 1892 and joined the Campbellite Church, in which he lived till about seven years ago when he joined the M. E. Church, South, and was a true, faithful member to the end. Seven years ago he was elected trustee for the Kossuth charge, and held that office to the time of his death. We are sure that he was ready for the summons. He, in company with Brother R. O. Lemonds, had gone to Pittsburg, Tenn., and soon after their arrival a terrific cyclone struck the town, and he and Brother Lemonds were among the killed. From the hotel where they had gone to secure lodging for the night, their bodies were hurled about 200 yards. When found, life was extinct. His remains was brought back home and after a short funeral service by the writer the W. O. W. took charge of his body and laid it to rest in the Wheeler Cemetery with that beautiful and impressive ceremony used by them. We greatly sympathize with Sister Goddard and her children and commend them to God, who has said, "I will be a Father to the fatherless and a husband to the widow." G. W. GORDON.

Brother R. O. LEMONDS, son of Robt. and Eleanor Lemonds, was born in Henry county, Tenn., near Paris, April 6, 1846; died at Pittsburg, Tenn., Oct. 14, 1909. He had passed his sixty-third birthday. He came to Mississippi in 1872, and was married to Miss Margaret Wheeler March, 1874, near Kossuth, Miss., near which he lived to the time of his death. Three children were born unto them—two daughters and one son—all of whom are still living and deeply mourn their loss. He was soundly converted when a young man and joined the M. E. Church, South. For more than thirty years he was faithful to God and the church he loved so well. He served the church in the capacity of steward and trustee with commendable zeal and great acceptability. At the time of his death he was a trustee. His was a sunny nature, always bright and expecting the best things to come to pass. He has three sisters living, one in Henry county, Tenn., and two in Alcorn county, Miss., near Kossuth. He was a law-abiding citizen, a good neighbor, kind husband and father, and loyal to his church. He often expressed himself as being ready to depart when the Lord should see fit to call him. He loved his pastor and was not stinted in his support and the support of the different enterprises of the church. When the summons came he was away from home. He had gone to Pittsburg, Tenn., and reached there only a few minutes before the fatal moment came. He, in company with Brother J. W. Goddard, of Kossuth, Miss., walked into the hotel to arrange for lodging for that night and all at once the cyclone was upon them in all its fury. A few moments later their bodies were found about 200 yards from the hotel, whither the angry winds had hurled them. But their immortal spirits had fled. They were brought back home, and on Saturday the 16th their bodies were laid to rest in the Wheeler Cemetery, only a few hundred yards from the home of Brother Lemonds. A large concourse of people gathered to witness the burial and mingle their tears with and offer their sympathy to the bereaved ones. The funeral services were conducted by the writer, and after the interment the mound of earth was literally covered with beautiful flowers. Our heart overflows with sympathy for the children! God bless them. Bereaved ones, look up; there will be a reunion after awhile that will last forever.

G. W. GORDON.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Since it has pleased our Father above to take from our midst one who as mother, wife, friend, Christian, furnished unsurpassed example to those about her, we, the members of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of First Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Baton Rouge, La., do hereby Resolve, first, That in losing Mrs. T. S. Sligh our auxiliary has lost one whose untiring work and constant faith in Christ may be found in some other, but in none other will they be found in greater measure.

Resolved, second, That in her death not only has our local church cause to feel that one of her most consecrated workers has left us, but Louisiana Methodism, too, has cause to mourn one who as teacher has moulded the characters of hundreds of our young women.

Resolved, third, That it is our belief that when God took her he only called to her "Come up higher."

Resolved, fourth, That to the stricken husband and children, to the numerous religious and moral works which felt her strong helping hand, we tender our deep sympathy. God does all things well.

FROM BENTON, LA.

Mr. Editor: Since my vacation on the coast of Mississippi for two months during the heated term, my general condition has so improved that I am in better shape than for many seasons past. But this favorable condition is offset by the gradual shortening and clouding of my line of vision. We failed to call at the Advocate office on our return from the coast on account of rain.

The interests of the church, notwithstanding the pulpits were closed for two months, have grown on all lines except the financial line. On this line the indications are that this part of the work will he behind last year. There are reasons for this, and to those who understand the conditions we will make a good report.

9. An original sermon on the subject of Repentance.

In addition to the above, each applicant will be asked to hand in a sample certificate of church membership.

D. SCARBOROUGH,
Chairman of Committee.

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property-holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property-holders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically not outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co., for a detailed explanation.

FREE DEAFNESS CURE.

LAMAR, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Will you allow me enough space to say that we are closing a good year on the Holly Springs Circuit.

We had a good meeting, being ably assisted by Revs. Broom, J. H. Mitchell, Rogers, and Gray, all good men and truly gospel preachers. While the ingathering of souls was not as great as might have been, yet we are sure that a great deal of good was done in strengthening the church, and praise God for saving some souls.

The parsonage has been repaired and some furniture added. The church house at Early Grove has been repaired. Money has been raised to paint and paper church at Lamar. New hymn-books purchased at Harris' Chapel, Sylvestria and Mt. Hope, and the circulation of church literature has been increased. Still we see many other things needed and look forward to greater achievements in the name of the Master.

Much kindness has been shown the pastor and wife during the year, all of which we gratefully acknowledge. We hear of some preachers being pounded occasionally. We have been pounded this year continually. Surely, there is not a more loyal people anywhere, than are these—educated, refined, religious.

The health of our people has been remarkably good, and notwithstanding the fact that crops are short, they manifest unusual interest in the finances of the church, and we are confident of going to Conference with all claims paid. A. G. HALL, P. C.

A Doctor in the Family.

Royaline Oil, made by the Royaline Medicine Co., of New Orleans, La., answers so many useful purposes in the home that it is even spoken of as being like a doctor in the family. Its timely use saves, not only much suffering and time, but also physicians' bills. Cuts, aches, inflammations, swellings or any other soreness can be quickly alleviated by the application of Royaline Oil, the great antiseptic. Price 25c. a bottle. At your druggist.

REV. K. W. DODSON.

At a meeting of the Protestant Ministers of the town of Mansfield, La., called by its chairman the following resolutions were adopted:

First—The Protestant Minister's Association of the town of Mansfield hereby place on record their keen regret at the departure from our town of our brother, the Methodist preacher, Rev. K. W. Dodson. The Rev. Mr. Dodson has done valiant service for Christ and his kingdom during the four years he has labored among us.

Second—Our relationship with each other has been very tender and sweet. Our Association feels itself under a peculiar debt of gratitude to our brother. Feeling that always he has been among the foremost among us in the labors of our Minister's Association.

Third—We shall miss him greatly; we feel his place will be hard to fill.

Fourth—In bidding him farewell, we can but congratulate the new field of labor to which he will go to. Our loss is their gain.

Fifth—In voicing our appreciation of our much-loved fellow-worker and brother, we also add the assurance of our prayers in his behalf and the earnest hope that he and his family may be blessed in his new sphere of labor.

Chairman, REV. CHAS. THORP, B. O., Pastor Protestant Episcopal Church.
Secretary, D. F. OSTEN, JR., Pastor First Presbyterian Church.

Banish Catarrh,

Hyomei Will Cure You or Nothing to Pay.

When you make up your mind to get rid of disgusting Catarrh, follow this advice:

Go to your druggist; ask him for HYOMEI Outfit (pronounce it High-o-me). This outfit consists of a bottle of HYOMEI (liquid), a hard rubber pocket inhaler, a medicine dropper, and full instructions for use. Pour a few drops into the inhaler, and breath it in a few minutes each day, according to directions.

HYOMEI cures Catarrh because it reaches every nook, corner, and crevice of the membrane of the nose, throat, and bronchial tubes, and kills the germs of Catarrh. Stomach dosing, sprays, douches, and ointments don't kill the germs, because they don't get where the germs are. HYOMEI will cure Catarrh. It is guaranteed, as the publisher of this paper knows, to cure Catarrh, Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, and Bronchitis, or money back. Refuse substitutes. If your druggist does not sell it, we will send you a complete outfit, charges prepaid, for $1. Sample botttle mailed free upon request. Address, Booth's HYOMEI CO., Dept., —, Buffalo, N. Y.

LAYMEN'S MISSIONARY MOVEMENT.

To the Presiding Elders. Preachers and Laymen of the M. E. Church, South—

Dear Brethren: The Laymen's Missionary Movement has planned a national campaign of education, designed to cover the entire territory of the United States. Meetings will be held in 70 or more cities, where men of all church affiliations will be asked to meet and discuss the evangelization of the world in this generation. The meetings will continue until May, 1910, at which time a great meeting of representative men from all parts of the United States will convene at Chicago, Ill., to adopt an adequate national policy to enable the United States to do her share in world evangelization. Canada has already adopted such a policy at a meeting attended by over 4000 men from all parts of the Dominion. Forty or more of the Mission Boards of the United States have endorsed this campaign. The programme provides for a denominational rally on the last morning of each convention, at which time the men of each communion will assemble separately to agree upon the best way to utilize the interest and enthusiasm aroused in doing the share of the work assigned to their denomination, and to plan how to enlist every church and every man in the work.

We believe that your attendance upon these meetings will mean much for the kingdom of Christ among men, and that the arousing of interest in world-wide missions will result in a quickening of the church at home in every department. We, therefore, urge you to have a part in this effort to arouse our nation to a sense of its duty and opportunity:

First—By praying daily for the leadership of the Holy Spirit in the enterprise.

Second—By observing November 14, 1909, as a day of prayer for the success of the campaign, and by holding Laymen's Meetings on that day, wherever possible, in all of our churches.

Third—By keeping your people informed as to the progress of the work, using private conversations, the press and the pulpit, to give the largest possible publicity to the campaign.

Fourth—By attending one or more of the meetings, if possible, even at a sacrifice.

Fifth—By co-operating in the adoption of a workable plan for an every-member canvass of every church in your Conference, thus giving to all an opportunity to share in preaching the gospel to every creature in this generation.

PORT GIBSON, MISS

Dear Dr. Boswell: I rejoice to report that our church here has recently been blessed with a gracious revival which resulted in a goodly number of conversions and reclamations, and in a great uplift to the spiritual life of the membership. Eight persons were added to our church on profession of faith, four of them being heads of families. Two joined the Presbyterian Church, and two the Baptist Church—all on profession. The pastors of the two churches just mentioned co-operated heartily with us, and the fraternal spirit manifested by them was delightful indeed. Considering the fact that there was a sweeping revival in this charge last fall, conducted by Brother Harbin, during which most of the available material was brought into the church, the results this year are especially gratifying. We were exceedingly fortunate in having with us for ten days, Brother T. H. Dorsey, of West Point, Miss., whose able, eloquent, and heart searching sermons have left an abiding impress for good upon this community. Our people were charmed with him

Our Sunday School is one of the best organized and best conducted in the Mississippi Conference, Brother H. H. Crisler being a model superintendent. Exclusive of the cradle roll and home department, the enrollment is 140, with an average attendance of ninety. Our school will raise about $100 this year for missions, this amount being applied to the support of Miss Nell Drake, and hence is in excess of the regular assessment. There is also a fine Sunday School at the college. The W. H. M. Society and the W. F. M. Society are both in a flourishing condition, and I feel sure that no societies in our Conference are doing better work in proportion to the number of members than the Port Gibson auxiliaries. The pastor finds in the good women of these societies a noble band of helpers. The Junior League and the Senior League have in them a splendid lot of young people who are commendably loyal to the League and to the church. A mission study class, numbering ten, has just been organized among the Seniors.

Altogether we have received since Conference twenty-eight members, sixteen by certificate and fourteen on profession. Unfortunately, however, we have lost fully as many by removal, some of them being among our most valuable workers. While the boll weevil has done immense damage in this section, and times were never more stringent since the Civil War, our members are coming up nobly with their contributions, and we expect to pay all assessments in full. Port Gibson Methodists are among the most loyal and liberal to be found in Southern Methodism.

THOSE WHO HAVE BORNE THE BURDEN.

Galatians vi:17; Philemon 9.

"Henceforth let no man trouble me; for I bear branded on my body the marks of Jesus." Thus wrote Paul. "The marks of Jesus" were the scars and other outward signs of the beatings, stonings and other persecutions and sufferings which he had borne in prosecuting the work and upholding the cause of Christ. It was not at all inappropriate to call them "marks of Jesus," alluding to the custom then current of branding slaves with marks indicating their owners, as cattle and horses are still branded in Texas. He presents these as proofs of his discipleship and of his fidelity, throwing down the challenge: "Henceforth let no man trouble me," by demanding further proof or other evidence.

Age and feebleness resulting from overwork and these sufferings brought a natural longing for rest. The wranglings over trifles in the Galatian Church were very distasteful to him, so he begs them to let him have the rest he had so truly earned.

In his Epistle to Philemon, he speaks of himself as "Paul the aged," and claims consideration because of his age and the sufferings he had borne and was still bearing—"now a prisoner also of Christ."

With these passages as texts, our Brother, J. R. Stewart, says:

"That those who have borne the burden and heat of the day in our great Church hold a warm, not to say almost sacred place in the affections of our people, is a proposition not to be called in question for an instant. That as a class they have received from the Methodist public the material aid which was their just and rightful need, cannot be safely asserted. Their silent and appealing claims are founded on unselfish service already rendered. Their work has been accomplished, and a debt of lasting gratitude has been imposed on the people whom they have lovingly served. To live and die in the affectionate esteem of those for whom they gave a life-service is their greatest reward, save only the "Well done, good and faithful servant," of their Lord.

"The temporal remunerations for work done and burdens borne are far below those accorded in various other vocations requiring similar ability. It may be fairly assumed that no one becomes a Methodist itinerant preacher from hope or prospect of worldly gain. Should one do so, he would not only be chargeable with a flagrantly wicked spirit, but would also be assigned a place among the feeble-minded. It is equally disappointing to seek the praise of men and the honors which come only from the world in this calling, a prominent grace of which is humility.

"As long as it remains true that only slightly over $131 is paid annually to the superannuate family, something more than has yet been done is greatly needed.

"When it is possible for the widow of an honored deceased minister to be compelled by sheer necessity to hire herself as a cook in order to provide sustenance for herself and children, something more needs to be done.

"As long as it occurs that a veteran itinerant and his wife feel compelled to subsist for eleven days on $1.67, something more is needed.

"When a worn-out preacher who loves his Church and is anxious to read of her glorious triumphs cannot spare $1 per year from his little allowance to take a religious paper, something is greatly needed for him and all in similar conditions."

Suggestion: One penny a month from all the Epworth Leaguers would in time help this cause greatly.

Bodi-Tone

The Bodi-Tone Company

wants you to try a full-sized one dollar box of Bodi-Tone at its risk and expense, so that you will get acquainted with this new scientific medicinal combination, which is going to become the foremost medicine used by the American People. We want you to send us the Bodi-Tone Coupon, giving us your full name and address, and the one dollar box of Bodi-Tone will be sent to you by next post, without a penny for you to pay unless it TONES ALL YOUR BODY.

Bodi-Tone

is just what its name means—A TONE FOR ALL THE BODY and we want you to try it and see what it will do for YOUR body. Bodi-Tone is a little round tablet that is taken three times every day. Each $1.00 box contains seventy-five Bodi-Tones, enough for twenty-five days continuous use, and we send you the full box without a penny in advance, so that you can try it and learn what it is, so you can learn how easy and simple it is to take, so you can learn how it works in the body, how it helps nature to tone every organ in the body.

Bodi-Tone

is a new remedy, but the ingredients which compose it are as old as the science of medicine itself. Its composition is not secret. Every one of the twelve valuable ingredients which go to make up Bodi-Tone are well known to all doctors of all schools; each one has a well defined, well known and thoroughly established place in the realm of medicine and is prescribed by physicians every day in the year. Among the ingredients which compose Bodi-Tone are Iron, for the Blood, Phosphate to help tone the Nerves, Lithia for the Kidneys, Gentian for the Stomach, Chinese Rhubarb for the Liver, Cascara, which restores tone to the Bowels and Intestines, and Peruvian Bark for the General System. We claim no credit for these ingredients, each of which has its own well-deserved place in the Materia Medicas of all the civilized world and are recommended by all modern medical writers and teachers—we simply claim credit for the manner in which they are combined, for the proportions used, for the remedy—Bodi-Tone, which they make and which we want to send you immediately, as soon as you write for it, so you can try it and learn how it acts.

Bodi-Tone

is no new-fangled, secret, mysterious, "discovered by accident," Egyptian, Indian, Chinese, Shaker or Quaker remedy. It depends upon no superstition or romantic story to make people believe in its efficacy. It is the scientific prescription of well known and competent doctors and chemists, and is compounded in one of the largest and best known pharmaceutical laboratories in the United States. It was conceived with the purpose, which we announce to all the world, to give the people a pure and safe household and home medicine, one that has medical authority behind it, one that doctors could sanction and approve, one whose composition could be boldly proclaimed and being all this, it is destined to become the foremost proprietary medicine of the century, a genuine pure food and drug medicine.

Bodi-Tone

though a scientific medicinal combination, is prepared from such remedies which the common people as well as the doctors KNOW TO BE GOOD, which they can place confidence in, which they know they can safely use, and most of all, is composed of things which make it a GOOD REMEDY. It is right all through, from the first to the twelfth ingredient, a remedy that knows its work in the body and does it in a way that satisfies the body-owner. It is a pure remedy that all the family, young and old can use. It contains no poisonous drugs, it contains no harmful drugs, it contains nothing that we are ashamed to tell all the world, it contains no ingredient that your own family doctor will not endorse and say is a good thing. It does not depend on drugging the body. It does not kill pain with opium or morphine. It does not excite the body with alcohol, but it tones the body with the remedies nature intended to tone the body, or that power would not have been given to them.

Bodi-Tone

offers its valuable services to you right now, right from this page, if you are sick, if you need medicinal help, if your body is not in right, natural and normal tone. That is what Bodi-Tone is for—TO HELP NATURE RESTORE TONE TO THE BODY, to help nature restore normal health, energy, vigor, strength and weight. If there is anything wrong with your Kidneys, Bodi-Tone helps to restore tone to the Kidneys, helps to set them right. If there is anything wrong with your Stomach, Bodi-Tone helps to tone the Stomach, helps to set the wrong right. If there is anything wrong with your Blood, your Liver, your Bowels or your General System, the ingredients in Bodi-Tone, which are endowed by nature with a special action in these parts, go right to work and keep on working day after day, exerting always a well understood, definite action that produces general results of the kind sufferers appreciate. If you have Rheumatism, Bodi-Tone, a splendid eliminant, helps to eliminate the Uric Acid from the system while it restores tone to the Kidneys, Stomach and Blood, thereby exerting a continual anti-rheumatic effect which makes it hard for rheumatism to obtain or retain a foothold in the system. Bodi-Tone should be used by all women suffering from any of the various Female Ailments, for its toning properties are especially valuable in such ailments.

Bodi-Tone

is especially urged for all chronic sufferers who have tried honest, reputable physicians at home and elsewhere without getting the relief and permanent benefit desired. If your local doctor is doing you no real good, if you have given him a real and honest chance to do what he can and the medical combinations he has used have failed, then give THIS SCIENTIFIC, MODERN COMBINATION of old-time remedies a chance to show what it can do for you.

A Trial of Bodi-Tone

is yours for the asking. You need not send any money—do not send any stamps. The Bodi-Tone Company wants to spend every penny of the trial's cost, wants to send the medicine to you, wants you to give it a trial for a full period of twenty-five days before you pay one single penny. Simply fill out the Bodi-Tone Coupon, mail it to the Bodi-Tone Company, Chicago, and let Bodi-Tone do its work for you.

Dr. J. W. Blosser, whose likeness appears above, is well-known throughout the country because of his remarkable success in the treatment of catarrh, deafness, bronchitis and asthma.

He has discovered a method of treating these diseases which is different from all others, both in method and effect. It is not a spray or atomizer; douche, salve, cream nor inhaler. It "opens up" and cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs, then stops the nasal discharge and spitting, and permanently heals the diseased membranes.

Any sufferer may have a demonstration of what this remedy will do by sending name and address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., who will send a five days' treatment and an illustrated booklet, absolutely free. Those who have availed themselves of this free offer have been surprised at the pleasing and wonderful effect of the remedy. The full treatment is not expensive.

WOMEN IN THE ARCTIC REGIONS.

It is strange the fascination that the Northland exerts on men and women, says Frances R. Sterret in The Housekeeper for October, in an article which is of particular interest in view of the discovery of the North Pole. The early boats are crowded with those who have been out for the winter and are hurrying back, called by that imperative voice of the Arctic. A smartly dressed woman, whose eyes held a new light every time Dawson was mentioned, was the wife of a man who had made his hundreds of thousands in the Klondike. They had spent the winter at the Waldorf Astoria and yet she was glad to get home. And what was home? Only a cabin, again, a one-room cabin on the side of the mountain, a dozen miles from Dawson. Why did she want to get back, away from friends, music, lectures, when they had ample money to live luxuriously outside? She only smiled at the question and shook her head as though she could not explain to one who did not know. "I've got to get back, that's all!" she said simply.

"I've given up a house with four bathrooms to come to a country that hasn't a house with a tub in it," laughed another Arctic housekeeper. "If you want to take a proper bath in even Nome or Dawson, you will have to go to the bathhouse to do it. Winters are too long and too cold to bother with plumbing in the cabins."

The towns are all camps, the houses all cabins in the North, but in these days of telephones and electric lights there are few hardships even on the creeks. Dawson is a Canadian camp with its cheery afternoon tea, its tennis and cricket, while Nome is distinctively American with a woman's club, the Kogoayah Kozga, which has its own club house. As for dinners and luncheons you would never believe what elaborate meals the women can serve in their small kitchens and all from cans.

The cabins are tiny affairs, one, two, seldom more than three rooms, but from these band-boxes the women appear in smart afternoon gowns or fiimy evening frocks. A fur parki drawn over the white satin and the felt shoes given a strangely incongruous touch, but one quite in keeping with the dog-sled waiting to convey my lady to her party.

Faith in God gives faith in the divine laws as the regular method by which truth and goodness are to prevail. As the world acquires more faith in the supremacy and universality of law, it also comes to believe more in progress.—James Freeman Clarke.

"If you are an invalid, do your best to get well; but, if you must remain an invalid, still strive for th unselfishness and serenity which are the best possessions of health. There are no sublimer victories than some that are won on sickbeds."—P. Gerhardt.

THE CENTURY IN 1910.

The Century Magazine is to publish serially Miss May Sinclair's new novel, the first chapters in the November issue. This latest work, by the author of "The Divine Fire," is a story of artists and writers in London, and will be published under title of "The Creators: A Comedy." Mr. Robert Hichens and Mr. Jules Guerin have been traveling and working in Palestine, and the harvest of their journeyings and study will be an illustrated series of articles on "The Holy Land," its monuments and scenery, which Te Century will publish during 1910. Mr. Guerin's paintings will be reproduced in full color.

The more our spirits live by communion with God will the sense of His munion with God, the more will the sense of His Love drive out every fear and murmur, and we shall know no will but His. Patient endurance under suffering is made possible, easy, even blessed, by the assured consciousness of the Father's Love.—Rev. A. H. Blunt.

If good people would but make their goodness agreeable, and smile instead of frowning in their virtue, how many would they win to the good cause!—Archbishop Usher.

HOME REMEDY

Mrs. Temple Clark suffered for years, before she found relief in that popular, successful woman's medicine, Wine of Cardui.

Mrs. Clark, who lives in Timberville, Miss., writes: "Cardui has been worth more to me than a carload of silver. If it had not been for Cardui, I would have been dead. I love a dollar, but I have never seen one that I do not think as much of, as I do of a bottle of Cardui. I now keep it in my house, as regularly as I do coal oil or coffee, and have done so for years.

"Some years ago I jumped off a horse and had a mishap, and for about four years after that I suffered intense agony. At last I was induced to try Cardui, which cured me, and now I am well and happy.

"I am sure Cardui will cure other sick ladies as it has me."

Cardui is for women. It acts specifically and in a natural manner on the womanly system and has been found to relieve pain and to restore woman's health.

If you are nervous, miserable, or suffering from any form of female trouble, try Cardui. What it has done for other sick ladies it surely can do for you. Sold by all first class druggists, with full directions for use.

THE NEW CHURCH AT BLUE MOUNTAIN, MISS.

It is a credit to the pastor, Rev. J. H. Bass, and the heroic little band of Methodists who built it. Considering that Blue Mountain was pre-empted by the Baptists, and the seat of the Blue Mountain Girls' College, a large Baptist institution, and that Methodists have been on the ground less than a year, the building of the house and the gathering of a membership of respectable numbers, are matters of wonder, as well as surprise. Nobody can blame us for putting the picture of the "little gem" on the front page of the Advocate.

Glances at the World.

The greatest mangling machines of the age are automobiles. They are innocent in themselves, but in the hands of reckless and conscienceless drivers they are perfect monsters. We have been expecting to hear of some man, with road-rights equal to the auto-driver, to rise up, and at the muzzle of a gun, protect himself. We heard of him last week. He lives in Virginia. He met an auto, the driver of which paid no attention to his frightened horse. Drawing his pistol, or rather raising it, for it was not concealed, he leveled it on the driver and stopped him. He then forced the fellow to take his horse by the bit and lead him around the machine. It will come to that, in many more places, if persons who take "joy-rides" continue to disregard the rights of others. There seems to be no other way. The reckless ones drive fast and get out of reach, and if caught and fined, it amounts to nothing, as the owner of the car, and not the driver, pays the fine. The papers every day give accounts of persons meeting a horrible death under the wheels of these heavy, fast-flying machines. Last week, down in Georgia, a man was run down by a car going at a terrific speed. He was run over by another car following closely, and he was run over by a third car going slowly, driven by his own wife, who had started to meet him. And the worst feature of the tragedy was, neither of the drivers of the two first cars which ran over and mangled the unfortunate man, stopped to render him any assistance. This was but little short of murder.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North), is a large body of enthusiastic workers, and year after year pay much money into the treasury. They are not afraid to adopt schemes, all perfectly legitimate, for raising revenue. A year ago in their annual session, they "agreed to contribute ten dollars for the cause of missions for each baby born to them." It did not seem to occur to them that it was possible for them to become the mothers of twins and triplets, and in such event, the agreement would be rather costly, so they made no arrangement to meet such a contingency. But the unprovided-for thing happened. Two of the good women during the year were blessed with triplets. When the annual session rolled around, these good women asked for wholesale rates. No concession however was granted. When the ruling was announced, the mothers—honest women they are, "proudly went down to the desk of the cashier and paid their thirty dollars each, a crisp new ten-dollar note for each of the triplets." Whether the Society modified the agreement so as to give relief in the future, is not stated. It is the custom for some folks down South to follow the example of people up North. It is particularly noticeable among the so-called progressives—the up-to-date men and women; and we have been wondering whether or not our Southern sisters will lay an assessment on babies, and if so, will they be more generous than their Northern prototypes when they present their happy spouses with three at a time.

Some time since, Lady Frances Cook, of England, we believed, arrived in this country. Mrs. Cook is what is now called "a militant suffragette"—that is, a woman fighter for the ballott. She is a rich woman as her title would indicate, and evidently devoted to the cause she has espoused. Upon her arrival she announced that she had "one million dollars to spend for woman suffrage." In less than a week she said she was sorry she had made the announcement. And well she may be sorry, as nearly one hundred persons from all sections of the country, have in one way or another made application to help spend the money. She has been literally "flooded with demands, offers and suggestions," and we suppose the end is not yet. Lady Cook did not know how many wise, energetic, enterprising and accommodating people there are in this country. She is learning. Judging from accounts, it would seem that the good lady could spend her money to a better advantage in her own land where her comrades so frequently get into trouble with the authorities. Our women are not in sympathy with the militant movement—are not ready to use broom-sticks and hat pins, to attack officers, to smash windows, and burn ballots with hot acids. They are in dead earnest, but law-abiding. Lady Cook, with her money, could at least pay the fines of her fellow-sufferers, if she could not prevail upon them to lead peaceable lives.

Boy corn-clubs are being formed in many parts of the country. The object is to encourage the boys, by premiums for the best crops, to raise corn, and incidentally to imbibe a love for farming. The success many of them attain is amazing. We have seen notices of boys in Mississippi who have succeeded in raising from seventy-five to one hundred bushels of corn per acre, and of one boy who gathered considerably over one hundred bushels. But the following from the Arcadia (La.) News, in reference to one boy who had no offer of a premium is ahead of anything we have read. The News says: "Arcadia lays claim, and justly, too, to an exception of a boy, Master Tom Wemple, by name. Tommy attended the Arcadia High School regularly during the last term, always coming up with good lessons and besides this cultivated a crop of corn and cotton, about one and a half acre of corn and four acres to cotton, doing the work after school hours and on Saturdays. From the land he had in corn he has gathered seventy-five bushels and has realized from his cotton crop, counting the seed, the neat sum of $141. Putting the corn at seventy-five cents per bushel, and it is worth it, would make a total of $216. Now, if this isn't successful farming, and that by a boy yet in his knee pants, we confess we do not know what successful farming is." How many boys who read this will imitate Tommy Wemple's example next year?

Matters do not quiet in France. The agitation rather increases. The Roman Catholics seem determined not to submit to the State regulations in regard to the schools. The Church authorities have declared war on the public institutions of learning. A general election is close at hand and the Bishops are endeavoring to concentrate and direct the vote against the schools. The Bishops have "publicly forbidden Roman Catholic parents to send their children to public schools if Catholic schools are available and parents are everywhere urged to refuse to allow their children to use the interdicted text-books." Other notes from Paris say that "considerable demoralization of the schools has been caused already. The Minister of Public Instruction, has ordered an investigation of the situation which will probably determine the government's ultimate attitude. The decision of the Teachers' Association, comprising 100,000 members, to test in the courts the Church's right to interfere with the public schools will be followed by damage suits instituted by the authors of the interdicted text-books. The archbishop of Rennes, in a statement just issued, declares that Catholic voters must rally to the protection of the Church. The catechism is being revised for the purpose of teaching that it is a religious duty to vote for the candidate who is pledged to defend Church interests." In France and everywhere Roman Catholics are in opposition to public schools—to the whole system of State education. Can anybody tell why?

If anything is better adapted to stir the blood of law-abiding men, it is the way conscienceless liquor dealers—some of them passing for honorable gentlemen, evade and nullify the prohibition laws of the land. Granting the honesty of the men—their purity of motive—who passed and protect the inter-state commerce laws, it is nevertheless a fact that Federal authorities help to make the law a farce, and work in the interest of the law-breakers. The Presbyterian of the South, cites the following as an illustration: "Chattanooga is on the border between Georgia and Tennessee. Both States have prohibited the sale of liquors as a beverage. But the sale is going on, none the less, at this point under the patronage of inter-state commerce. The dealer in Chattanooga sells his liquors to some one who is to receive them at Chickamauga, or some other point just a few miles across the Georgia line. It is then inter-state commerce and the officials of Georgia, under the decision of the United States courts are powerless to restrain it. Then the recipient takes the same liquors and carries them back to the real purchasers in Chattanooga. Under this color of law, prohibition is nullified." It does seem that any man who has the least respect for law would be disgusted at such proceedings in the name of law. Even Mr. Cannon, the Speaker of the House, as much as he is opposed to prohibition, should take notice of the manner in which the people are imposed upon by liquor dealers. And for the Federal Government to issue a tax-receipt for $25, which is virtually a Federal license to sell liquor, in prohibition territory, is an imposition and an outrage. Will not our Congressmen and Senators give us relief?

Another millionaire banker has passed to his reward. He left behind monuments to his memory in the shape of large gifts to religious, charitable and educational institutions. Being a Presbyterian—after the Scotch Order—that Church naturally came in for the largest benefactions. The name of this remarkable man—little known to the outside world—was John Stewart Kennedy, of New York. He died the last Sunday in October. His will, probated a few days later, revealed the fact that he had, after leaving an immense fortune to his wife, bequeathed to various persons and interests about $25,000,000. The Presbyterian Church in the United States, (Northern, we suppose), shares to the extent of $10,830,000. And large sums went to Presbyterian institutions in foreign lands. Besides this, before his death, he had given to that Church $1,400,000. Many institutions were largely benefited. As usual, schools in the South were overlooked. Only three below Mason and Dixon's line were remembered, two in Kentucky, Centre and Berea, and the Tuskegee Institute (Booker Washington's school) in Alabama, the latter receiving $100,000, while the others received only $75,000 between them. It becomes more and more apparent that while Northern schools are amply provided for by rich men—Columbia University, for instance, which Mr. Kennedy gave $2,500,000, the schools in the South, if they ever reach large endowments, must look to the small gifts of the many poor, or barely well-to-do men of the home land. Not until the South is radically changed under the stimulus of Mr. Carnegie's and Mr. Rockefeller's money will it ever benefit by the benefactions of Northern rich men. That radical change, possibly dreamed of by some, is so far in the future that the child born to-day will die without seeing it.

"A NEEDED LEGISLATION."

Under the above caption, in the Advocate of Nov. 4, Brother H. P. Lewis, Jr., has an article which doubtless is very convincing to the minds of those who think as he does; but to those who (fortunately or unfortunately) disagree with him, he has not made himself so clear.

At the very beginning of my article I wish to say that I am not presuming to defend the use of tobacco by ministers, but I do wish to enter my protest against the church enacting any law that will limit the personal conscience: and when the church presumes to "prohibit the use of tobacco by the ministers of our church" (Brother Lewis uses those words), then the church arrogates to itself the right to be custodian of the ministerial conscience. And what next may we expect? Nothing less than that the church should "prohibit" our laymen from using tobacco. Then what? When the church has thus far aped Rome in its arrogant assumption of power, we may expect the church to dictate as to our diet and our apparel, and the logical result (if carried to ultimate conclusion) would be that we would become a lot of long-faced, unshorn Nazarites, living, like John the Baptist, on "locusts and wild honey," clad in "camel's hair, and a leathern girdle" about our loins.

Brother Lewis strains at a few gnats and swallows a whole caravan of camels. He points with criticism to the argument sometimes used that "Bishop —— and Rev. ——" use tobacco, but he says nothing about the almost universal use of coffee and the very popular habit of gum-chewing. (I suppose that drinking coffee and chewing gum are habits that "edify," or possibly they may be too popular to censure.)

Is this mere vaporing? Let us see. It will not be necessary to appoint a committee of scientific men in order to ascertain that there are more "coffee livers" than there are "tobacco hearts," and yet not a word does Brother Lewis say about the church "prohibiting" its ministers or members from drinking coffee. Then, too, I have known where ministers were subjected to criticism and even ridicule, because, forsooth, they chose to dress as other men. Will the church "prohibit" the ministry from wearing the sack coat? Is a preacher's brain power to be measured by the length of his coat-tail?

Besides this, I have known some non-tobacco users to make prayers of such extraordinary length that complaint was made as to their "everlasting prayers." Will the church prescribe how any one shall pray? Will it "prohibit" pious worshipers holding extended communion with God?

Does Brother Lewis, or any one else, say that I am not discussing the question at issue? I contend that I am, for the question is not so much as to the use of tobacco, as it is whether or not the church must become the custodian of personal conscience. The closing paragraph of the article by Brother Lewis reveals this concept. He says: "I suggest to both preachers and laymen that we elect as delegates to our General Conference men whom we know to be free from this habit (tobacco), and who will feel at perfect liberty to give their strongest support to a movement that will prevent its use by ministers."

It is mighty close to General Conference to be talking that way; it sounds as if the words might have political significance. But if this is not meant, then what other conclusion can we draw than that Brother Lewis would have the church disfranchise every tobacco-using preacher until he toadied to a standard erected by men whose prejudices out-reached their judgment? Will the church "prohibit" the use of phrases having political significance? Will it "prohibit" the parading of pet theories? Will it subdue conscience and throttle speech?

Some men get satisfaction by putting in the mouths of other men the argument that "Bishop —— and Rev. ——, D.D., LL. D.," et al., use tobacco, but if they will survey the field without prejudice, they will find "blanks" elsewhere than in the ranks of that class of men they would politically ostracise by General Conference action.

The church needs the wisdom of all her sons, whether they use tobacco or not. We have had too much vaporing already, and now that great questions of polity must be considered by the ensuing General Conference, let us not be drawn aside by any form of fanaticism. If it is in the power of the church to legislate more common sense into our heads and more Christian charity into our hearts, then I hope and pray that our delegates to the General Conference may hasten such "a needed legislation."

A FRIENDLY LETTER.

Dear Brother Boswell: I have just finished reading the Advocate (New Orleans), last issue, 4th inst. It would be difficult—impossible—for me to express the feelings of my heart at this hour. A postal from one of Brother C. A. Powell's daughters this morning, dated Thursday (this week), caused sadness of heart. Brother Powell is not doing well. As you doubtless know, he has been quite sick for some time. His family, knowing the strong friendship existing between Brother Powell and myself for many years, have kindly kept me posted as to his condition; have received quite a number of letters and postal cards from his daughters during his sickness. No man has ever gotten a stronger hold upon my confidence and affection than Brother Powell. All things considered, I have never seen his like. I know of no virtue that he does not possess. His life has been an inspiration to me; have known him intimately for about a quarter of a century; I find no fault in him; "true as steel," anywhere, any time, under any and all circumstances and conditions. I really believe that Brother Powell is incapable of an act unbecoming in a gentleman and a Christian. Although his condition is serious, I can but hope to see him again in the flesh; but should it be otherwise, I expect to meet him by and by. I enjoy the blessed hope of a reunion with my brethren "after awhile." These are a few of them that have gone on before: Little, Callaway, Andrews, Penn, Adams, Chambers, Rayner, Hines, Shelton, and, after awhile, there will be Powell, Langford, Simmons. These are not all that I hold in high esteem, the list would be too long to mention them all, but must say, though it has not been my good pleasure to personally know the present editor (Rev. John W. Boswell), I count him as one that I expect to meet and know personally at the great reunion by and by.

And now, dear Brother Boswell, allow me to say, the announcement "A new editor for the Advocate," on the 8th page this week, adds to my sadness this morning. But I am getting use to changes. Life is one continual change. I have learned to look to you through the Advocate to sound the alarm of approaching danger, to defend the right, to feed the flock. You have long since captured me; have learned to love you dearly; shall try and keep up with you to the end of the journey, which won't be much longer; I have entered my 65th year, and you are older. You may be sure of my best wishes and will always be remembered in my prayers. I do not remember when the New Orleans Advocate did not come to our home. It was coming before I can remember, and has continued to come, without a halt, to this day.

Would like to write concerning "Our Name." "M. E. Church, South," but Bishop Morrison has nearly exhausted the subject in his reply to Rev. C. L. McCausland in a recent issue of the Christian Advocate (Nashville). However, will say I would take delight in explaining our name "to those who never go near any church, and the ignorant." It seems to me that it affords a good opportunity to tell the interesting and valable history of Methodism, etc. And those who would not unite with us after the explanation, would better stay out. Were we to change our name we would justly give cause for suspicion, and find it more difficult to explain the cause for the change.

No, never, never change our name. We have nothing to be ashamed of. When I read the articles favoring a change I feel as if it would give me the greatest pleasure to be with those brethren and ask them to let me do the explaining for them. Without boasting, I think I could explain it to the satisfaction of any sensible man.

I enjoyed Dr. J. M. Weems' ("Timely") in this week's ADVOCATE; also, "Some Reminiscences," by Hon. W. A. Belk. It carried me back to my childhood days, when "Fathers" Drake, Jones, Campbell, Clinton and others of precious memory, visited our home, and of the camp-meetings at old Bethel "before the war." "The Light of Other Days," by Thomas Moore, comes to mind just now.

In conclusion, will say this is written at haphazard, under the impulse of the moment, prompted by the nature of the contents of my mail this morning. May be, the waste-basket is the proper place for it—will leave it to your good judgment as to what disposition to make of it.

May heaven's richest blessings attend you through the remaining years of life, and in "the evening may it be light" with you, and finally may you hear these words: "Well done thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into into the joy of thy Lord." May we yet meet in this life; if not, I hope to meet you in our Father's home.

Norwood, La., Nov. 5, 1909.

THE EUNICE CHARGE.

Since my last letter, I have the following to report: I held a very interesting and spiritual meeting for Rev. J. E. Craig, at Church Point, beginning Monday after the third Sunday in August and continuing through the fourth Sunday. I had a delightful home while with Mr. Beatsher and family, and it goes without saying, that they did everything they could to make my stay pleasant. I preached twice a day; ate three good meals each day and studied Jevon's Logic between services and after services. From Church Point I came home and arranged for my meeting to be held in Eunice. I had engaged Rev. Walter G. Harbin, of Haynesville, La., to do the preaching, but two or three days before the meeting was to begin I received a message from him that he was sick and in bed, and would not be able to come. We were greatly disappointed, but still we bow to the will of God. I then secured the services of Rev. W. H. Benton, of Crowley, and he came to me on Monday, and stayed until Saturday morning, when he bade us good-by, to be in his own pulpit on Sunday, and so I was left alone as to ministerial help. I continued the meeting until the following Thursday night.

The church was greatly revived. Brother Benton did some good preaching. From my own meeting I left Friday night for Alexandria on my way to Forest Hill to hold a revival meeting for Rev. J. A. Morgan. I reached him about 3:30 p.m. on Saturday, but, owing to the fact that the church building at Forest Hill constitutes the first story of the Masonic Lodge, and the Masons were going to meet Saturday night, we decided to wait until Sunday, at 11 a. m., to open up the meeting, and I decided to visit the Lodge, and had a nice time.

Sunday at 11 a.m. we opened the meeting, and the congregations increased every service until the house could not hold more than half the people, I suppose. We closed the meeting on Friday, to the regret of all, and against my better judgment, but circumstances were such that I could not stay longer, I regretted it. The meeting was quite a success. Brother Morgan and wife are doing well, and they have the love and esteem of all the people there.

From there I came on the early train and spent the day at home and went to Long Point at night to preach Sunday and Sunday night. On Tuesday before the first Sunday in October, I went to Wilson to help my old friend and brother pastor in a revival meeting, and continued with him ten days. The meeting was a great success in the way of reviving the church. Brother Cargill and I have been friends for eighteen years. He heard me preach when I was just a boy-preacher. Of course, I am not an old man yet—notwithstanding, I have been endeavoring to point sinners to the Lamb of God more than twenty years—six years of that time was spent in the evangelistic field. While at Wilson I met Mrs. Maggie Stanley, a daughter of Brother Cassidy. She had played the organ for me at Zwolle, ten years before, when I held a revival meeting there for Rev. R. P. Howell. She was a Mrs. Foster then. She played during the meeting at Wilson. I was entertained while at Wilson in the home of Brother Cargill and wife. I had a delightful home—and a pleasant stay, indeed. While there I had the pleasure of meeting Rev. C. C. Miller, presiding elder, and he attended two services, and he enjoyed this scribe's preaching. Of course, he was hungry for preaching. He is moving along nicely, and bringing things to pass. While on my way to Wilson, I spent a few hours with my dear old ex-presiding elder, while in Baton Rouge—I mean Rev. J. M. Henry.

From Wilson I came home, and Saturday before the second Sunday in October (this month) we held our 4th Quarterly Conference. Brother Denson presided with grace and ability as he always does. On Sunday at 11 a. m., and 7:30 p. m., he preached two fine sermons. We were delighted to have him stay with us while here. I forgot to say that on the fourth Sunday at 7:30 p. m., at Iota, we had a memorial service in memory of Bishop Ward which was well attended, all things considered.

I am now at home and endeavoring to get ready for the Conference to be at Alexandria. May the Lord bless the ADVOCATE and all that are connected with it. Pray for me brethren, that I may be useful. My highest aim is to do the will of God, and be a blessing to humanity.

THE WINONA DISTRICT MISSIONARY INSTITUTE.

The ladies representing both the Home and the Foreign Mission Societies met in joint session at Itta Bena, Miss., Oct. 20, 21.

The opening sermon, preached by Rev. E. S. Lewis, P. E., was a most helpful and inspiring message. There were in attendance a large number of delegates and visitors from the various auxiliaries of the district. Mrs. S. M. Thames and Mrs. J. E. Thomas were present also, and contributed to the success of the meeting. Several of our pastors and Brother Bachman favored us with a visit on that occasion.

The first day was devoted to the discussion of the Home Department. It is evident that the women are doing a great work. The efficient secretary, Mrs. Minnie Campbell, of Winona, presided, pleasing all with her gracious manners and easy dispatch of business.

Mrs. Neblett, of Eupora, was in the chair the second day while the Foreign cause received consideration. On this day, as well as the day before, there were several fine papers and addresses. Sister Neblett possesses the true missionary spirit. The cry of her heart is for the consecration of the young life of the church to this great cause. The coming of the delegates and visitors brought us a blessing. Our prayers and best wishes follow them.

A FICKLE THING.

In your issue of November 4, you have quite an interesting quotation from Rev. H. S. Johns on your editorial page. I write to call attention to an error, not that there is danger of misleading "young scientists," but young preachers. The line in the United States along which the compass points due north, is a wandering line from South Carolina to Michigan. Strange as it may seem to the Rev. Mr. Johns, the line is not straight nor does it run due north and south. The magnetic needle is a fickle thing.

FELICITY REVIVAL.

The revival services which were held for two weeks at Felicity Street Church in New Orleans resulted in a spiritual uplift to the congregation. There were a number of bright conversions, and the preaching of Rev. W. G. Harbin, who conducted the meeting, was of a high order. He is a successful soul-winner, and a preacher of marked ability. During the meeting street services were held each night. They were largely attended, and created a profound impression upon those who were present. At one of the afternoon services, Miss Ada Parker, a returned missionary from Brazil, gave an inspiring address on the work of the missionaries in Brazil. Her earnest words resulted in the reorganization of a Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of fourteen members.
ALBERT S. LUTZ.

A SERMON TO THE AGED

Delivered by Rev. Geo. Jackson on Old Folks' Day
At Parker Memorial Church, New Orleans,
Oct. 11, 1909

Text: "The hoary head is a crown of glory if it be found in the way of righteousness." Prov. xvi, 31.

"The glory of young men is their strength and the beauty of old men is the gray head." Prov. xx, 29.

After introductory remarks concerning the delights of childhood, the aged preacher said:

Age invests many things with peculiar attractiveness. An aged oak, gnarled, wide-spreading, lichen-covered; an ancient castle, weather-worn and storm-swept, moss-grown and ivy-clad, both are exceedingly beautiful. But of all the attractive pictures old Time can draw, no sight is so beautiful as the silver locks and radiant features of godly and joyous old age. An aged sire, a venerable mother, seated in the old armchair, looking forward across the bright border of the Beulah land to catch a glimpse of the jasper walls which belt the city of the saints—

"Away with our sorrow and fear!
We soon shall recover our home,
The house of our Father above,
The palace of angels and God.
The city of Saints shall appear,
The day of eternity come!
From earth we shall quickly remove
And mount to our native abode."

1. There is beauty and sweetness about life's sunset that some do not observe. No portion of the day is more inspiring and yet more becalming than the hour of sunset. The day's work is done; the fervor of its shining is over. The sun hangs golden in the west, making everything look unspeakably beautiful. The very atmosphere partakes of the glory of the king of day. The weary laborer seeks his repose; children leave their play to gather in the home for evening prayer and blessing. It is time for prayer, and rest, and sleep.

William the Conqueror introduced into England the ringing of the curfew bell. The curfew means that all fires should be put out or covered with ashes; all lights extinguished; all people retire to rest.

For some here, curfew will soon sound. The fire of life will be banked, and we shall go to sleep. But whether there will be rest and glory, will depend on whether the "hoary head be found in the way of righteousness."

Joseph Jennings, when on the very verge of the spirit-land, and looking over, exclaimed: "Beautiful! beautiful!" "It is a beautiful morning," rejoined his weeping wife; "shall I open the shutters to give you a better view?" "Oh," said he, "I have looked a great way beyond the shutters."

"While gazing on that city
Just o'er that narrow flood,
A band of holy angels
Came from the throne of God.
They bore him on their pinions
Safe o'er the dashing foam,
And joined him in their triumph—
Deliverance has come.

"I heard the song of triumph
They sang upon that shore,
Saying: 'Jesus has redeemed us
To suffer nevermore.'
Then casting his eyes backward
On the race which he had run,
He shouted loud: 'Hosanna.
Deliverance has come!'"

2. To him who looks not beyond the shutters, old age comes as a heartless robber. It takes from life its purpose; no new profession to be formed, no field to till, or houses to build; no place in the world's busy life, none in the gay social round. Plans, and zest, and work, have all given place to a time of waiting, a waiting for the days to run their course, for time to end and eternity to begin—

"There is a world above
Where parting is unknown,
A long eternity of love
Formed for the good alone;
And faith beholds the dying here
Translated to that happier sphere."

Old age has taken acquaintance of the past: friends, as well as rivals; loved ones as well as foes. It has taken the wife, the husband, the children, and the children's children. "Behold the aged one stands like a giant of the forest out in the opening alone, swept by every wind, bruised by every storm." All paths to ambition, wealth, fame, learning, all closed save one—the path to the tomb; and, like old Simeon, he longs for the rest and bliss of a better world; he has attained the height of his ambition. He has seen the Lord's Christ, the consummation of all his hopes.

"For mine eyes have seen thy great salvation."

The world has nothing for the aged. They have nothing for the world. Such, my brethren, cannot be said of those who have come to old age but look not beyond the shutters. Can you conceive a sadder picture of life, all but lived, the world fast receding, earth ties snapping till barely more than one or two, to bind to the present, and what lies beyond, around, beneath. I saw such a case once, an old man, past his three score and ten, the most miserable looking man I ever saw. No hope, no Christ; he had resisted the woolngs of the Spirit, and now the spirit had left him.

Dr. A. W. Gordon met an aged man going to the place of prayer. "Aged friend, how is it that so old a man is so merry and cheerful?" "Because," said he; "I belong to the Lord." That, brethren, is the secret.

"How happy every child of grace
Who knows his sins forgiven,
This earth, he cries, is not my place,
I seek my place in heaven.

"A country far from mortal sight,
Yet, oh, by faith I see
The land of rest, the saint's delight,
The heaven prepared for me."

3. But the picture has another side. "The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness." My brethren, if many things are going, many more remain. (1) The aged Christian has past beyond the most hazardous and tempting periods and scenes of life. He is unaffected by some of the most pernicious influences of a bad world. The world has not lost its influence over me, though past my 85th milestone, simply because my physical powers have weakened. I can join with Charles Wesley in part of Hymn 746: "In age, but not in feebleness extreme." But, my brethren, I have learned to put a right value on things. (2) The aged Christian still has reserved to him the most potent agency in life: Prayer. The blessed Savior says: "Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you."

"Prayer is appointed to convey
The blessings God designs to give.
Long as they live should Christians pray;
They learn to pray when first they live.

"There, there, on eagle-wings we soar,
And sin and sense molest no more,
And heaven comes down our souls to greet,
While glory crowns the mercy seat."

(3) The aged Christian may lean to the full on Christ: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." Herein is his privilege and joy. How beautiful is old age when cheered by the conscious presence and help of the Strong One. There is no fear, no doubt, no anxiety about the future. He is "leaning on the everlasting arms." "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff comfort me." "These troubles and distresses that you go through in these waters," says Bunyan, "are no sign that God hath forsaken you; but are sent to try you, whether you will call to mind that which heretofore you have received of his goodness, and lean upon him in your distress. Then I saw in my dream that Christian was in a muse awhile. To whom also Hopeful added these words, 'Be of good cheer: Jesus Christ make thee whole.' And with that Christian broke out with a loud voice, 'Oh, I see him again: and he tells me.' 'When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee.' (Isa. 23.) Then they both took courage, and the enemy was after that as still as a stone, until they were gone over. Christian, therefore, found ground to stand upon, and so it followed that the rest of the river was but shallow."—Bunyan.

"Vital spark of heavenly flame,
Quit, oh quit this mortal frame.
Trembling, hoping, ling'ring, flying,
O the pain, the bliss of dying!
Cease, fond nature, cease thy strife,
And let me languish into life!

"Hark, they whisper; angels say:
'Sister spirit, come away!'
What is this that absorbs me quite,
Steals my senses, shuts my sight,
Drowns my spirit, draws my breath.—
Tell me, my soul, can this be death?

"The world recedes, it disappears:
Heaven opens on my eyes, my ears
With sounds seraphic ring:
Lend, lend your wings; I mount, I fly!
O grave, where is thy victory,
O death, where is thy sting."

With Job, the Christian can say: "For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth. And though, after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." How plainly is the glorious doctrine of the resurrection taught, both in the Old Testament and in the New Testament.

4. The aged Christian can witness for Christ. To the young these things come, for life's evening will take the character of the day which precedes it. If we are to come to life's close with the comfort of the Christian's hope, we must prepare for it while it is day. Young people, heed the voice of conscience; cherish the impressions of the Spirit of God!

Ye older ones, go to Jesus; you who have lived a life of sin; you who have been rolling sin under your tongue as a sweet morsel, you can come. It is still not too late; go to Jesus and seek the restoration of your spiritual life and sensibility. You need not pray for your youth to come back, for it will return no more. You need not pray that your misspent time be recalled. You need not pray that your deeds of evil may be undone, for it cannot be. But blessed be God, you may pray that your blunted religious sympathies may be quickened; that your heart of stone may be taken away, and a heart of flesh given you, instead. "A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh." (Ezek. 36:26.)

"I have heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of salvation have I answered thee; behold now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." II Cor., 6:2.

"Some day, when fades the golden sun
Beneath the tinted west,
My blessed Lord shall say 'Well done,'
And I shall enter into rest.

"Some day! Till then I'll watch and wait,
My lamp all trimmed and burning bright;
Then, when my Savior ope's the gate,
My soul to him may take its flight,
And I shall see him face to face,
And tell the story, I'm saved by grace."

If you are about to do a piece of work, you should be careful to begin right, otherwise you will have to take it apart and begin over again. If you are going on a journey, you should be careful to get into the right road. The way to begin life aright is first of all to seek God, for "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom."—Selected.

"Go bury thy trouble" may be good advice, but do not form the habit of inviting all your friends to the obsequies every time such an interment takes place. There is danger in the habit—danger that you may be tempted to dig it up, nurse it back to the semblance of life, just in order that you may shine as the chief mourner at another well-attended funeral.

THE ECUMENICAL METHODIST CONFERENCE.

Arrangements for the meeting of the Fourth Ecumenical Methodist Conference in Toronto, Canada, in October, 1911, are now well under way. On the 20th and 21st of October, the Executive and Programme Committees held their second meetings in Toronto, in the Board Room of the Wesley Building. Nearly all the members of the Programme Committee, of which Bishop Hamilton is chairman, and Dr. William Briggs, of Toronto, is secretary, were present. The Committees took up the matter of formulating a programme for the Conference. As the Conference is to be held on this side of the sea, the eastern section desired the American brethren to make the first draft of a list of topics for their consideration.

The dominant feeling on both sides of the ocean is that the programme for the Fourth Conference shall be of a living and practical character, and that all the interests which the several Methodist branches in common have at heart—theological, apologetic, devotional, educational, social, evangelistic, and missionary—should come within the scope of the Conference.

Suggestions of topics were received from many sources, including bishops, editors, educators, pastors, and others. The Committee carefully considered all these suggestions, and after indicating a score or so of subjects, which, in its judgment, should find a place on the programme, appointed a sub-committee to draw up a programme in outline, and submit it to the Committee at its next meeting.

The Executive Committee, of which Bishop E. E. Hoss is chairman, and Dr. H. K. Carroll is secretary, made an assignment of the 300 delegates allotted to the western section as follows:

Church.	Delegates.
Methodist Episcopal	121
Methodist Episcopal, South	63
African Methodist Episcopal	29
African Methodist Episcopal Zion	20
Canada Methodist	24
United Brethren	10
Colored Methodist Episcopal	9
Methodist Protestant	9
Evangelical Association	2
United Evangelical	3

And one to each of the following:

Free,
Congregational Methodist,
United Brethren (Old Constitution),
Wesleyan Methodist,
Union American Methodist Episcopal,
Methodist Church of Japan,
Primitive,
British Methodist Episcopal,
Reformed Methodist Union Episcopal,
Zion Union Apostolic. Twenty in all.

These twenty bodies have an aggregate, according to the report submitted by the secretary, of 7,943,180 communicants.

It was reported that the Evangelical Association cannot be represented in the Toronto Conference because its General Conference meets in October, 1911, at the same time that the Ecumenical Conference will be in session. For this reason, two of its four delegates were assigned to the Methodist Protestant Church, which will, therefore, have the same number of delegates at Toronto as it had at the London Conference.

A number of sub-committees were appointed, on local arrangements, transportation and publication. Superintendent Carman is the chairman of the Committee on Local Arrangements, and Dr. Carroll and Dr. Briggs were appointed on the Committees on Transportation and Press with power to appoint associates.

A budget recommended by the finance committee of $16,000, to meet necessary expenses was approved. The amount is to be apportioned to the several churches on the basis of $55 for each delegate.

Rev. F. T. Little, of the Methodist Protestant Church, was appointed a member of the Programme Committee, and Mr. A. M. Lyons, Steubenville, Ohio, and Mr. T. A. Hunter, Greensboro, N. C., of the Methodist Protestant Church, were appointed members of the finance committee; also Gen. Julian S. Carr, Durham, N. C., in the place of Mr. Murray Carleton, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and ex-governor, S. R. Van Sant, Minneapolis, in place of Mr. F. A. Chamberlain, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, resigned.

The next meeting of the Executive and Programme Committees will be held at the headquarters of the Executive Committee, at 150 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

THE WOMEN—THEIR RIGHTS AND PRIVILEGES.

At the recent annual session of the Woman's Home Mission Society, at Savannah, Ga., something was said about the "enfranchisement of women—granting them their rights and privileges," and forthwith it was heralded all over the country that the women of the Home Mission Society of the Church South, had made a demand for the ballot, and that Miss Belle H. Bennett had come out openly for woman suffrage. We hesitated to pass the news along, and finally decided to wait for further information. It has come to us, certified by the president, Miss Bennett, and the general secretary, Mrs. MacDonell. They ask for full enfranchisement in the Church, and say to the public:

> The women of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, have demonstrated their ability and readiness for the responsibility of full lay membership in the church. Already, in large numbers of communities, in local church affairs, the pastors are assisted by a few godly women in the official work of the churches, while the legal right is vested solely in the male membership.
> This knowledge and its accompanying sense of responsibility has developed the women to the point that they are fitted for legal representation, not in the Quarterly Conference as stewards and Sunday school superintendents, but in the higher Conferences, wherever and whatever capacity the laymen have a place and part.
> This conviction was expressed at the recent session of the Women's Board of Missions by the following memorial to the General Conference, which was adopted by a vote of 29 to 6:
>
> "Dear Fathers and Brethren: We, the undersigned members of the Women's Board of Home Missions, in annual session at Savannah, Ga., present the following memorial:
>
> "Believing that the fullness of God's time has come for the more than half a million women of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to have larger freedom in the ever-widening work of the Church, that they may help to hasten more surely and speedily the coming of the Kingdom of God,
> "We respectfully petition that, as an act of justice, you will, at this session of the General Conference, take the needed action to secure for the women of the Church the full rights of the laity."
> MISS BELLE H. BENNETT, President.
> MRS. R. W. MacDONELL, Gen'l Sec'y.

NOTES FROM COLUMBUS DISTRICT.

The fourth Quarterly Conference at Macon was a great occasion. The unanimity, enthusiasm and happiness of all were marked features. The people and preacher are exuberant over the retrospect and prospect. They have spent over $6000 on the church and parsonage in three years, and everybody is happy over the splendid improvements. They have one of the prettiest and most comfortable parsonages in the Conference. The church is a thing of beauty and a joy forever. It has been overhauled inside and out and retouched from foundation to spire; equipped with a furnace for heating; the auditorium furnished with the handsomest memorial windows; the pews brand new and elegant; the pulpit and chairs and altar rail up-to-date and pretty as a dream, and the good women putting down a new and elegant carpet to cover the whole floor—all these make it one of the best and handsomest auditoriums in the State. All these improvements are the clear result of a larger spiritual life and vision on the part of the people. The pastor is in love with his people and they with him. Together they have done great things; together they rejoice. They unanimously asked for his return for the fourth time, and also unanimously asked for the next Annual Conference. And it will go there, too, do you hear it! They want it and they deserve it, and I know the Conference will want to go. Brother Thomas and his people have done a great work. L. M. LIPSCOMB.

HER ONE ACCOMPLISHMENT.

Old Mr. Brown stood in his private office, with his back to the fire and his coat tails balanced on either hand. He was a bald-headed old gentleman with a ruddy complexion, keen black eyes, and leg-of-mutton whiskers, which were white as snow.

And Miss Nelly Torrance sat looking at him timidly from the depths of her big armchair in which he had beckoned her to seat herself.

"So you are my Cousin Adrian's daughter?" said he, after a long pause.

"Yes," said Nelly, wondering what was in all those mysterious tin boxes, and whether the monster iron safe was full of gold and silver pieces.

"And you want something to do?"

"Yes, please."

"Humph!" said Mr. Brown.

Nelly glanced shyly up into his face.

"But," she added with some spirit, "I am not asking for charity. I am willing to work."

"You mean you would like to daub canvass, or sew yellow sunflowers on green plush screens," satirically observed the old gentleman. "I don't call that work."

"Nor I, either," retorted Nelly.

"Then what do you mean?" said Mr. Brown.

"I mean that I shall be glad to do any sort of honest work by means of which I can earn my own living."

"Humph!" again interjected Mr. Brown. "Can you cook?"

"Yes," Nelly answered.

"I don't believe it."

"But I can."

"Very well," said Mr. Brown, releasing his coat tails and sitting down at his desk, as if the question were definitely disposed of. "My cook went away this morning. I haven't engaged any one in her place. You may come this afternoon and see what you can do for me."

Mr. Brown fully expected that his young cousin would recoil indignantly from his proposal, but she did nothing of the sort. She simply said, "Yes, Cousin John," and asked for his private address.

"Mind you're punctual," said he, as he handed her the penciled card.

"I am always punctual," calmly retorted Nelly.

Mr. Brown watched her out of the office with a quizzical twinkle in the corner of his eye.

"She won't come," he said to himself. "I've seen the last of my fine relative."

Nelly Torrance went home to a little second floor room, the cheapest the widow and her daughters could find.

Mrs. Adrian Torrance was dressed in black. She was a fair, delicate piece of human china, who had been like the lilies of the field in that she "toiled not, neither did she spin." Lucetta, the eldest daughter, was trying, unsuccessfully enough, to trim a black crepe bonnet by the window.

They had come up from the country at Lucetta's suggestion to appeal, in their poverty, to this rich cousin of the dead father and husband, but none of them anticipated any very satisfactory results from the experiment.

"These rich people are always miserly," said Miss Lucetta.

"And I've understood," sighed the gentle little widow, "that he was not pleased when Adrian married me."

"Well?" cried Mrs. Torrance eagerly, as Nelly entered.

"What does he say?" questioned Lucetta, dropping the folds of crepe which she was vainly endeavoring to fashion into what the fashion plate called an "oblong bow."

"I have seen him," said Nelly, untying her bonnet strings, "and I'm going to his house in Grandover Park this afternoon."

"You don't mean," cried Mrs. Torrance, with a spasmodic catching of her breath, "that he is going to adopt you?"

"Not in the least," said Nelly. "Now mamma, don't jump at conclusions. Just hear my plain, unvarnished tale. I went to Cousin John. I told him I wanted something to do. He asked me whether I could cook. Then he told me that his cook was gone and asked me whether I would come to his house this afternoon and take her place."

"And you?" gasped Mrs. Torrance.

"I said yes, of course."

"Eleanor," cried Lucetta, "I am scandalized by your conduct! Yes, perfectly scandalized! You will do nothing of the sort."

"Certainly not," said Mrs. Torrance, developing hysterical symptoms. "If your Cousin Brown intends to insult us—"

"But he doesn't," pleaded Nelly. "He intended the offer in good faith, and I accepted in it the same spirit."

"You surely do not mean to degrade yourself," cried Lucetta, "by turning—cook—for any living man?"

"I don't see," argued Nelly, "that it is any more degrading to cook for Cousin John than it would be to embroider slippers for him, or to read the newspapers aloud to him of an evening."

"Eleanor never had any proper pride," said Mrs. Torrance, wringing her hands.

"Never!" echoed Lucetta.

"And," added Nelly, "my cousin would have every reason to believe me an imposter if I told him I wanted to work and then refused the offer he made. It will be useless for you to remonstrate, Lucetta, and I hope mamma will not place any obstacles in my way, for I am quite determined to go to Grandover Park this afternoon."

It was six o'clock exactly when Mr. Brown let himself into his house with the latch key which always depended from his watch chain. The gas jet burned softly behind the rose-colored shade in the hall and the fire clicked cheerily in the grate of the parlor beyond.

"Humph!" he muttered, "she hasn't come. Thought so. There is no such a thing as a practical woman now-a-days."

At the same moment a light, white-aproned little figure came out of the dining room beyond, and Nelly Torrance's voice uttered the words:

"Dinner is ready, Cousin John."

The old man smiled. He had a pleasant expression on his face when he smiled, and Nelly wondered that she had not noticed what a handsome man he was.

"Oh," said he, "you did come, then?"

"I always keep my engagements," said Nelly. "Punctuality is the soul of business, isn't it, Cousin John? At least, that's what I used to write in my copy-books."

Mr. Brown patted her hand as she helped him with his overcoat.

"You are a good girl," said he.

And in his secret mind he determined to put up with any deficiencies in the cooking of a girl who had such excellent business principles. But to his infinite amazement, there were no deficiencies to overlook. He ate and relished and wondered by turns.

"My dear," said he at last, when the cloth was removed, "all is very nice. I'll concede you are tip-top housekeeper. But, of course, you ordered all of this from Monerato's restaurant?"

"But of course I didn't Cousin John," said Nelly, decidedly. "I cooked it myself."

Mr. Brown closed his eyes, and made a hasty calculation. His life had been "worried out of him," to use a common expression, by capricious housekeepers, inefficient cooks and untrained servants. At last here was a gateway out of all his tribulations.

"My dear," he said, "I should like to have you come and live here."

"As a cook, Cousin John?"

"No; as my adopted daughter and housekeeper. I need some one to take the helm of my affairs."

"But my mother," hesitated Eleanor, "and my sister, Lucetta."

"Let them come, too; there's plenty of room in the house. Can they cook, too?"

"No, Cousin John," confessed Nelly.

"Well, perhaps it's just as well," said Mr. Brown, "there can't be more than one head to the household."

So the Torrance family found a comfortable refuge for the soles of their feet, and Nelly's despised accomplishment proved the sword wherewith she opened the world's oyster. Lucetta sighed and wondered why she, too, had not taken cooking lessons.

"Nelly is the old man's favorite," said she. "He'll leave her his money when he dies. And all because she accepted the ridiculous offer of turning cook for a living!"

Mr. Brown, however, looked at the matter in a different light. He said: "Nelly is not like the typical young lady, too lazy to work and too proud to beg. She does with her might whatever her hands find to do."—Woman's Journal.

THE RESTRAINTS OF ORTHODOXY.

If the whole of orthodoxy consists in loving service in behalf of our fellow-men, then it must be that the whole of heterodoxy consists in a bad life. That is the sum of it. So we conclude after a little hearing and reading on the subject. "Sound doctrine," which some discount by alluding to it in a sneering sort of way as "dogma," counts for nothing. And yet, the doctrines a man holds, not only shapes his feelings toward God, but in a large measure fashions his life.

We know but little of God aside from what we learn of him through Christ his Son—"the brightness of his glory, the express image of his person," for, admittedly the Old Testament is not a full revelation. "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son of God, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him." A man growing up with the ideas of God as revealed by Christ, and of Christ as he is set forth in the gospel, must necessarily have his ideals shattered, if at any time he is brought under the influence of destructive criticism and comes to the conclusion that his early teachings were without foundation. Shatter his ideals and both his feeling and his faith must change.

Men are brought into salvation and religious experience under the conviction that Jesus is divine, and "has power on earth to forgive sins." Otherwise they could not as intelligent beings be induced to surrender to him as Savior. In this faith, they trust God, and become his sons and heirs. All this is founded on the Godhead of Jesus Christ. But if Jesus was not conceived by the Holy Ghost, and is not the Son of God, and is not God, he has no power to forgive sins, nor any qualifications as a propitiatory sacrifice for sins; and the whole story of his life and sufferings and death as man's redeemer, is altogether worthless.

If a man is converted, and enters into Christian experience under the conviction that he was saved through the merits of Christ as the Son of God, what becomes of his religion when convinced that the miraculous conception of Christ is untrue and the thing itself impossible? Do we do the man an injustice by saying that when he loses faith in the Godhead of Christ, he likewise loses his experience? It must be. If he ever had an experience, now that he has no foundation on which to stand, he is compelled to conclude that, in his ignorance, he was deceived. And orthodoxy is renounced. All this is no great sin—at least not an unpardonable one—so we are led to infer, having been told that. "the worst heresy—the only absolutely unpardonable one—is a bad life." We have not so learned. On the contrary, we have been taught that no provision was made in the atonement for the pardon of unbelief. And we are led to say further: When one loses faith in the divinity of Christ, he not only loses his experience in grace, but he loses his power with God, and his ministry ceases to be fruitful in saving his hearers. This lesson was impressed by St. Paul on Timothy: "Take heed unto thy self and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee."

If a man loses faith in Christ as God, and renounces his Christian experience, is it not natural to suppose that some sort of a change will take place in his life? He is no more a sinner in common acceptation of the term. Likely as not, he regards himself as a product of evolution, and of course, not affected by sin. He does not feel that he stands in need of the blood of atonement. To strive after higher attainments in the divine life is useless. Prayer for grace to resist temptation and to overcome "the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life," is out of place. Culture is substituted for grace, and faith gives way to works. We would not undertake to say that he falls into open and flagrant sin, but he necessarily becomes lax in the observance of those things thought to be needful among devout Christians.

Even among those who maintain the strictest orthodoxy in regard to the essentials of religion there is in some things a disregard of commandments given to regulate both the individual and the community life. Who has not seen during the last twenty-five years a complete change among the people in the matter of Sabbath observance? Among many otherwise consistent Christians the Sabbath is hardly looked upon as a holy day. When that sentiment prevailed its secularization was scarcely thought of. Now, the man who observes the day as holy, is an exception, and is ridiculed as a Puritan. What kind of living will we have when all orthodoxy is thrown to the winds, and the ten commandments consigned to oblivion?

Without undertaking to sit in judgment on any man's conscience, or charging delinquency of life, we hesitate not to say that in all the ranks of those who undermine the faith of feebler folk by denying the old and settled truths of the gospel, there is not one who is a holy man after the pattern of the New Testament, or who is a successful winner of souls. "Holiness to the Lord" is not their motto. Soul saving is not their business. Until these men give us higher ideals of Christian living, and show themselves worthy patterns, it would be well for all concerned to look to them less for instruction in righteousness and the things that make for peace in the Church.

There is nothing like the orthodox faith to keep men in the narrow way. It is a restraining force. There is nothing like it to help men grow in grace.

"DIXIE METHODISM."

A man, happy in the possession of the familiar name of "Frater," who lives up North, or else is a Northern man living in the South writes as familiarly to the Pittsburg Christian Advocate of "Dixie Methodism" as any Dixie Methodist could possibly do. But he does not know it all—no, not by a large measure, else he would not have said some things uttered in his epistle.

Among other things he says to the Pittsburg readers that he "foresees a vigorous handling by the General Conference of the time-limit question." Possibly he does, but he is mistaken when he affirms that the action of his own General Conference in 1908 "in letting it serenely (probably, a misprint for severely) alone, * * * has had a real effect on our Dixie brethren." He means by that expression to say that the Northern General Conference has settled the time-limit question for all Dixie Methodism. He does not seem to know that what was settled by his General Conference, has been much unsettled by the pressure brought to bear on the Bishops at some of their Annual Conferences forcing them to make about twice as many changes under a no-limit rule, otherwise a settled pastorate, as under a time limit. For example, in a Conference of less than three hundred preachers, one hundred and thirty-seven men were changed who had served charges less than two years. And scores of other men were changed who had served less than six or seven years, and so on, clearly showing that there is nothing like a settled pastorate in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Not satisfied with this statement he goes further. He says: "We opine that a most recent occurrence will awaken Southern Methodists to the overwhelming necessity of the situation." He refers to, and names the going away from us of Dr. Henry Stiles Bradley. He actually thinks that the loss of Dr. Henry Stiles Bradley is irreparable. Bless your soul, my dear Frater, Dr. Henry Stiles Bradley's place was filled in less than a week by a man quite as intelligent, as highly educated, fully as pious, and a far sounder Methodist, and one we think will not leave us at the end of a four year's stay at St. Johns. Dr. Henry Stiles Bradley is a bright and attractive man—capable of great things, and we are sorry that he adopted such opinions of doctrine and polity as forced him to leave us.

This same Frater criticies and rebukes the editors of Southern Methodism for allowing contributors to "resurrect time-worn and ghostly subjects," and discuss them in their columns. One of the ghostly subjects, is "the why and the wherefore which divided Methodism in 1844." One of the questions of the day is the re-union of Methodism. In some quarters, it is a very vital question. If Frater can tell us how to proceed, and effect a union honorable alike to both bodies concerned, without discussing "the why and the wherefore" of the division, he will show himself a wise man above any of his fellows. In his dream of one Methodism—that Methodism his own Church—he certainly is not so sure, or so short-sighted, as to believe that when the time comes—the "psychological moment," as the philosophers call it, all that is necessary is for the Methodist Episcopal Church to open her mouth, and take Southern Methodism in at one swallow. Or does he think the time is at hand, or will come after a while, when Southern Methodism will put the halter around her neck and gently go to the Methodist Episcopal Church and say submissively, "Here's your mule." Sensible Methodists, North and South, expect no such things. But they do expect that in the re-adjustment of matters between the two bodies, the things that divided us will be discussed. If those on the other side of the line think otherwise, and are in the majority, we venture to say, the youngest man among them will not live long enough to see a re-united Methodism.

We are not belated in Dixie simply because we discuss organic union in the light of the facts of 1844. They loom large every time organic union is proposed.

THE COMING GENERAL CONFERENCE.

We have seen much recently in our church papers concerning the importance of the coming General Conference. That it will be of vast importance cannot be denied by any who love the church. That the whole church should pray for divine guidance, not only for wise legislation and the selection of the best men to lead in all our great work, but for the election of the right men to legislate and choose our leaders, none who believe that the living Christ is the great head of the church will deny. But we fully agree with Dr. Rankin of the Texas Advocate in saying that the coming session will be no more important than some sessions of the past. They are all important. Looking back, and considing the unsettled condition of the country, the trouble through which it passed, we should say that the General Conference of 1866 was the most important in the history of Southern Methodism. That Conference met in New Orleans one year after the close of the great war. The South was under "Carpet bag rule," and the "disintegration and absorption" of Southern Methodism by our big sister in the North, was much talked about. There was not any danger of that, but the ranks of our church had been decimated and thousands of our people were without hope. Besides, the times had brought to the front men of extreme ideas, and they were not slow to make themselves felt. But wise counsels prevailed and the church came safely through the ordeal. The Lord was with us then, and we are happy in the belief that he is still with us.

The church faces no such conditions to-day as confronted the men of '66. True, there appears to be some restlessness, and all sorts of things—the wildest possible to be imagined, are being proposed. But their very wildness will be our safety. A few men will go up to the meeting and propose some radical legislation; for eight or ten days they will make much noise; the more part will see the necessity for conservative action, and under the quietus of non-concurrence, the noisy men will largely subside.

Some of our friends manifest great uneasiness lest mistakes should be made in the selection of Bishops—"so many to be elected," they say. Of course there is danger. But forty-three years ago when the church was not half as large as it is now the General Conference elected four Bishops, a much larger number in proportion to membership than six would be if elected to-day. No mistake was made then. Why there should be more danger now than in 1866, we do not know. There cannot be unless it is true that more electioneering is done in this day than at that time. And this we do not believe.

The General Conference is the law-making body of the church. For that reason it is paramount in importance to all other Conferences, and should be remembered in the prayers of every lover of the church. God still hears his people, and is willing to answer and bless. Let us all pray, not especially that no mistakes may be made in the selection of Superintendents, but that what is done may be done for the glory of God, and the good of his people.

PERSONAL.

Rev. J. T. Lewis, writing from Cleveland, Miss., says: "We are practically sure of reporting everything 'in full' from here." Cleveland could not afford to do less.

A sensible brother sends us a communication on important matters and says: "If the enclosed be beneath the standard for your paper, it will make good kindling." That is "fine."

Rev. R. H. Wynn, of Monroe, La., is now engaged in a "successful revival meeting," in which he is assisted by Rev. W. H. Coleman, of Homer. On November 5 "the Business Men's Class in the Sunday school invited the men of the town to a banquet, which was a splendid success."

Of the preachers from Mississippi now in Oklahoma we note the following appointments made at the recent session of the Oklahoma Conference: J. H. Rogers to Marietta Station; W. W. Williams to Kingston and Woodville Circuit; W. L. Anderson to Stilwell and Westville; W. D. Mathews to Clinton District, presiding elder.

Rev. R. A. Clark, pastor at Okolona, seat of the North Mississippi Conference, has sent us a list of the friends, and of the preachers they will entertain during the session which will begin Dec. 1. The list will be printed next week, too late to make any corrections through the Advocate. Corrections of any kind must be sent directly to Brother Clark at Okolona.

Dr. T. C. Wier, writing to us concerning the work of Rev. W. F. Rogers, on the Chester (Miss.) Circuit, says: "He is a faithful and successful pastor; modest and unassuming—yet I doubt Chester Circuit has ever made so fine a record in all its history as has been made under the pastorate of Brother W. F. Rogers." It does us good to print such kind words of a faithful man.

Rev. P. D. Hardin, after a stay of one year in San Antonio, Tex., which he "enjoyed very much," is more than glad to get back to his home Conference, the Mississippi. He is now at Wesson, which place was made vacant by the transfer of Rev. F. A. Grimes to West Texas, another brother who, in due time, will sigh for Mississippi water. We thank Brother Hardin for a friendly call at this office last week.

Rev. T. W. Lewis is winding up a hard year's work at Columbus, Miss. He has been faithful in preaching the Word, has looked diligently after his flock, having made 1800 pastoral visits, and received 130 members into the church. After deducting all losses, he will report 920 members, and $7000 raised for all purposes. We wonder if there is anybody in Columbus who favors a change of pastors, or a change in the name of the church.

The work at McDonoghville, for the past ten days conducted by Rev. W. G. Harhin, resulted in a great revival. Rev. H. Whitehead is pastor, and Brother Harhin speaks in highest terms of him as pastor and co-worker. The service will close this week, and the preacher will go to Lake Arthur to assist Rev. L. N. Hoffpauir. During the meeting there was quite a number of conversions, a number of additions to the church, and many family altars established.

Brethren who have favored us with lengthy communications—all filed to be turned over to the printer at the proper time—are hereby notified that matter pertaining to the three patronizing Conferences, soon to convene, will have the "right of way" for the next four weeks. Matters of a general character will be handled as circumstances allow. Some of it will be sidetracked for a while, but none of it, as far as we now know, will go to the waste-basket.

Rev. W. C. Harris, a beloved brother of North Mississippi, long in bad health, but recently much improved, has gone with his family to Texas, transferred, we suppose, but to which Conference we do not know. Brother Harris leaves us with the confidence and best wishes of a host of friends. He is a true, good man, and we hope the change will be to his advantage. Rev. Thos. Cameron is supplying his place at New Albany for the remainder of the year.

Rev. I. D. Borders passed through the city on Tuesday last en route to Los Angeles, Cal., to which place he goes as pastor of the Hollywood Church. We thank him for a brotherly call. He was accompanied to the city by Mr. Lester Fant, an efficient official member of our church at Holly Springs. Brother Borders is one of our best men, and we regret to give him up. He goes to a good church, though in a difficult field, and earnestly desires the prayers of all his brethren. May he be sustained and abundantly blessed in his work.

Rev. A. W. Turner, of Opelousas, member of the Louisiana Conference, has been elected Superintendent of the State Anti-Saloon League. He is a strong man, a popular man, and an efficient worker. He will give the best that is in him to the work, and we do not doubt that he will achieve great success. He calls no man master after the flesh, and is not afraid of anything living. He has heard the snarl and seen the teeth of the tiger. He knows the lair and the lingo of the liquorites, and is prepared to meet them. Success to Brother Turner!

Rev. R. T. Pickett's note from Mentorum, Miss., is concise: The Lord has blessed the efforts of his servants in this part of his vineyard this year; have had good meetings, the results of which, we believe, will abide; twenty or more accessions; many family altars. Eight young people in Millsaps and Montrose, and many active workers among our young people. Collections, we think, will be in full. We now have eight local preachers on this charge—good help for a beginner like myself. Do you know of one that will beat that?" Brother Pickett adds to the Advocate treasury, for which we thank him.

SOCIAL PROBLEMS OF NEW ORLEANS.

On last Tuesday there was a meeting of the pastors and representative laymen to consider the social problems of the work in New Orleans. A committee of fifteen laymen from the various Methodist churches of the city was appointed who should study the social needs and provide practical methods of meeting the obligations of our church.

LESSON FOR NOV. 21, 1909.

PAUL'S STORY OF HIS LIFE.

II Cor. xi, 22-28; xii, 1-10.

Golden Text: "He said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness." II Cor. xii, 9.

Every sincere Christian has a perfect comfort in knowing that his life, with all the motives of every action, is open to the eye of God. It is faith, and its fruits of work, that pleases the Father in Heaven. While we rest in this assurance, there are times when we feel that our brothers in Christ do not place the proper estimate on what we are, and what we try to be, as followers of Jesus. Paul was always surrounded by critics, some of whom were of the severest type. Despite his humility, Paul was keenly sensitive; with this, his constant alertness that no questionable dogma find an inroad on the principles of the gospel he taught and preached, created in his mind a degree of isolation that almost amounted to loneliness. He lived on a high plane of spirituality, but his work required that he descend where he "must be all things to all men that he might save some." Spiritual things are seen with spiritual eyes, but to those whom the apostle was writing this story of his life must be told of material things, with their cause and effect, and the lesson thereby taught. He wrote while his mind was in a state of depression that was not entirely relieved by the message brought by Titus from Corinth. He was under the impression that he had not been rightly judged, and that he had been adversely compared with those he termed as ministers of Satan transformed as the ministers of righteousness. He calls these troubles, with all the things that he had suffered, "things that are without," alluding to "the care of all of the churches" as the burden that bore heaviest upon him.

He loved those that had accepted the gospel; he loved them as a father loves his children, and he must tell them all about himself. They must be reminded of all the dangers and trials through which he had passed, and they must know that it was through no strength of his own that he had overcome. They must be told that these material things were in themselves part proof of his apostleship. He was a Hebrew, of the stock of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin and a Pharisee. He was learned in the law; yet he counted all but loss "for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus," and this made it necessary for him to "come to visions and revelations of the Lord." The visions he had seen, the revelations he had heard, were not of earth, and they were so wonderful and so strange that Paul was at a loss to know whether they were communicated to him when he was in the body or out of the body.

To make himself understood, Paul implies the possibility of the spirit leaving the body for a time and returning. He speaks of that spiritual part of him as of another man. What he had seen and heard as the spiritual part of him, he could glory in as a fact. He could tell his hearers that "that man" had been taken up from earth into heaven; of that only he could glory, for it was not lawful for him to describe what he had seen and heard when there.

There was an object in taking this great servant of Christ to view the home of his Lord and his own future home; there was also an object in having Peter and James and John see Jesus transfigured before them and in company with saints immortal.

What a blessing to us, that we can enter such holy contemplation of the picture of our own future, which the Scripture sets forth before us! Was it not meet that Paul should see the best that God had in reserve for him as he had seen the worst that the enemies of all righteousness could mete out to him on earth.

This other Paul, that we know and love so well, had naught to glory in save his infirmities; his great weakness that made the strength of Christ such a necessity. Though he had an abundance of revelations, and even if he desired to glory in them, he refrained lest he might appear before them exalted above his [illegible] position. If he was inclined to be exalted in his own mind, God put a check upon him by a messenger of Satan to buffet him, to beat him back to a place of humility. Whatever this thorn in the flesh may have been, Paul looked upon it as a hindrance, and he prayed God that it might be taken away. He not only prayed once, but he continued to pray until the answer came that the hindrance was not to be removed, but there was "a way of escape made" in a great outflow of heavenly strength to overcome. "My grace is sufficient for thee" were the words that conveyed both the goodness and wisdom of God. As Paul had learned obedience, he bowed to the will of the Father. We need never be discouraged by a seeming delay in the answer to our prayers; do not stop asking, if the answer does not come just when we thing it should, for the Father knows when and how to best answer.

There is a relation that the soul bears to its Creator, so sacred and so solemn that none are admitted thereto. For the sake of these new converts of Paul, he has allowed them to enter his holy of holies; as they knew his outward manner of life, so should they see how the Father in Heaven watched over and cared for him. It is a blessing bestowed upon us that we can have the same sweet communion with the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

RESOLUTIONS IN MEMORY OF BISHOP WARD.

In view of the deplorable death of the late Bishop Ward, while at the post of duty on a foreign shore, we, the members of the Woman's Board of City Missions, desire to express our profound sorrow and sense of loss in the passing of this most faithful and able servant of God and chief pastor in our Church. Therefore, be it resolved:

First—That we express our sense of gratitude to Almighty God for the gift of this valued life and ministry to the Church and to the world.

Second—And more especially that we express our deep sense of appreciation for the helpful administration of the affairs of our Church in New Orleans during the entire period of his episcopal career. He has been with us as a wise and sympathetic adviser, a careful and effective executive, and inspiring leader and a commanding example of Christian consecration. Under his leadership the work of the Church has been extended, organized and strengthened to a far great degree of efficiency. He gave us his best and the fruits of his labors will abide the test of time and his memory will be cherished as one of the precious heritages of life. Of him it may be said, "I know thy works, and thy love and faith and ministry and and patience, and that thy last works are more than the first."

Third—That while we devoutly accept this dispensation of the Providence of Almighty God, we do mourn with a bereaved Church and the stricken family of Bishop Ward. We rest in the blessed assurance that our Bishop has indeed come "unto Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem." "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth, yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

Fourth—That a copy of these resolutions be published in The New Orleans Christian Advocate, The Nashville Christian Advocate, The New Orleans Times-Democrat, The New Orleans Picayune, and that a copy be transmitted to the family of Bishop Ward.

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property-holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property-holders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically not outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co. for a detailed explanation.

Certainly in taking revenge, a man is but even with his enemy, but in passing it over he is superior, for it is a prince's part to pardon.—Bacon.

The death angel visited the home of Brother and Sister J. M. Matthews, July 29, 1909, and claimed for its victim the person of little ELLIE ELKIN, the sixteen-year-old daughter. Ellie Elkin was a sweet-spirited, bright-faced, loving character, having united with the Tranquil Methodist Church three years prior to her death. She lived a pure, spotless Christian life. Her going away was so sudden, only having two days warning, that it left her dear mother, father, brothers and sisters in a state of great grief. She had a circle of many friends who are much bereft because of her departure. But we say to all, "Cheer up," while we cannot call sweet Ellie Elkin back to us, yet we can meet her in the sweet beyond where sadness is known no more. Her pastor,

M. A. BURNS.

On Sept. 21, 1909, Miss BETTIE OWEN entered triumphantly upon her heavenly reward. A genuinely, good woman and full of faith, being a member of the Methodist Church. She has ceased to suffer and wait. She was the oldest daughter of James and Amanda Owen. Only one sister survives her, Mrs. Eddie Crump, who mourns her going out from among us, and so suddenly. She was seemingly in good health when she was stricken with paralysis and lived only a few hours. How true it is, "In the midst of life, we are in death." She was indeed a friend and sister to those she loved, and from my earliest recullections, she cared for my early training. Her allegiance to truth was never questioned. For many years she was the constant help and companion of our aged mother. Her last few years she lived a very secluded life, having grown very deaf. She was a graduate of the Aberdeen Female College in 1863. Thank God our people die well, and we shall join them some day in the city of of our God.

HER SISTER.

RAYNER OWEN HINSON, son of A. and Sara Hinson, was born Aug. 1, 1902, and departed this life Oct. 21, 1909, at the home of his parents near Hinston, La. He was taken very suddenly and seriously ill about three days before his death, and in spite of loving care was soon gone. He was a bright, cheerful, affectionate and obedient child, bringing sunshine to those with whom he came in contact. His happy songs, and smiling face is missed at school, church and home. The thought of his empty chair makes our hearts sad, but when we remember the One who doeth all things well, we humbly say, "Thy will be done," for the little one awaits on the other shore for the bereaved family to have a grand reunion. A large circle of Christian friends extend their sympathy to the sorrowing ones, and would urge them to look up, for God has plucked the tender flower and transplanted it to bloom in a fairer clime.

"Ere sin could blight or sorrow fade,
Death came with friendly care.
The opening bud to heaven conveyed,
And bade it flourish there."

G. D. PURCELL.

Mrs. MARY WATSON was born Dec. 26, 1866, and died Sept. 27, 1909. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. V. J. Waddell, of Raymond. Old acquaintances of the family tell us that Sister Watson was greatly blessed in having very noble and consecrated parents who always performed their religious duties. She was married to Doctor T. F. Watson on Jan. 28, 1888. She united with the Methodist Church when she was a girl and remained a member until she was called away. She had been a sufferer for more than a year and hence was prevented from coming to church. She spoke quite a good deal about dying in her last hours on earth and told her loved ones that she was going to heaven, also she urged them to meet her in heaven. All these expressions were very comforting to all the loved ones and friends. There was a large crowd of people who attended her funeral. Sister Watson leaves a husband, one daughter and one son, one sister (Mrs. M. M. Ragan) and one brother (Mr. V. J. Waddell, Jr.), to mourn her departure. Let not the loved ones mourn as those who have no hope, for the very testimony of the departed loved one gives them the assurance that by and bye they may meet her in heaven if they will.

W. A. TERRY, P. C.

J. M. FULTON—Died Sept. 16, 1909. He lived 76 years, 7 months, and 2 days. He was twice married, first to Miss Orlena Avery, in 1856. To them were given four boys and four girls, two boys and one girl are still living. His second marriage was to Miss Nancy Caroline Hagerwood, in 1873, my only known living aunt. A boy was born to them who lived five months. Rev. E. L. Cargill, of Wilson Charge (La.) conducted his funeral services. He first joined the Baptist Church, but afterwards united with the M. E. Church, South, and was proud of her doctrines and polity. When able, he attended the regular church services, was a member of the Sunday School, worked in class and prayer meetings, served as steward and in other departments of church work. He was a devout reader of the dear old Advocate ever since I knew him. He was of great comfort and help to me when I was a boy. He expressed himself as being ready and willing to die. His remains repose in Silliman Cemetery, near Norwood, La. May his loved ones emulate his Christian example and devotion to God, and may his grace abundantly comfort and sustain them in this hour of bereavement!

J. C. ELLIS.

Mr. H. W. SHERRARD was born on the 30th of April, 1829, in Talbot County, Ga. He moved to Louisiana in 1851, where he spent the remainder of his life. He lived in different places until 1858, when he settled in Jackson Parish, near Vernon. He was married to Miss Sarah Coon, of Watchita Parish, May 1, 1855, with whom he lived a long and happy life. They had no children, but cared for others and raised several. He joined the Baptist Church in 1858. He served in the Civil War for three years and made an efficient soldier. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South during the year 1867 and lived a consistent Christian. He was a very useful man in the community. He served his ward for forty years as "justice of the Peace" and "parish judge." During the days of reconstruction he was the only Democrat that was elected turn after turn and after things were settled, he held on until a few months before his death, when he resigned owing to his failing memory and health. He was a member of the Methodist Church for forty-two years; was a steward, trustee and Sunday School superintendent most of the time. He was a counselor and great financial help for the pastor. He was a help to the needy in all circumstances and was a friend to the widow and was ever kind and chivalrous to ladies, and tender to children and forbearing to all men, magnanimous to those who opposed him and humane to brutes. He was very efficient wherever he served his fellowman in the army, in the community and in the church. Never very demonstrative, but steady in life and growth of character, morally and spiritually, and died in the assurance of faith, in the acceptance with God and man, June 14, 1909, being eighty years and a few days of age.

Chairman of Committee.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

NOTICE.

The Board of Education of the Louisiana Conference is requested to meet on Wednesday, 7:30 p. m., at the First Methodist Church, in Alexandria.

R. H. WYNN, Chairman.

NOTICE.

Applicants for admission on trial into the Louisiana Conference, M. E. Church, South, will meet the committee at 216, 13th St., Alexandria, La., 9:30 a. m., Dec. 7, 1909.

Let all applicants be prepared for a thorough written examination on subjects laid down in Discipline. Certificates from Correspondence School will be taken in lieu of an examination upon those subjects taken in that school. By order of committee diplomas from reputable colleges certificates of graduation in high schools of Louisiana will be accepted in lieu of an examination on the ordinary branches of an English education.

PAUL M. BROWN,
Chairman of Committee.

NOTICE.

The class of the second year, Louisiana Conference, are requested to meet at the Methodist Church, in Alexandria during the forenoon of Tuesday, Dec. 7. The chairman will give a lecture on Bible Study in the afternoon at some convenient hour. All undergraduates are invited to attend, and others welcome.

S. J. DAVIES.

NOTICE.

Those members of the class of the fourth year in the Louisiana Conference who desire to be examined are requested to meet the examination committee on Tuesday, Dec. 7, 9:30 a. m., at the First Methodist Church in Alexandria.

The entire class, including those who have taken the Correspondence Course, and those who have not prepared for examination, are requested to meet the committee at 3 p. m., in the same place.

R. H. WYNN,
Chairman.

NOTICE.

The Southwestern, and the Southeastern Passenger Associations have each made a reduced rate of one and a-third fare on the certificate plan. We are trying to get a straight rate without the trouble of certificates, but have not succeeded yet. In case we don't, let everybody get a certificate when you come, so we will be sure to have the required number.

The hotels and boarding houses have made special rates for the occasion as follows:

Hotel Bentley, European plan. Rooms from one dollar up. When occupied by two persons, 75 cents per day up. I will be glad to make arrangements in advance for any who may wish me to do so, but would prefer that you write to the hotels direct. It is not really necessary to write in advance.

Rapides Hotel, American plan. Special price of two dollars a day. Boarding houses can accommodate a limited number at one dollar a day.

Of course, we will entertain all preachers and lay delegates. I do not know how many preacher's wives we can entertain. About thirty have said they want to come. I wish I could throw open Alexandria's doors to all. I fear that the best I can do will be to get them special rates at the hotels and boarding houses. Write me about it if she wants to come. Certainly they are as much entitled to the pleasure of the trip as anybody.

I would like to know who are coming up for admission on trial and others whose names are not in the last copy of the Minutes. I would also like to know of any whose names are there who will not come. Before the delegates and preachers leave home I want to mail them a card telling them where to go direct from the train.

Urge your lay members to come as visitors. Bishop Candler is to open each session with a short address and there are many other features that will be interesting to all Methodists. I will appreciate an announcement from your pulpit of the rates etc., given above.

H. R. SINGLETON.

NOTICE, LOUISIANA PREACHERS.

I have just received a communication from Mr. W. C. Everette, of the Dallas Publishing House, that he will have on hand on Monday and Tuesday before the Conference session convenes on Wednesday, an ample supply of report blanks. It is expected that each preacher will have his report on file by the close of the first session of the Conference on Wednesday. It will be of great help to the Statistical Secretaries if these reports can be filed on Tuesday before the Conference begins.

I call special attention to the small amount assessed to each charge for Minutes. We trust that the full amount of the assessment will be raised. We were forced last year to send the Minutes collect because we did not have the funds to prepay the charges. We will dislike to repeat this another year. The amount is small, and all can get it.

R. W. VAUGHAN.

MILLSAPS ENDOWMENT FUND.

I am now sending out notices to all our friends who have subscribed to the Endowment Fund, asking them to send me amounts due by Dec. 1. It is very important that all these subscriptions be paid as promptly as possible. Should any of our friends desire to pay the entire amount of their subscriptions, we will appreciate it. Let all subscribers please send their money to me or hand to their pastor. I expect to be at Brookhaven two days, and at Okolona during Conference.

The great equipment of the soul-winner is character. It is a false notion that we must meet the world on its own level—drink to win the drinker, smoke to win the smoker, and play the world's games in order to win it to Christ.—Rev. Richard Hobbs.

FROM BLUE MOUNTAIN, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: We are still receiving contributions on our new church building at Blue Mountain (Miss.) and we trust our friends will continue to remember us until our debt is paid. Our membership there is still growing. We have recently held another revival with Rev. W. D. Bass, of Corinth, to do the preaching. We had the district tent and large crowds attended our services and twenty-five were added to our list. So far as our church was concerned in the beginning, Blue Mountain was purely home mission territory and every dollar sent us to put on our church debt will be spent on home missions in a worthy way. If we would build up our foreign work, let us do more for our home work. This preacher is happy in the work.

Our fourth Quarterly Conference will soon be held and we will be able to report 156 additions during the year and everything in full.

J. H. BASS.

Ripley, Miss.

P. S.—We have 112 on the Sunday School roll at Blue Mountain, and about 100 in attendance. J. H. B.

REV. L. M. LIPSCOMB.

Whereas, Brother L. M. Lipscomb has rounded out his four years of service as presiding elder on the Columbus District, North Mississippi Conference, and will therefore be sent to another field of labor at the approaching Annual Conference, therefore, be it resolved:

First—That in him, we bave had an earnest, faithful, and enlightened worker in our Master's cause, and that we feel that he has in all things been loyal to the very best and highest interests of the Church, and under his superintendency the work has advanced and prospered.

Second—That we wish to assure him of our love and appreciation, and commend him to those among whom he may in the future labor, as "a workman who needeth net be ashamed," and in every way worthy of their love and support. We invoke the richest blessings of our common Lord upon him, and pray that his ministry may have a rich fruitage.

Third—That a copy of these resolutions be spread on our Minutes and a copy be sent the New Orleans Advocate for publication.

R. E. V. YATES, SEC.

REV. W. C. HARRIS.

Whereas the time has come for the separation from us of our much-loved pastor, Rev. W. C. Harris, who has wrought so faithfully with us for the two years of his pastorate here; therefore be it resolved:

First—That as the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of New Albany, Miss., and as individual members thereof, we avail ourselves of this method and opportunity of expressing to him our high appreciation of his consecrated work in our behalf, and the helpful and edifying messages that have come to us from his lips as our preacher.

Second—That we also herein express to him our sincere regret that we are called upon to part with him and his beloved family, assuring him that we shall always remember him in love, and pray that the gracious Lord and Father will so direct that he shall be spared for many more years of faithful and efficient service to the Church of Christ.

Third—That a copy of these resolutions be given to Brother Harris and that a copy of same be published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

UNFORTUNATE SLAVE TO DRUGS.

If you happen to know of anyone, dear reader, whose life is being destroyed by addiction to morphine, cocaine or liquor, you can do him a favor by telling him of Dr. B. M. Woolley, the specialist in Atlanta, who is so successful in treating and curing such cases. Dr. Woolley has a record of over thirty years' continuous practice in his field and he succeeds in many instances where relatives—and the patient himself—had given up all hope of reformation. Perhaps there is some one in your town or neighborhood who would be overjoyed to know that there is a specialist in the South who can cure. Dr. B. M. Woolley and his son, Dr. Vassar Woolley, conduct the Victor Sanitarium in Atlanta. An able corps of nurses under the resident physician is maintained and all the appointments of the establishment are conducive to tranquility of mind and physical rejuvenation. Communications will reach Dr. Woolley at his office, 200 to 207 Lowndes Building, Atlanta, Ga.

TO PREVENT BLOOD-POISONING.

Every parent is a doctor and must treat the simpler maladies of his household as well as his domestic animals. Simple injuries sometimes lead to blood-poisoning. For festering cuts, bruises, old sores, chronic ulcers, boils, carbuncles, bone-felons, burns, poison oak and many other ailments, parents will find "Gray's Ointment" and ever-helpful and efficient friend. In thousands of homes all over America and in foreign countries Gray's Ointment has been the valued friend and helper of parents for more than half a century. Get a 25c. box at your druggist's, or if you have never used it, send your name for a small free trial box, which we will gladly send postpaid to demonstrate its value. Address, Dr. W. F. Gray & Co., 809 Gray Building, Nashville, Tenn.

Dr. Chas. R. Phelps, of Roberts, Mass., writes: "Gray's Ointment is my main dependence in cases of carbuncles, and unhealthy granulations, ulcers and blood-poisoning."

One Pill

It is impossible to be well, simply impossible, if the bowels are constipated. Waste products, poisonous substances, must be removed from the body at least once each day, or there will be trouble. The dose of Ayer's Pills is small, only one pill at bedtime. All vegetable.

Ask your doctor about Ayer's Pills, gently laxative, all vegetable. He knows why they act directly on the liver. J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

THE CLOSING OUT AT VERONA.

Our fourth Quarterly Meeting came off Wednesday, Nov. 3. There was a good turnout of the official board, as usual, at Verona. We had a religious time. Our presiding elder, Brother Felts, was on time, looking fine for a man who had preached more than thirty times the last month and traveled more than 400 miles, too, and as much more to do, in a little more than three weeks. But he was full of spirits—and preach too—did his work well. May he never grow less, or feebler. This has been a pleasant year to us; plenty of work to do, and warm weather to do it in, hut work is in the programme of all itinerant preachers who at all do their duty. D. V., we expect to be at Conference with a clean balance sheet, and to have a time of rejoicing with the brethren. Oh, what a time Conference is, and yet, they will end with some of us soon. I suppose some of our boys begin to feel a little shaky who have been pillowing their heads at the same place the last four years, but its all right, boys. I have tried it a few times. It's a good thing to let our people have rest from our old songs, and a new man come in with a new tune at least, and share the good things its been ours to enjoy. Well, really, we are not expecting many changes. However, some preachers get restless and ask for a change, but as a rule, the change is to their detriment. The greatest need in our Conference is one, or two more districts, that is, if we expect the presiding eldership to be cherished in the hearts of the people. Let the presiding elder be permitted to give each charge two days at a Quarterly Meeting, and come in contact with the masses of the people. We want more pastoral work instead of so much administration. I want our presiding elders appointed as they have been hitherto. I don't believe in the election idea, as has been suggested by some, neither do I believe in the superintendent's idea, or in admitting a layman from each charge to assist in the making of the appointments. Some one says, "Let the pastor hold his own Quarterly Meetings, and report to the superintendent"' Well, if anything ever did make me feel out of place, it was to have to hold my own Quarterly Meetings, act as president of a Quarterly Conference, ask questions, and answer as pastor; ask for a written report on the various subjects, and read them myself. I've had to try it a few times, but never with satisfaction to myself or the Conference. No, we want the presiding elder; he is a necessity to the most equitable way of distributing preachers among people. Let him have about fifteen appointments in his district, and he can be with the people enough to know what they need and who will suit them, better than the people themselves. Let us have no innovations on the presiding elders, but unhamper them, so they can do the work as they used to. I am far from helieving our presiding elders purposely afflict their preachers, and families, as has been asserted by some. If such is the case with any, the sooner they are deposed, the better for them and the church. Neither do I believe in the wholesale attacks made on our Bishops, as to their headiness in all cases, just for a favorite. Bishops are fallihle like other men, and get wrong information, and some times make some afflicting mistakes, hoth as to the preacher, and the people. As to the suggestions of subjects for the General Conference to legislate on: Let us keep out of radicalism. Keep our eyes open, and be prayerful, and do our own duty, and many of our troubles will adjust themselves.

FROM DECATUR, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: We have written little of late to our excellent Advocate. Perhaps we ought to have done better. The pastors should help make the Conference organs a success in every way. We adopt resolutions to that end and too many fail to carry them into effect.

Decatur Charge is moving to the front. We have a nohle, kind people; but lacking in thoroughness of organization and completeness of consecration. God is helping and we are moving in that direction. We confidently expect all claims upon the charge to be met in full. Our presiding elder, Rev. T. J. O'Neil, has heen faithful and efficient. If Newton District is not to the front it will not be his fault.

We are in great need of houses of worship at Union, Neshoba and McDonald. We are moving earnestly to the end that this need may he supplied as early as possihle. If our Conference Board of Church Extension will help as we shall ask, Union will build soon and well. Our people have a mind to work. May we not hope friends whom God has favored with means will send us much-needed help? Any amount sent Mr. Percy Williams, Union, Miss, or the undersigned, Decatur, Miss., will be promptly acknowledged. and our Treasurer, Mr. T. J. Mitchell, will keep a permanent record of the same. This record will show, when the enterprise has been completed the amount each contributor has given. Union is a growing town in Newton County, on the M. G. and K. C. railroad. Owing to the short crops our people have suffered, in common with other sections, causing some to fear we might not be able to huild. But our needs compel us; we dare not delay, or hesitate. I shall be glad to report progress. If you can not send us material help, remember us in your prayers that God may open the way to success.

A REAL BLESSING

What a blessing is perfect health! What enjoyment there is in feeling well! Life is all pleasure, and work is but play. But if one is continually ailing, life seems scarcely worth living.

Thousands of women suffer, continually or periodically, from the ills or weakness peculiar to their sex. Pain kills pleasure, hinders the performance of their daily duties and makes them most wretched.

Countless women, suffering such ills, have found relief or cure in that old, reliable medicine, especially prepared for women,—Wine of Cardui. Thousands of these grateful ladies write to tell what Cardui has done for them.

We recently had this letter from Mrs. Annie Vaughan, of Raleigh, N. C.: "I cannot find words to express my deep gratitude for what your wonderful medicine, Cardui, did for me, for I sincerely believe it saved my life. I was sick and worn out, almost unto death. My sister finally persuaded me to take Cardui. Before I had taken 5 bottles I was well and strong."

Cardui is a pure, vegetable remedy, which acts gently and naturally on the womanly system. If you are nervous, weak or sick, try Cardui. Get it at once. 'Twill help you.

OUR MASTER'S INVITATION THROUGH US.

Luke xiv. 16:24; I Cor. ix:19-23.

(For the Fellow-Workers' Covenant.)

The Master has prepared for us a great feast, and bidden all who will, to come and partake of the good things of his kingdom. The Christ has purchased our redemption, and prepared the mansions where men may dwell in glory forever. There is everything to make this eternal home attractive. It is free from the cares which have oppressed earth, and the sorrows and pains which have afflicted us here, shall not trouble us there. Everything in the inspired record of heaven appeals to the highest and noblest that is in man.

The absolute prerequisites to entrance into the city of God are the abandonment of sin, and the cancelation of the past penalties for sin resting upon the soul. This is provided for amply in the death and suffering of the Lord Jesus Christ. The Lord has provided a salvation ample to take in all the world. There must be a personal acceptance of Christ, and he must obtain control. He provides ample grace to enable every man to live for him. He must be to every man, "Lord and Master."

The proclamation of this invitation has been left in the hands of men. If men hear the story of salvation, it must come through their fellow-men. Almost every Christian has not only responded to some general invitation to come to Christ, but he has been the object of a personal appeal. Some one has prayed for him, and plead with him. It is probable that more men are brought to the Master through the personal appeal than in any other way.

It behooves every child of God to consider carefully who he is taking with him in the road to heaven. If you believe that hell lies in one direction and heaven in the other, you should be anxious about every man that seems to be going the wrong way. If you meet with your friend for years, without asking him to accept your Master there is but one of two conclusions left. Either you do not believe that the man who lives and dies without Christ will spend eternity in hell, or else you do not care for him, and your friendship is only a fiction. Or to put it on the other side of the same question, you think he may gain heaven without the help of Jesus, or else heaven is not worth winning.

The Master sends not only the preacher, but all his servants out into the highways and hedges to compell men to come in. You should study the zeal and tact of Paul, who was ready to become all things to all men, if by any means he might save some. Those that you want for Christ, are very apt to want to know your Lord.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

CLASS OF THE FIRST YEAR.

The class of the first year will meet at the Methodist Church in Okolona at 10 a. m., Nov. 30. Correspondence certificates will be accepted, but they will not "cover" the refusal to meet with the class. Take notice!

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTICE.

There comes an urgent request from the General Sunday School Board for reports from individual schools, as well as from charges, after the manner of a new blank, form for which has been mailed to each pastor, together with the blanks for each superintendent, or secretary to fill out. Please get these reports as accurately as possible that we may have the data for the "Year-Book" next year.

If your charge, or your school does not appear therein, please do not blame us, unless the report is handed in.

These reports should be in the hands of Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, or the undersigned, on or before the first day of Conference.

Should you prefer mailing them to either of us at Okolona, do so and avoid trouble for yourself and us.

R. P. NEBLETT, Agt.
Shelby, Miss.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

To the Preachers of the North Mississippi Conference—

Dear Brethren: As president of the Conference Board of Education, I write to urge you to raise every dollar assessed against your charge for education. The income at Millsaps College from tuition and from endowment is somewhat less than usual, and therefore, the need of full collections is more imperative than usual. See to it that as great a per cent. is paid on education as on any thing else, and do not let that be less than one hundred. The needs of Grenada College are similar to those of Millsaps. Let equal justice be done all the collections.

Respectfully, E. S. LEWIS,
Pres. Board of Education.
Winona, Miss.

ADMISSION ON TRIAL.

The committee will meet the class for admission on trial into the North Mississippi Conference at Okolona, Monday night, Nov. 29, 7 p. m., at the Methodist Church.

E. S. LEWIS,
J. A. HALL,
W. E. M. BROGAN,
Committee.

REDUCED RATES TO THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The Southwestern Passenger Association has agreed to give reduced rates from all points in Mississippi except on the Alabama Great Southern for the approaching session of the North Mississippi Conference at Okolona, Miss. In order to secure this reduction for the return journey, delegates and visitors must obtain from ticket agents a certificate that full fare has been paid for each ticket purchased in going to the Conference.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way, and it Costs Nothing to Try.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty-five years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salve, cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach, as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

Enchantment For a Hundred Nights

"Dreamland" Calendar

What Margaret E. Sangster Says of it!

"There is not a Mother, or, for that matter, a Grandmother, in this wide land, from coast to coast, who will not want the 'Dreamland' Calendar for her own, as soon as she sees it. The artist has chosen an ecstatic moment in home life, when the household darling, weary with play, has been caught in the toils of slumber. Here she lies, every muscle relaxed, the dimpled hands and the dancing feet quiet in repose. It is all one can do to keep from dropping a kiss on the rosy cheek; but we must not do that, for we might waken the baby and call her back from Dreamland.

"The 'Dreamland' Calendar will lend an additional touch of grace to the family's best room. It will win a smile from the tired father who cares as much for the little maid as the mother herself. Here is our darling fast asleep. Sleeping or waking, she is the joy of the house.

"The Christian Herald has offered its readers many beautiful Calendars, but this one surpasses all former productions."

"PROVE ALL THINGS; HOLD FAST THAT WHICH IS GOOD."

WHOLE No. 2807.

Glances at the World.

Whatever may have been the intention of Mr. Rockefeller in giving a million dollars to fight "the hook-worm disease in the South," he little knew what he was doing—what feelings he was stirring up. The resentment is widespread, and naturally so, since the large gift emphasizes the idea that the hook-worm disease is peculiar to the South, and general among the people, and; further, because it emphasizes the idea, causing it to go all over the world, that the Southern people are a lazy and thriftless set. We may write ourself down as ignorant, and a back number, but we declare that not until recently did we ever hear of the hook-worm, and have never met an individual said to be afflicted by it. We do not pretend to doubt the existence of hook-worms, or any other kind of worms that scientists say prey on and in the human system. Our belief is founded solely on the word of medical experts, and they lead us to believe that hook-worms are as fond of Northern stomachs as the stomachs of the "poor white trash" of the South. "A hygienic expert" just completed a tour of Texas, Arkansas, Tennessee, Georgia, South Carolina, Ohio, New York, the District of Columbia and a part of Alabama. This expert declared in Nashville a few days ago that there are "fully ten times as many sufferers from the parasites in New York as in the factory district of Alabama." So, there now! And, most of all, this expert said: "I have found many victims among the wealthier classes in the best residence districts of New York city." The next thing we know, the homes of "the four hundred" will be infested with hook-worms. What a pity! Will Mr. Rockefeller turn his attention to New York? He should do so before the tide of immigration is turned entirely towards the great West, where men are so robust that the hook-worm cannot get a hold on their vitals.

Once more it has been demonstrated that it makes no difference in which section men reside, if they are stirred to wrath and lose their senses, they will all alike commit outrages against the law. At Cairo, Ill., an original free State, and the State of Lincoln, a negro outraged and murdered a pure and innocent young white woman. The people were aroused soon after the discovery of her dead body, and in a little while wellnigh the whole city was a howling mob. The negro escaped, but was captured and brought back. The mob could scarcely restrain itself while the posses were in pursuit of the criminal. They were in a mood for anything, and when the authorities caught the criminal, they were quickly overpowered and the criminal taken from them. He was brought back to the city, hanged and his body shot to pieces. This taste of blood whetted the mob's appetite, and after lynching the negro the jail was stormed, and a white man, who, several months before had murdered his wife with an ax, was taken out, hanged to a telephone pole, and "his body riddled with bullets." How many persons were engaged in the lynching, of course, is not known, but it is said that the tearful work was "witnessed by at least 10,000 people," and Cairo is not a large city. As usual, in such cases, the verdict of the coroner's jury was: "Met death at the hands of persons unknown to the jury." Thus, not only do our Northern fellow-citizens engage in lawlessness when provoked, but their juries are as ignorant of the perpetrators of the crime as their Southern neighbors under similar circumstances. Not until Cairo was well under guard by companies of soldiers was quiet restored.

A strange and unaccountable thing has been made public by one of the most prominent advocates of woman suffrage. Installed in "a booth" at the recent State Fair in Shreveport, the delegation was visited by many people, some of whom the fair advocates said "had never heard of woman suffrage—some actually thought it was something about a patent medicine." Surely the North Louisiana school teacher must be abroad. But the unaccountable thing is the fact that "of the men who came to the booth, every one upon whom they could make no impression wore purple socks." That was "a coincidence," indeed. They must also have worn short trousers or very low-quartered shoes. The statement leads us to infer that the opponents of woman suffrage in North Louisiana are numerous. Or, were they so few as to attract attention? Would it not be sad if some day the lady expresses sorrow that she made known her observation? She certainly will if the trade in "purple socks" is largely increased. For a short time we are going to, as opportunity offers, watch the sock bargain counter, and take a glance at the feet of every man we meet. "Purple socks" from this time on we will look upon as a sign.

A youth in Louisiana under arrest for killing a man or a youth like himself, may possibly escape trial by jury—the issue depending on his age at the time of the killing, the law of Louisiana requiring persons under seventeen years of age, charged with criminal offenses to be tried in juvenile courts. The youth's lawyer admitted in court that the accused "reached his seventeenth birthday three weeks before the crime was committed, but contended that the law explicitly says 'seventeen or under,' and that a person is not seventeen years old until he has reached his eighteenth birthday." Of course, the lawyer was correct, counting the day a person is born as the first birthday. On the second birthday, the age would be one year, and so counting when a person reaches the eighteenth birthday, full seventeen years have been lived—no less. But why should there be any question or contention about the matter? The accused boy committed the crime "last June," three weeks after his birthday. The question, therefore, whether he was seventeen years old at the time of the killing depends on whether he was born in 1892 or 1893. If he was born, say, May 15, 1892, May 15, 1909, was his eighteenth birthday, but he was only seventeen years old. If he was born May 15, 1893, on May 15, 1909, he was only sixteen years old, although it was his seventeenth birthday. The family record, if any was kept, should settle the matter. In view of these figures, it is folly to talk about referring the question to the Supreme Court of the State, as suggested by a "special dispatch to the Times-Democrat."

What are common people to do, and the uncommon ones, too, if all our theories of life and methods of living are to be overturned and set aside? In the Scientific World, the editor is a layman—he takes what he gets in that line, at second hand, seldom presuming to deny or dispute; but he long since came to the conclusion that if germs, microbes, bacteria and other things, together with bad smells, are as dangerous to human life as some try to make believe, the human family, excepting possibly that part Dr. Cook associated with in the Arctic regions, would have long since been extinct. And if these things are not sufficient to scare the people out of their wits, there comes another doctor with patients in a big sanitarium who has printed a long list of "dangerous foods," viz., as we quote: "cane sugar, fats, flesh foods, including fish, oysters, lobsters, etc.; eggs, milk, coarse vegetables, such as spinach, cabbage, turnips, etc.; condiments, including salt and pepper; tea, coffee, chocolate, cocoa and all alcoholic drinks. This leaves practically only cereals, potatoes, nuts and fruits. The skin and seeds of fruits are forbidden; this practically cuts off cherries, prunes, dried apricots, figs, dates, raisins, currents, and most grapes, unless strained of objectionable parts. Peas and beans are admissible, if passed through a colander to remove hulls." We do not know whether that doctor lives in Battle Creek, Michigan, or not, but we venture to say that the biggest part of the diet of his patients is a "proprietary" food-stuff, rolled thin, and "predigested," so-called. Whither shall we go, if mother nature turns against us? We retain still our faith in plain country food—hog and hominy, cabbage, beans and potatoes, and chicken occasionally, if cooked and served like it is done at Smith's Chapel in Mississippi.

Two cases before the highest courts of the country are attracting general attention. One is the case of Sheriff Shipp, of Chattanooga, charged with contempt of the Federal Court. A negro was tried and convicted of assault before the State Court, and sentenced. His lawyer appealed to the United State's Court on the ground that, "As a citizen, he had been denied his rights." This appeal transferred the negro from the custody of the State officer to the custody of the Federal Court. Pending the appeal, and while still in care of Sheriff Shipp, the negro was lynched. Sheriff Shipp was adjudged guilty of contempt in that he "failed to protect the prisoner." He appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, which court sustained the ruling, and the Sheriff, with five or six others, parties to the case, were sentenced to short terms in prison. The other is the case of Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor; John Mitchell, vice-president, and Secretary Morrison, charged with contempt for violating a Federal Court injunction. The Buck's Stove Company, of St. Louis, secured an order to put an end to a boycott instituted and put in operation by the unions of which these men were chief officers. They disobeyed the injunction, and trial and conviction for contempt of court resulted. They were sentenced each to six months imprisonment. It looks now as if they will have to go to prison. The Federation is mightily stirred—not to say wrought up to anger, and some talk of doing rash things. We are unable to pass judgment on the merits of the matter involved, but we feel competent to say that if the Federal Court has adjudged the men guilty, there is but one thing to do, and that is, accept the judgment and abide the consequences. Redress cannot be obtained by boycotts, nor by a general strike as is threatened, but by appeal to an enlightened public—the only tribunal competent to change the laws of the land.

MAN'S DUTY TO HIMSELF, HIS NEIGHBOR AND ESTABLISHED AUTHORITY.

By Rev. J. T. Lewis.

It is my purpose to cite both a general and a specific principle of moral action under each of the above heads. By many who boast of church loyalty the specific principle in each case will be branded as a narrow-minded conception. However, the principles are in reality very broad-minded, when beheld from the proper view point. When one takes a field-glass and stands fifty feet from a large building and views said building with the large end of the glass next to one's eyes; the building appears to be at a great distance from the beholder—it also seems to be an insignificant building. It is at a distance and insignificant in appearance, only. The "appearance" is caused by the distortion which is the result of that through which the building has been beheld. So, too, is it with these apparently "narrow-minded" conceptions, that are, in reality, broad-minded principles. Those who brand them as narrow-minded are getting that distorted view because of the reversed position of the glass through which the principles are beheld. Before his trip to Damascus, Paul was controlled by "narrow-minded" conceptions of the principles of Christianity. But by following the leading of God's voice, Paul had the field glass put before his eyes in the right position. Then the previously-conceived "narrow-minded and insignificant" principles, as taught by Christ, loomed up before him as the greatest and most important principles of life. There are many of us who need to have that same experience with which Paul was blessed, while on his way to Damascus When man looks at all phases of life from God's view-point, his attitude toward the world is always in line with Paul—after the roadside experience.

I.

Man has no moral right to do anything that will injure himself either physically, intellectually or spiritually. His own highest good and happiness demands the strictest care and consideration for himself. Each individual has a God-given right to all the happiness that is incident to a healthy body, mind and soul. Hence none can have moral right to injure himself in any capacity.

Especially is the foregoing true relative to all converted men and women. Paul strikes the key-note in I Cor. iii:16-17: "Know ye not that ye are the Temple of God, and that the spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy: for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." Of course, everybody believes that when Paul wrote the above he had just returned from a ball, "was sippng the cup," had that week won a cut-glass punch bowl at a progressive euchre party and was at that specific moment gravely sucking at one end of a Havana cigar (?). Paul got God's view-point of sin; holiness and cleanliness. With him to be a Christian was to shine before the world in God's image. As far as the strength within him lay, by God's help, he lived a perfect life. And when any man comes to God through repentance and faith, he becomes a "new creature," and at once projects his life upon the basis of justice, love, mercy and cleanliness—that is, he thus acts as if he apprehends the thought that Christ came to save man from sin. Of course, if he looks upon Christ simply as a life-insurance agent, he will have no more interest in him and his kingdom than apparent duty thrusts upon him.

II.

No man has a moral right to injure his neighbor or his neighbor's interest. All the laws upon our statute books look toward securing to all men protecton from those who might disregard the above principles.

If the above principle be true relative to the material world, it is doubly true of God's kingdom upon earth. The underlying principle upon which God's kingdom is established is love. "Love suffereth long and is kind." "Love seeketh not her own." Paul says, in I Cor. 8-13: "Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, less I make my brother to offend." That is a narrow-minded conception of one's duty as a Christian, though! If Paul were living to-day, he would be a liberal-minded "man." He was the victim of his age. Yes, and if Christ were among us to-day the world and her sympathizers would, if they dared, place a crown of thorns upon his head and force him to carry a cross for his own crucifixion, only to-day they would hang and shoot him. And Why? Because of his adherence to the principle that no man has a moral right to injure his neighbor, and because the stronger should help the weaker.

III.

No man has a moral rght to defy established authority. There is no principle of right underlying anarchism. And he is an anarchist, at heart, who willfully and premeditatedly projects his life on a basis contrary to the teachings of established law. No good citizen will deny the truth of the above principle.

And yet, if for the highest interest of the State loyalty to her laws must be had, much more is it true that the laws, rules and regulations of the Church demand obedience, that the end of the establishment of the Church may be realized. When the laws, rules and regulations of the representative denominations were made it was by the biggest-hearted and broadest brained set of men that could be gotten together. And their object was to embody the Christ's principle of life in all the laws rules and regulations made. Then, too, the obligation to keep said laws was a voluntary, yet a most sacred, vow. If the spirit of anarchism deserves condemnation in things civil, much more so does it in things denominational. "Let every soul be subject to the higher powers."

Cleveland, Miss.

A NEEDED LEGISLATION.

I have just read the article from H. P. Lewis, Jr., in the Advocate of Nov. 4th., relative to our next General Conference passing a law prohibiting the use of tobacco by the ministers of our Church.

I am heartily in favor of such legislation if it will only apply to those ministers who are to be elected in the future. Even were it possible to pass a law prohibiting its use by all of our ministers, I do not think it would be advisable to do so.

The use of tobacco is in one sense a disease, and my observation is, that after a man has used it for years it is exceedingly difficult for him to give it up. Of course, I suppose any one at any time could give up tobacco by exercising great will power, or by getting an extra endowment of power from on high. But it is too much to expect all those who have used it from their youth to give it up in the weakness of their declining years, such a law could hardly be enforced.

Let us have a law requiring all future ministerial candidates to forever abstain from the use of tobacco. Such a law could be passed without seriously embarrassing any one, and it could be easily enforced.

Personally, I am opposed to the use of tobacco by any one, and am especially opposed to Methodist preachers using it. In this day, when children are everywhere being educated as to the harm and folly of using tobacco, the pastor who uses it must find it a serious impediment to his usefulness.

Fortunately, not many of our ministers use it and the number is growing less. It has been many years since our charge was served by a pastor who used tobacco, such an one would not be acceptable to our best people. Doubtless, the same is true of other charges.

COUNTRY CHURCHES—THE MEMBERSHIP.

By a Local Preacher.

It is an unquestionable fact that the great mass of the membership of our churches in the country do not realize their obligation to the church. They do not feel the weight and seriousness of the vows taken when they united with the church. There is not one in ten, perhaps, that measures up to the obligations that rest upon them. Especially is this true when it comes to the financial interest of the church. What many of our people pay (what little they do pay) depends on how well the preacher suits their fancy, regardless of his real ability, or his faithfulness to his calling. They seem to lose sight of the command, "That whatsoever ye do, do as unto the Lord," but do as unto men, and, too, many of our people in the country form a "fixed" opinion of the preacher the first time they hear him preach. And in many instances it takes the greater portion of the year for the preacher to disabuse the individual's mind of the erroneous ideas that have found their way to the more or less uninformed mind, and to overcome the more or less prejudiced heart.

If the new preacher happens to "catch" the folks on his first round (and retains his prestige with them), he is likely to have pretty smooth sailing, provided he does not say money to them. But just as sure as he mentions money to them in a "matter-of-fact" way, the folks will sour, and some will even become offended. Why is this? It is not because our people are not pious, nor is it because they do not love the Church. But why, I repeat, this state of affairs in so many of our congregations in the country? There is but one answer. It is for lack of information on the part of the masses. Many of country people know but very little about what our church is doing, or of her great need.

What a change there would be in the country churches, if we could only get the people to read something on their duty to God and man and their privileges as Christians! And it does seem to me that any member could afford to take one or more of our splendid church papers. I sometimes think it would be a paying business to our church to put men in the field to represent the literature of the church, and to circulate papers and good books. We ought to sell a hundred times as much literature as we now sell. The profits on the sales of these would be the least part of the gain. Our people would become enlightened and soon our church would be doubled in strength along the financial line, which is the weakest point in our system among the country folks.

The regular pastors haven't time to look after this work as it should be. Look at the Laymen's Movement! They only act as they become informed.

This Conference year is nearing its close. Let every member of the church do his or her part to send the pastor up to the Annual Conference with a glad heart and a smile on his face, because of having a full report in hand; and if you do not like him as you would like to, get down on your knees and ask God to show you your own heart. You remember, when deep sorrow enshrouded your home, your faithful pastor was there to cheer and comfort your heart. If not this, you asked your pastor to pray for that wayward boy, or that thoughtless girl; and did he fail you? Nay; he stood by you in the darkest hours. Then, remember that we ought to honor these faithful men of God for their work's sake. Remember that God is beholding the scene, and knows our every intent and purpose of heart, and shall reward us accordingly.

(Note by the Editor—Local Preacher brings some serious charges against some members of some country churches. We hope the charges will not apply generally. Of course they do not, for very many of our intelligent and liberal members live in the country. But let everybody who may feel hurt at what "Local Preacher" says be assured that he lives in the country, and knows the country people. He has their good at heart. "Local Preacher" will not take it amiss if we remind him that, as he lives in the country, he has a fair opportunity to circulate good books and papers. "The field is white unto harvest.")

THE SANCTIFICATION OF THE BODY.

By Rev. Robt. B. Downer.

While much has been said and written about the sanctification of the soul, great prominence has not been given to the needs of the body.

Christ while manifest in the flesh, showed earnest concern for the physical well-being of humanity—daily ministering to the sick, halt and blind. "As many as touched him were made whole."

The execution of God's will in heaven demands a perfection of capabilities (it is inconceivable to think of a diseased or crippled angel); even so, to do God's will on earth as in heaven requires the greatest possible perfection of our humanity, and while in this lower realm where the ravages of sin abound and he is pleased to to reward all degrees of service, yet the standard, "Be thou perfect, even as the Father in heaven is perfect," remains in force. We are to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ—able to be aggressive, putting on armor that will not admit of a retreat.

Specific commands have been given: "Present your bodies as a living sacrifice;" "Know ye not that your bodies are the Temple of the Holy Ghost?" "Ye are not your own, ye have been bought with a price, therefore glorify God in your bodies and spirits which are his."

"And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly, and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Faithful is he that calleth you who also will do it." "I keep under my body and bring it into subjection, lest by any means when I have preached unto others I myself should be a castaway."

These Scripture quotations indicate that the discipleship to Christ requires the sanctification of the body, as well as the spirit and soul of man. The manifestation of the soul's regeneration finds demonstration through the agency of our bodily members—eyes, ears, tongues, hands and feet. The Scripture found in Ezekiel, xxxvi:26, says: "And the heathen shall know that I am the Lord, saith the Lord God, when I shall be sanctified in you before their eyes."

Then, Christ said: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily, and follow me." It is plainly evident that the enthronement of Christ in the daily life, manifested in our material corporeality is the ideal of what constitutes true discipleship to Christ. Any life that attempts duality of action will result in failure.

Accepting the view that bodily perfection is necessary to a successful Christian service, the solution to many supposed debatable habits, appetites and tempers, is easy of attainment. For instance, the tobacco habit, is it sinful? We have but to ascertain whether or not, if tobacco is food, nourishing all portions of the body, or a poisonous stimulant, that constantly used, produces an abnormal state of health; then, again, is its use offensive in any way to others; does its indulgence deflect the money talent into channels that conflict with Christian duty?

Try the whisky habit, the drug habit, yea, every other habit by the above rule, you may find that coffee, pound cake, ice cream, produces an abnormal state of health; if so, remember the command: "Whatsoever ye do, whether ye eat, or drink, do all to the glory of God." The writer draws the line at eating watermelons for himself.

Then again, the clothes worn may need investigation. Clothing is needed for comfort and protection; there is no special scriptural law designating shape or style. Of course, when shape infringes upon God's model lines of the human form divine, the loyal disciple will prefer to offend Parisian modistes rather than the Lord Jesus Christ.

Some there are that condemn the Chinese fashion for women's shoes, while their own waist measurement is a reflection on the wisdom of the Allwise Creator. St. Paul, in his first letter to Timothy (ii:9-10), gives an opinion upon the dress question that has value for Christ's disciples. The dress habit has its tragedies that are not God's providences. Not long since, Editor Winton, of the Nashville Advocata, had a few paragraph editorials expressive of some exhibitions of temper on the part of ministers of the gospel in using a phone, and about the home.

A sanctified temper is a valuable asset, but when unsanctified—well—even the heathen will stand afar off. Unsanctified tempers wreck nerve tissues, inflict pain upon others, sometimes sundering friendship, wrecking homes, producing premature deaths. Many are born to a heritage of bodies exceeding frail and imperfect, or by accident are relegated to the abnormal class—what is expected at their hands? The parable of "The Talents," is God's rule of demand and reward. Christ has use for fragments, as nothing must be lost. A crippled hand may yet present a cup of cold water in his name. Sanctified "shut-ins," are capable of a ministry honoring to the Master, for he despises not the day of small things. Sanctified bodies are capable of more endurance—give basis for sane, wise judgment, make possible a long life, with great freedom from aches, sickness and premature death; make possible the largest enjoyment of divine companionship in time and throughout eternity; it pays, if only for an earthly existence.

TALLULAH AND DELHI.

Dear Brother Boswell: We are closing up the year's work at Tallulah and Delhi with fair success. We have had up to date twenty accessions and have baptized nineteen infants. We closed a meeting at Delhi last week in which some good was done. I was assisted in this meeting by Brother W. L. Hunter, of Floyd, who did some fine work, both in preaching and singing. He is fine help.

I am now engaged in a meeting at Tallulah in which I am being assisted by Brother C. W. Crisler. I need not tell you that the preaching is being done well.

Last Friday the good people of Tallulah gave us quite a pleasant surprise in the shape of what we call a pounding. But it was one of those poundings that does not hurt, but rather makes us feel good and willing for it to be repeated. The pounding consisted of a half barrel of flour, a ham, rice, butter, sugar and coffee and other things in abundance, and along with the rest, a nice purse of $22 in money. We appreciate their kindness and extend to them a cordial invitation to come again. R. O. WIER.

FROM DAVIS CHAPEL, LONGTOWN CIRCUIT.

My Dear Brother: For some time past I have been thinking of writing to the ADVOCATE, but kept putting it off until I read your timely editorial on "The Evening Sermon." Surely, it was a word fitly spoken. Solomon, the wise man, says: "A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver." Your words appeared that way to me, as soon as I read them. Our church will never grow in grace and wisdom as long as the Sunday evening concerts and musicals are allowed to take the place of the regular service, including the sermon.

I am away behind with my writing to you in regard to our meeting at the old, time-honored church, Davis Chapel, but it is better late than never, and I am sure you will be glad to hear a good report from the dear old church. Brother Shearer, our preacher, was promptly there the third Sunday in August, on fire, and full of the Holy Ghost. Brother McGee, of Jackson, Miss., assisted him, preaching with great power. Dear Brother Earnhardt was with us again, and with his good talks and prayers made us feel that it was good to be there. Eight (8) persons were added to the church on profession of faith, and one by letter. The whole church seemingly was revived.

We have this year so much to be thankful for—both of spiritual and temporal good. May God, in his boundless mercy, help us to make some suitable return for his goodness, and finally save us in heaven. Your loving sister,

LUCY E. TROTTER.

(Note—Long years ago, as junior preacher, we enjoyed "refreshing times" at the old chapel; then included in the Sardis Circuit. Rev. Robert Martin was preacher-in-charge, and Brother Benbury Walton led the singing. The circuit was large, embracing eleven preaching places, besides five extra appointments to the negroes, which were filled, some in the afternoon, and some at night. No circuit in the Memphis Conference (to which Sardis belonged) in that day boasted of as many fine church buildings as did the Sardis, not even "Old Wesley Circuit," in Tennessee, which was ahead of Sardis in other particulars. It is refreshing, after the lapse of so many years, to learn that Davis Chapel is still alive, and from the pen of an own dear sister, whose large family contributes to the life of the Church.—Editor.)

PORT GIBSON FEMALE COLLEGE ANNEX.

At the opening of the Port Gibson Female College in the fall of 1907, more boarding students appeared than could be taken care of in the college dormitories proper. Rev. W. H. Lewis, pastor, and his wife, kindly arranged some rooms at the parsonage, and twelve of the students were lodged there. As it was evident that this could not be a permanent arrangement, the trustees of the college proposed in their report to the Annual Conference that fall, that if the Conference itself would arrange to contribute $500 each year for an enlargement fund, the trustees would pledge themselves to raise a similar amount each year. The trustees were very much gratified to learn at the close of the Conference that this amount had been assessed by a unanimous vote. Encouraged by this, the trustees and the president of the college made some effort early in the following spring to enlarge the capacity of the college by doubling the size of the "old" or "brick" dormitory, but as this undertaking seemed too heavy at that time, it was temporarily deserted.

The trustees, however, in order to meet the present emergency made purchase in May, 1908, of a residence-building convenient to the college to be used for dormitory purposes until the brick enlargement could be accomplished. Accordingly, since the opening of the session of 1908, fifteen or sixteen teachers and students have been housed in this building, which was named "College Annex." The purchase price of this property was $2500, the trustees making a cash payment of $625, and expending $300 or $400 upon improving the building. But through somebody's error or neglect, the above assessment was not apportioned among the districts before the Conference adjourned, and the Conference, instead of paying its full $500, found itself able to pay only $326.65. The trustees and friends of the college were much disappointed at not getting the full $500, and more disappointed because the next Conference voted down the appropriation of the second $500 altogether, thus causing the trustees to feel that the Conference did not approve of the effort made to enlarge and develop the school, at least to the extent of giving further material assistance. The above-named $326.65 paid by the Conference has been applied upon the notes that are due, but nothing has been done in that direction since. The matter rests thus. The Annex was deeded to the Mississippi Conference in such a way that it cannot be sold except with the consent and vote of the Conference. Must we ask the Conference to sell it and take a backward step? We are going to make another appeal to the Conference to help us. The college not only needs this enlarged dormitory capacity, but needs enlarged recitation room capacity. One or two classes are now having to meet in rooms that are too dark for this purpose. In warm, sunshiny days, they meet out-of-doors.

Other schools in our region and throughout our State are being built upon a splendid scale, and we sincerely trust that the members of the Mississippi Conference will decide that it is wise to assess $1000 a year for two or three years until this brick enlargement can be made. Our school is doing a great work for the daughters of this part of the Mississippi valley, and we hope to see its perpetuity insured.

We may add that every dollar given by the Conference and the friends of the school during the past five years has been handled by the trustees themselves and used only for the improvement of the realty, the president of the college refusing to handle the money himself, although he and a representative from the board of trustees have formed a committee to let all contracts for improvements or enlargements.

LETTER FROM DR. T. C. WIER.

It was my great privilege last summer to attend two meetings with Rev. J. F. Rogers, pastor of Chester Circuit, Durant District. First, there was South Union Camp-meeting, three miles west of Ackerman, beginning Friday night, July 23. By invitation of the pastor, I preached the opening sermon, and held two children's services. I remained during the greater part of the meeting; enjoyed the association of the brethren, the hospitality of the good people, and the services of the tabernacle. The encampment is well located. There were twenty-eight or thirty substantial tents, nearly all occupied. The shelter, or tabernacle, for preaching, was ample in size, and the altar place was carpeted with straw, after the orthodox style of former days. This camp-meeting has been kept up, with scarcely a break, for many years. It was said that most of the young people were already members of the church. Others were added during the meeting.

Besides the writer, other visiting brethren were present—Revs. W. N. Duncan, of Durant; E. E. Langford, of Louisville Circuit; N. G. Augustus, presiding elder; J. W. Rogers, of Water Valley; and J. D. Simpson, of Ackerman Circuit. The sermons by these brethren were earnest gospel messages, and were listened to by attentive congregations. Who can estimate the good that has been accomplished by South Union Camp-meeting, maintained through so many years—the souls won for Christ and the believers that have been cheered and furthered on their way to the heavenly kingdom?

I was with Brother Rogers, again, in a four-days' meeting at Mount Nebo, beginning Sunday, Aug. 1. The congregation here was composed largely of children and young people, most of whom were, perhaps, members of the church. Others joined during the meeting. The congregations were well-behaved and attentive to the Word.

Brother Rogers is closing his fourth year on Chester Circuit. And if this year closes as the three former, it will doubtless be a record-breaking quadennium for Chester Circuit with its six or seven appointments. The pastor's salary and all the assessments paid in full for the four years, and many additions to the church. A good preacher and a faithful pastor. May he receive the recognition and a good appointment at our approaching Conference.

Rev. L. M. Lipscomb will close his quadrennium on Columbus District at the approaching session of Conference. Brother Lipscomb has demonstrated his capacity to fill the position of sub-bishop, and will retire from the district, followed by the good-will of many friends. Rev. R. H. B. Gladney is closing his third year in Starkville Station. He preaches earnest, good sermons of "modern length," and his ministry is waited on by good congregations. He will be able to make a good report at Conference. Rev. R. J. S. Warley has served Starkville Circuit during the present, and part of last year. He was admitted at the last Conference; is an earnest preacher, has done good work and made many friends on his circuit. The circuit has a neat parsonage in Starkville, and in its present plan, has a hopeful outlook.

THE LAYMEN'S MOVEMENT.

Mr. Wm. Siddon, of Mars Hill Circuit, has agreed to give five dollars per month to the Laymen's Movement; and has paid ten dollars for November and December. This is generous, and puts payment for Winona District well beyond three hundred dollars this year.

J. R. BINGHAM,
District Leader.

THE HOLLY SPRINGS DISTRICT AGAIN.

Dear Brother Boswell: I write to endorse all that Brother Borders has said about restoring the Holly Springs District. I have spent the greater part of forty-eight years traveling circuits and districts in the bounds of that territory, and I know it would add much to the interest of our church in that section and be highly appreciated by nine-tenths of our people. Holly Springs is the place from which the presiding elder can conveniently reach all that section of country.

FOREIGN MISSIONARY INSTITUTE.

On Oct. 10 and 11 the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of Jefferson Street Church, Natchez, received a dual blessing in having with them two of their most efficient and capable Conference officers, Mrs. A. F. Watkins, Conference Secretary, and Miss Daisy Davies, Field Secretary of the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions.

The pastor, Rev. Robert Selby, having business in other parts, resigned the pulpit in favor of these ladies, who filled it morning and evening, to the great satisfaction of all who were fortunate enough to hear them.

An afternoon service was held on Sunday for the benefit of the young people of the city, all of whom were invited. Monday morning and afternoon were devoted to institute work. As only two or three societies were represented, no reports were called for. All the services were well attended on Sunday, but as the atmosphere on Monday is usually "blue," not many housekeepers lent the encouragement of their presence.

After service closed on Sunday night a rally service was held and twenty new members secured.

A campaign for members will be conducted during Week of Prayer. Miss Davies is a gifted speaker. Her personal magnetism charms all listeners. She is abundant in labors, efficient in service, attractive and womanly.

A juvenile society was organized previous to the coming of these ladies, that they might be presented as a sort of "first fruits." They were attentive listeners at all the Sabbath services. They are eager to begin work. Jefferson Church now has three Foreign Missionary and a Home Mission Society, and two reading circles, all of which are in good condition. The District Secretary of the Natchez District, Mrs. D. F. Lewis, of Woodville, was present on this occasion.

NOTES FROM MERIDIAN DISTRICT.

It is gratifying to report a new auxiliary organized Oct. 20 at Bucatunna, Miss., with ten members. Mrs. Ben Longley is president, and Mrs. B. B. Davis is corresponding secretary.

At our district meeting, held at Quitman, Nov. 5-7, on Sunday afternoon, Mrs. La Prade held a children's service. After talking beautifully to the children, she organized a juvenile society, consisting of twenty wide-awake boys and girls. This was the feature of our meeting most full of promise for the future.

JOINT MEETING.

The meeting of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Societies of Winona District was held at Itta Bena Oct. 19-22, 1909.

A joint session Tuesday night was conducted by Mrs. Campbell, Home Mission Secretary. A cordial welcome extended by Mrs. T. B. Holloman was responded to by Mrs. Henrie, of Greenwood. The sermon by Rev. E. S. Lewis, presiding elder, on "Thy Kingdom Come" was fine, indeed.

Wednesday was given to Home Mission work, and reports showed progress along all lines. One needy preacher's family had been gladdened by the gift of a valuable box. Another box was gladly provided for by delegates present for the use of a worthy brother within the district. Mrs. A. L. Marshall, Mrs. Buckley and others discussed different phases of the work and its imperative needs.

Wednesday night service was made interesting and instructive by recitations from the children and addresses setting forth the importance and glorious possibilities of the Foreign Missionary work, by Mrs. Neblett, District Secretary; Mrs. J. E. Thomas, Superintendent of Young People's Work, and Mrs. S. M. Thames, President of the Conference W. F. M. S.

Thursday Mrs. Neblett took charge as Secretary of the Foreign Missionary Society of the district. The meeting seemed to arouse new interest, and there is a prospect of greater success. There are five scholarships supported, a good number of study circles recently organized, and subscriptions to the Woman's Missionary Advocate increased in number. The presence and talks of Mrs. Thames and Mrs. Thomas and Miss Gardner, a returned missionary of the Congregational Church, were an inspiration to all. Interesting papers were read by Mmes. Bourg and Alston, and an enthusiastic meeting for the children was held by Mrs. Thames.

The presence and encouraging words of ministerial brethren, Revs. E. S. Lewis, G. W. Bashman, H. S. Spragins, J. T. McCafferty, H. M. Young, W. L. Graves and W. M. Campbell, were greatly appreciated.

Resolutions of thanks by Mrs. Henrie closed the meeting. Ruleville was selected as the place for next year.

MRS. J. T. BUCKLEY.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

"Talk about retrenchment in mission work, one had as well try to stay the winds! When funds become low, it seems as if God thrusts something on us that must be done by faith. This, perhaps, is what keeps faith alive." Nothing more fully shows forth the needful in our membership campaign as well as all other interests now claiming the attention of foreign missionary workers than this utterance of Miss Nannie B. Gaines, who, for many years, has done such splendid work in Japan. With undaunted faith, we who represent the one-tenth already enlisted, must seek to arouse the nine-tenths of the 900,000 women of Southern Methodism. We must put vim and energy into our acts with fervent prayer that the barriers erected by thoughtlessness, indifference, lack of interest, may be swept away by the power of him who said: "If ye ask anything in my name, I will do it." We have excellent help in the "Membership Crusade Series" leaflets. They are clear; they are convincing; they are full. They bring out additional proof of the great claims of foreign missions upon human hearts and lives, a claim established by our Savior's life and death. Said he: "I will draw all men unto me;" yet that drawing is conditioned upon the efforts of his followers to show to the world the suffering Savior, the risen Redeemer. If we as servants of the Most High measure up to our privilege, our obligations, the Father will most surely grant glorious results. It is well to keep in touch with the work of others, whereby our own hearts may be stimulated. "Provoke to love and good works," we are exhorted in Hebrews. To this end, I give you an outline of a fine district meeting. The King's business prospers. We give God thanks.

MRS. J. F. EVANS.

IN MEMORIAM.

MRS. MELISSA J. TIMMINS, daughter of Mr. DeOrsay A. and Mary E. Simpson, departed from this life at the Shreveport Sanitarium, July 26, 1909, after a month's hard fought battle in an attempt by the most skilled physicians and nurses to ward off the ravages of high fever. When the word was given that all hope had been abandoned, it sent anguish, sorrow and deep grief into the hearts of her loved ones who anxiously watched at her bedside. But it pleased the Heavenly Father to take the spirit of fair Melissa to a brighter and happier clime. To reason out why one so lovable and useful, whose every thought in life was to shed a radiance of joy and sunshine into the hearts of others, and who seemed now to be needed more than ever, should be so quickly taken away, is beyond human comprehension, and we bow in sweet submission to the will of him who doeth all things well and giveth grace to help in every time of need. Perhaps one reason why God leads us into the vale of bereavement, is that our hearts may warm towards others who are suffering the same griefs as ourselves.

Mrs. Timmins was blessed with noble, consecrated parents who carefully trained her from earliest childhood in all that enters into a sweet Christian character. In her was reflected the parental piety and grace that characterized her father's home. She was a woman of great refinement and culture. She was educated at Mansfield Female College and the Kate P. Nelson Seminary, of Shreveport, La. She was especially gifted in music and her talents were consecrated to the service of God as organist in the churches where she had her membership. In her early childhood she gave her heart to God and joined the Methodist Church at old Cypress Camp Grounds. In 1903 she was happily married to Mr. William Wilson Timmins and soon thereafter moved to Sodus, La., where she took an active part in church work. She was president of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society and active in all that pertained to the advancement of God's kingdom. She possessed a bright disposition that was always full of sunshine. Her home life was beautiful, as a neighbor she was kind and obliging to all. Her one thought was to help those in need and sympathize with those in trouble. In her last sickness she had a patience of hope and a sense of the immediate presence of Jesus, and as the twilight of the valley fell upon her advancing footsteps her face was illumined with a brightness never seen before and she saw her Savior face to face to live with him forever. Sweet and peaceful was the end of the pure life, good-byes were spoken, and the angels bore her spirit to the bosom of her God and at the same time whispered into sorrowing hearts: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." These are the amaranthine words which angels wreathe above our sainted dead. How fragrant they are with the love of Jesus, how dewy with precious promises. A jubilant paeon of triumph can almost be heard from the sapphire walls of the New Jerusalem over those who, like this loved one, have come off more than conquerers, whose achievements are complete, and for whom wait the "robes made white in the blood of the lamb." Hers was a Christian soul whose voyage had ended in the peaceful repose of a desired haven. She leaves behind father, mother, husband, brothers, sisters, an infant daughter and a host of relatives and friends.

The funeral services were conducted from the Greenwood Church by Rev. Paul Brown and Rev. R. J. Harp in the presence of a large number of sorrowing friends. The fair casket of the soul was borne to Greenwood Cemetery, where, while the sun was receding into the purpling horizon, and as a bird or two were twittering their evening songs, and the air was as silent as the unnumbered sleepers around us, we turned away from the sacred spot which marks the final resting place of the body of our precious dead.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

My Dear Dr. Boswell: Enclosed, please find list of homes for the entertainment of Conference at Okolona, beginning Dec. 1. If any names of those entitled to entertainment have been left out, they are assured that we will look after them if connected with the Conference in any way. I am sorry that we cannot give a home to every one who wants to come as a visitor, but we have not the room. Our hotel facilities are limited, and our homes are full. Persons had better not come as visitors unless they are sure they can get a home before coming, because it would embarrass them, possibly, as seriously as it would the local committee. We will entertain the Conference proper, and think we can do it well. Quite a number of the brethren want to bring their wives, but we have had to write them that we could not take care of them. The list of assignments may be changed some, but they are in the main as they will stand. If there are those who have been assigned homes who find that they cannot come, the committee will appreciate it if they will notify us, so that we can give others homes in their places. We look forward to the coming of the Conference with great pleasure.

SIXTH STREET CHARGE, LAUREL, MISS.

The last Annual Conference wisely formed this work into a separate charge. Conditions are such that this will be a mission field for several years. A large proportion of the membership of Sixth Street Church are employees in the cotton mill here, which is located in the western part of Laurel. The mill owns more than a hundred neat, well-built houses—houses ranging from three to seven rooms. These houses are painted and the premises are kept in good repair, and are rented to the employes at very reasonable prices. This part of Laurel is known as cotton mill town, although it is under the same civil control. The mill employs about four hundred hands.

Our church and parsonage are located two blocks from the beginning of cotton mill town. This is a difficult field because many of these people are unsettled and transient. Many of them will not identify themselves with any church, and if they do they will follow afar off. Before they have become acquainted, they move to some other mill town and are lost to the church, because they do not apply for a certificate. However, we have some very choice spirits as members of our church.

I have received sixty members this year and now have on roll 142. My Board of Stewards are as faithful men as I have ever known.

Our Epworth League is the best in town and third best in this (Newton) District.

Our Sunday School is well conducted and our superintendent, Brother S. J. Holmes, is constantly looking for ways to improve it.

Our Woman's Home Mission Society has done some good work since its organization in the spring. With some aid from Main Street Methodist W. H. M. Society, it has organized and taught a night school for three months during the summer. This school was to encourage and accommodate boys and girls who had to work in the mill during the day, and hence had no other educational advantages.

Although this people will meet every financial obligation and are extremely considerate of the pastor's welfare, having given him four valuable poundings during this year, one would never choose Sixth Street charge for worldly pleasure or financial gain, and yet there is inexpressible love and joy in such service. Whether the Bishop returns me or sends me away, I shall feel that this has been my greatest charge.

THE NEED.

BY REV. W. L. CHILDRESS.

The need of the day is for men of truth,
With the shield of faith and the heart of youth,
With the dauntless soul by the high hope staid,
Who will walk in the light and be unafraid.

The need of the day is for men unsold,
Who have no price that is paid in gold,
Who know that goodness is better than greed,
And will follow and die where the right may lead.

The need of the day is for men who feel
That the highest good is the common weal,
That fame is fleeting, but love will last,
And live with God when the world is past.

The need of the day is for men to stand
When the hosts of hell are on every hand,
Upborne by the promise that cannot fail,
That the right is of God and will prevail.

The need of the day is for men who see
Through the years of time to eternity;
Who in patience keep to the work assigned
In the faith of Christ with the spirit kind.

The need of the day is for men who live
In the open day with the heart to give;
And these shall make by the saved hearts' power
This old earth bloom as an opening flower.

Jennings, La.

BY THEIR RIGHT NAMES.

"I believe in calling things by their right names," said Matilda virtuously, after her friend had gone out. "Maude didn't like it at all when I told her Herbert Adams isn't the right person for president, but I cannot help it. Herbert is all right, and a good worker, but he's too wishy-washy. We made the mistake of putting him in last year, and we ought to be more careful now. He always wants to keep on the good side of everybody, and you cannot be a successful officer that way. I think Tennyson was right when he said, 'He never made a friend who never made a foe.'"

"It's a good idea to call things by their right names," said grandfather approvingly. "It always provokes me to go to a grocery store and ask for a certain brand of goods and have the clerk tell me something else is exactly the same article, but under a different label. Last week I asked a drug clerk for some medicine and he solemnly assured me the stuff he had was what I wanted even if the name was wrong, and I was foolish enough to believe him. I took it, and found it wasn't what I wanted at all, as I might have known. My money was gone, the medicine wasted, and I never will buy at that drug store again, all because the name wasn't right."

"That's exactly what I tried to tell them," said Matilda, warming up. "Some one told Herbert what I said and he came to me about it. Of course, I would rather people wouldn't tattle, but I explained what I meant, and told him it was for the good of the society. He was narrow-minded enough to be offended, though he said rather stiffly that he would withdraw his name. I cannot understand what good comes of 'beating about the bush,' as old Mrs. Tracy calls it. When I have anything to say, I say it right out."

"Oh, well, it takes all kinds of people to make up the world," said grandfather soothingly. "There was John Perkins. John wasn't lazy, especially with his tongue, but it took a good Christian to neighbor with him. He was honest, kind-hearted and energetic; but, oh, how hard to get along with. He called it being firm, but the neighbors used a different word. Maybe it was firmness that made him hold out against the whole congregation when we bought the church organ, but lots of folks said it was stubbornness. Old Mr. Ray said it was pigheadedness, but he might have been too severe. Anyway, the organ buying tore up the neighborhood for three months, and it was just the same when anything else had to be done. The Republicans of our township secretly rejoiced when John saw his way clear to vote the Independent ticket, for he was nothing but a source of trouble, and the Democrats were always shaking in their shoes for fear he might want to join hands with them; but at last he refused to vote at all because everybody was wrong."

Matilda was doing some thinking just then and was very silent, so grandfather continued: "Sally Peters, your mother's cousin twice removed, is a great hand for mixing up names, Matilda. When I was there the last time, her sitting-room was a sight to behold with pictures and vases and tidies and all sorts of gimcracks. Sally said it was artistic, but her husband called it trash when he upset a tipsy stand one night. Sally really hadn't any business putting so many things where they were in the way, but she thought they looked pretty."

"Grandfather!" said Matilda suddenly, after the old gentleman had dropped into a half doze, "what is the right name for my wanting to run the whole society?"

"What do you think would be appropriate?" asked grandfather, with a twinkle in his eye.

"I've just been racking my brain for a long enough term," replied Matilda. "I think it might come under the head of Conceited Meddling, and I'm going right down to tell Herbert Adams so. After this, I'm going to be more particular about having the names of things just right."—S. S. Visitor.

QUEER HAPPENINGS.

Whack! whack! went the blows of the axe on the cherry-tree.

"Does the cherry-tree feel it, father?" Charley asked.

Charley sat on the piazza steps at a safe distance from the flying chips. Charley was a boy who often asked queer questions.

"I guess this tree is too nearly dead to feel anything," Mr. Baker answered, and Charley was glad it couldn't feel. Mrs. Baker had said the tree must come down; for it didn't yield a quart of cherries in a summer, and its withered branches spoiled the looks of her front yard.

Then something that was really very queer happened—something that made Mr. Baker cry out. "Goodness! I never saw the like before!" For out of the tree, dislodged by the blows, which by good luck didn't touch them, there dropped a nest of five young red squirrels. Four of them skipped away as if they had learned how long ago, though maybe this was the first time they had ever tried; but the fifth one seemed to be hurt by the fall to the ground. In fact, Mr. Baker thought it was dead, so he picked it up and tossed it to Madam Pussy Cat, who was watching curiously a few feet away.

Charley supposed she would pounce on it as if it were a mouse, but what she did was really more queer than anything that had happened yet. She came up, smelled of it, then very gently lifted it as if it had been a kitten, and walked off with it to the barn.

You may be sure Charley followed her. Pretty soon he came back, with eyes wide open.

"Why, father," he said, "Madam Pussy Cat has put the squirrel to bed with her own family. 'Tisn't dead—I saw it squirm. You—you won't let the squirrel get lost, will you, father?" Charley knew that kittens with little blind eyes had a way of going off, and never, never finding the path back.

Mr. Baker laughed. "No, Charley," he promised. "We'll wait and see what pussy does with it."

Well, the queer things kept piling up; for Master Red Squirrel, as Charley had said, wasn't dead at all, only a bit stunned at first; and Madam Pussy Cat mothered him until he became very frisky indeed—so frisky that one day Mr. Baker made a little cage for him to stay in until he became used to a station in life which he wasn't born into.

Charley fed him every day, so that he grew quite tame, and it was safe to let him out, because he would always come home again. Madam Pussy Cat acted very proud of her adopted child, and they were great friends.

One night, when Charley had been thinking a long while—as much as five minutes—he nestled up to his mother and whispered, "I think, mother, that Madam Pussy Cat must be a Christian cat the way she treated Ruddy."

Mrs. Baker smiled, but she wondered to herself, "What will that boy say next!"—Helen A. Hawley, in Sunday School Times.

THANKSGIVING.

"O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good: for his mercy endureth forever. Let the redeemed of the Lord say so.

"Praise ye the Lord: for it is good to sing praises unto our God; for it is pleasant; and praise is comely.

"Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee. Then shall the earth yield her increase, and God, even our own God shall bless us. God shall bless us, and all the ends of the earth shall fear him.

"Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house saith the Lord of hosts, and I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts. And all nations shall call you blessed: for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the Lord of hosts.

"Oh, that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!"

SOWING AND REAPING.

There is a sowing time, and a time to reap. Everybody that knows anything about seeds and soils and seasons knows something of seed-time and harvest. It suggests labor and reward, and the idea holds, not only in all the forms of soil cultivation, but in every department of industrial and intellectual life. Men do not dream dreams and realize them in a moment. Often the reality is in the distant future—sometimes it is never reached, but remains always a dream.

Generally men lay the foundations for fortunes, and build thereupon through long and weary years. The man who suddenly comes into the possession of great wealth, either by inheritance or speculation, is the exception. One who would succeed as a merchant must invest capital. He must be persevering and watchful, careful in his purchases, and equally as careful in his sales, for he knows the dangers, and that at best progress towards the goal is slow. Not months, but years must come and go before the end is reached. It is the same kind of a grind, day after day, with the mechanic and manufacturer, with professional men and agents—the lawyer, the doctor, the poet and statesmen, and men who conduct insurance business, and those who run the railroads. All begin at the bottom and work hard.

To us it seems to be the order of providence. Get-rich-quick schemes, having for their inspiration the desire to get something for nothing, are dishonest, and wholly uncertain. They begin by defying the laws of honest commerce, as well as the law of nature. Jesus said: "First the blade, then the corn, after that the full corn in the ear." There must be planting, growth, development and maturity, all requiring cultivation before there can be full realization of the blessings of human toil. "Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain."

It is the same in grace as it is in nature and all industrial life. No man is born full grown into the kingdom of God. He is born a babe in Christ, and attains manhood only by growth (whatever else he may attain in the way of spiritual experience), and to that end he must cultivate the graces patiently, continuously and faithfully. Otherwise his spiritual existence will be short, else it will be sickly, and his manhood dwarfed. He will produce no fruit unto holiness.

Gospel seed do not spring up in a night, nor produce a harvest in a day. St. Paul was a long time in a certain place seeing any fruit of his toil. Foreign missionaries have labored and waited more than half a decade and come almost to despair before winning a single soul to Christ. In our home work we have known faithful preachers to sow, and water the seed with their tears for years, and reap but little fruit of their toil, when all at once it would spring up and blossom and mature, the harvest become white and the reaping glorious.

If one sows and fails to reap, he need not complain and give up. Another will enter into his labors and reap. The reaping will follow as sure as the seeds are sown. The Lord will take care—he hath said: "For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater; so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it." This is God's promise of seedtime and harvest.

God's word is sure. Jesus said: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away." The word of the Lord endureth forever.

LEGISLATION AND REPRESENTATION.

It is somewhat surprising that men, supposed to know as well as to love the Church, recommend changes in our government without regard to constitutional restrictions. An elective presiding eldership is suggested and insisted on as if a mere majority of the General Conference is sufficient to effect so great a change in our economy. The specific law of the Church makes it the duty of the Bishop "to fix the appointments of the preachers, etc. Paragraph 99, page 50, Discipline, 1906;" to choose the presiding elders—paragraph 100, page 52. This specific law is guarded by a constitutional provision, viz.: the Third Restrictive Rule. If this be true, it follows that the selection of presiding elders cannot be taken from the Episcopacy and lodged with the Annual Conferences except by a vote of two-thirds of the General Conference concurred in by three-fourths of the members of all the Annual Conferences.

If precedence is worth anything it is worth while to call attention to the fact that the General Conference of 1820, by a majority vote, made presiding elders elective by the Annual Conferences, and then elected Joshua Soule to the Episcopacy, who declined ordination on the ground that presiding elders, under the law just enacted, being the creatures of the Annual Conferences, could not be the representatives of the General Superintendent or Bishop, and that he could not be responsible, as General Superintendent, for men he had no hand in appointing. Bishop McKendree joined in Dr. Soule's protest, whereupon the unconstitutional measure was suspended, and in 1844 was repealed. Dr. Soule was again elected Bishop, and the obnoxious law being out of the way, he was ordained. In view of the foregoing, consistency requires that brethren who advocate an elective presiding eldership—the first step towards breaking down our Episcopacy, and was so intended by O'Kelley and his followers—should seek to do so in the proper way—that is, by changing the Third Restrictive Rule. And they should bear in mind that a restrictive rule is not as easily changed as some imagine.

Another ill-advised suggestion is that which proposes to give all "connectional officers" seats in the General Conference. How that can be done except by special legislation, we do not know; and if there is anything distasteful in a democratic government, such as some are seeking to make the Methodist Episcopal Church, North and South, it is special legislation. We feel sure that in face of the prejudice against special legislation, and a centralized government, the General Conference will never give seats to "connectional men" as such, in that body.

The proposition is open to objections: 1. It is violative of Paragraph 32, page 19, of the Discipline, which says: "The General Conference shall be composed of one clerical member for every forty-eight members of each Annual Conference, and an equal number of lay members." Every connectional officer (there are eight or nine) is a clerical member of some Annual Conference except one, who is a layman of the Tennessee Conference. To make them ex-officio members of the General Conference would give the Annual Conferences to which they belong a representation greater than is allowed them under the constitutional provision. Besides, it would violate the law which requires the General Conference to be composed of an equal number of clerical and lay members, there being only one layman holding connectional office. True, they would be only ex-officio members, nevertheless they would be members of their respective Annual Conferences, and virtually Annual Conference representatives. These connectional men, all able and true, do quite as much, each in his sphere, in shaping legislation, as any equal number of men in the Church—some of them much more; and there is no sound reason why they should have their influence enlarged.

2. There is another objection. The precedent would be wrong. Other men in the Church, representing great interests, are sometimes left out of their Conference delegations, among them college presidents, and editors of Church papers. And some of these, it sometimes happens, are members of Connectional Boards. It would be wholly inconsistent to leave these men out, and let connectional men in. And, then, another class might be called to seats. We mean the rich men who are said to exercise controlling influence in large city churches. Why not make them exceptions to the rule? And most important of all, the presidents and secretaries of our Woman's Home and Foreign Mission Societies should be likewise ex-officio members of the General Conference. Why should they be left out?

Once begin this kind of special legislation and there is no telling where it would stop. With an undelegated body of representatives in the General Conference, Bishops limited to four or eight years in office and order, presiding elders elected by the Annual Conference, laymen in the Episcopal Cabinet helping to station the preachers, nothing on earth could hinder the rank and file of the ministry serving missions, circuits and stations securing representation "in the cabinet" to protect their interests. When only half of these things are accomplished, Southern Methodism, boosted in high quarters as the purest form of Methodism on earth, will not know itself.

With change of polity, it will be in order to change our name. When the change is made, we will be ready with a name.

PERSONAL.

Rev. J. E. J. Ferguson, Vaughan, Miss., says, "I will be able to make a full report at Conference. The work is moving along nicely."

Rev. R. S. Lawson writes that he has been changed from Coal Hill, Ark., to Clinton, Ark., and is looking for a great year. May his hopes be realized!

In the meeting at Monroe, in which Rev. R. H. Wynn was assisted by Rev. W. H. Coleman, thirty children from the Sunday-school, and six adults united with the Church.

Rev. J. E. Wray preached a great sermon on a recent Sunday in his pulpit, Houston, Texas. It was published in full in the Daily-Post.—Subject, "The Mystery of Christ"— a fine subject well handled.

Rev. W. H. Saunders, Gloster, Miss., says, "We are winding up the year's work and will be ready for Conference at Brookhaven." That means that both preacher and people at Gloster have done their duty.

Somebody, too modest to give the name, forwards us a dollar, and says: "Please send your good paper to some one who is not able to pay for it." The cheerful giver has our thanks, and we will do as requested.

A young brother sends us a manuscript and tells us "it is his first attempt at writing for the paper." We hope it will not be the last. If not, we advise him to write plain prose. It will be more acceptable than rhymes.

We did not know that Rev. G. W. Bachman, the industrious colporter, had been "down in Georgia," but he sends us a new subscriber whose address is a Georgia postoffice. May be this is one of the "old man's tricks."

Rev. J. E. Woodward, enroute from Talahasse, Fla., to his new appointment, in Laredo. Tex., called at the office one day last week. We appreciated his visit and trust that he may do great work in his new charge.

Rev. J. J. Hoffman, manager of the Bible House, and helping Hand Mission, paid us his respects last week for which we thank him very much. He is doing a noble work in feeding and otherwise assisting the poor of our city.

In addition to paying salary and Conference collections, the Myrtle brethren will pay "the parsonage debt" before Conference. So reports the pastor, Rev. J. B. Randolph, who has received eighty-six members into the church this year.

In his notice of the meeting of the Board of Education, at Alexandria, Rev. R. H. Wynn inadvertently named Wednesday, instead of Tuesday. Brother Wynn writes to make correction. Members of the Conference are requested to take notice.

We are overwhelmed with resolutions concerning preachers who are closing their year's work. These resolutions are mighty nice, and we would be glad to print them, but we have not the space. We have printed several sets, and thereby set a bad precedent, but we did not know a deluge was coming.

Miss Janie Watkins, who five years ago went to Soochow, China, is now on furlough, and will spend the time with her family and friends in Jackson, Miss. Her loved ones and her friends extend to her a "home welcome," and pray that the year to be spent at home will be a blessing to her and to the Church.

Rev. W. A. Clark, winding up on Kosciusko Circuit, his third year, reports a year of success. He has received thirty-three members on profession of faith and thirteen by letter, and will be ahead of last year on collections. The preacher and presiding elder will be paid in full. The charge has one Woman's Home Mission Society, seven Sunday-schools, and seven prayer meetings. Good work is being done.

Two Sundays since, Bishop Hoss was in St. Louis and preached at St. Paul's Church—Rev. Theo. Copeland, pastor. During his stay he baptized the pastor's babe. Since then, the little one has been dangerously ill, but at last accounts was improving. The baby's sickness prevented Brother Copeland meeting the Western North Carolina Conference where he was booked for an address at the Epworth League Anniversary.

The thoughtful presiding elder, Rev. Ben P. Jaco, says: "New Albany Station, and Myrtle Circuit are the 'banner charges' in the Corinth District, on winding up, and paying out everything in full weeks before Conference. That is good for the pastors, Rev. W. C. Harris and J. B. Randolph, and the laymen of these charges. There are other charges and pastors close upon these leaders.

Rev. O. G. Halliburton, Bogue Chitto and Norfield, Miss., has been fortunate. The Norfield brethren fitted him out with a tailor-made suit and hat to match. The ladies of the church felt they had been "snubbed" and forthwith proceeded to retaliate by furnishing the preacher with necessary and ornamental things that the brethren overlooked—such as socks, gloves, muffs, suspenders, neckties, etc. As Brother Halliburton is rather broad-shouldered, we suspect he can bear a good deal of that kind of treatment.

Rev. A. W. Turner reports that lots have been donated to our church, and deeds containing the trust clause recorded in St. Landry and the proposed Evangeline Parishes. At Pine Prairie, a church has been organized with over twenty members. Plans for a church have been accepted and approved by the committee and a bill of materials is in the hands of the saw mill. At Ville Plat we have secured a choice lot in the center of the town. By the vote recently taken Ville Plat becomes the Parish seat of the new Parish of Evangeline. A number of Protestants are ready to organize a church, and the business men of the community have assured a ready response to build a neat home for this congregation, right away. Brother Turner is closing out a good year at Opelousas, although his charge feels heavily the depression caused by shortage in the crops.

FROM THE COLPORTER.

The Conferences will soon be in session at Okolona and Brookhaven, and we hope for both to be enjoyable occasions for Christian fellowship and spiritual blessings. With the many other good things at both places, the Books will be prominently in evidence, of which there will be a large stock of both old and new for preachers and the laity, men, women and children. Lest ye forget; find the Colporter's room and call early before the rush comes on to break the assortment. Get the Sunday-school Lesson Notes for 1910, holiday gift books, Bibles, Testaments, etc., for old and young. Among the leaders this season are: "Hasting's Bible Dictionary," $5; "The One Volume Bible Commentary," $2.50; and "The Life of Bishop Asbury," by Dr. H. M. DuBose, $1.

The last-named is "the first in a series of volumes of critical and historical studies in the lives of eminent leaders of Methodism in its early and middle periods." "Bishop Candler, the promoter and editor of the series passed upon Dr. DuBose's manuscript a strong and cordiallyy approving judgment." It is, without doubt a worthy book and should have an extensive reading. And with all your getting, don't forget Jones' History of Methodism in Mississippi.

Yours for service, G. W. BACHMAN.

By W. B. Campbell

LESSON FOR NOV. 28, 1909.

PAUL ON SELF-DENIAL.

World's Temperance Lesson.

Rom. xiv, 10-21.

Golden Text: "It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth."—Rom. xiv, 21.

The letter to the Romans was written to a people not unknown to St. Paul, although he had seen comparatively few of them. He did know some of them, and loved them well. In the last chapter of his letter he calls them by name and speaks affectionately of each one. What tender memories must arise in the apostle's heart as he writes the names of Aquilla and Priscilla; and see how tenderly he mentions Rufus and his mother—this Rufus was supposed to be the son of Simon, who bore the cross of Jesus. It was in this spirit of love that Paul writes to the church at Rome. This church was situated as no other under Paul's care. Christians were looked upon with suspicion, and closely watched by the emissaries of high authority. Neither could the emperor or Seneca, the consul, understand the new theology that set forth the life of the "lowly Nazarene."

The common people looked upon the peaceful life of the Christians with longing, for they were weary of high-handed crime and debauchery. These were the troubles without. Within there was the usual strife between the Jewish and the Gentile converts. Contention waxed so strong that Paul found it necessary to defend the doctrines of Justification by Faith, and Faith Accounted for Righteousness.

Now, in this chapter we are studying, the apostle admonishes, first, the fault-finder, the man that hears every evil rumor and makes haste to repeat it. Something that some other brother was seen to do, or was heard to say. In doing this, he assumes the prerogative of a judge toward his brother. The writer asks: "Why dost thou judge thy brother?" Jesus said that he came not to judge the world, then why should the fault-finder begin that which Jesus would not until the time fixed by the Father? It is then when we shall all, each one, stand before the judgment seat of Christ. "Judgment seat" had an awful meaning to a Roman; it meant very little of justice or law, and very much of the caprice or whim of the tyrant.

Paul goes on to tell them that each one shall give an account of himself to God. How awful will this be to him that knoweth not God as his Father! But to those that know and feel even in life the power of the Heavenly Father's love, there is no terror in telling God of how they have tried to be good and faithful servants, and the Father rewards them that try.

There often comes before us the picture of the repentant and forgiven sinner, who, before he knows the fulness of the blessing that is his, appears before the great white throne; he casts down his head in self-condemnation; the Judge speaks; the self-condemned one looks up and—behold, his Judge is no other than his Savior, Jesus, the sinner's friend. Fear flees away; joy comes to his heart—saved, and forever! "Let us not, therefore, judge one another any more," for we can never make mercy begin where justice ends, as can the only begotten Son of God. Let us rather be earnest in removing the stumbling-block, or the occasion to fall, out of our brother's way. This is the appeal made to one who has made the royal law of love the law of his life, and if at any time he should do a thing, or say a thing, that would cause a weaker brother to think less of that Christian life he has been trying to live, then the law of love would be that the thing said, or the thing done, would not be said or done any more. It is not for us to destroy him for whom Christ died, but our mission is to save. The sincere and true Christian has but to be shown his mistake or fault; that is enough to send him in haste to that secret chamber of prayer, and from thence he emerges prepared for the next conflict.

The gospel is the source of liberty, and those enjoying that freedom are under no restraint, because they need none. The things that gave pleasure once fail to please now, because our lives are hid with Christ in God. Yet we must remember that Paul wrote to as stanch Christians as we: "Let him that standeth take heed lest he fall."

We do not know who is taking us for an example; maybe some weaker brother. Then if, at a time when we become less watchful of ourselves, and do things that are not exactly consistent, the weak brother might do the same things, thinking he was right because he saw us do them. Thus, by one mistake we might undo the good we may have done. The kingdom of God, or, in other words, pure religion, does not consist in the formal observation of certain rules, or the setting forth of some special vice to be guarded against; but it does consist in Righteousness, which is a conformity to Christian morality as a whole; and Peace, which is the fruit of Christian love for our brethren; and Joy in the Holy Ghost, which is a gift to ourselves from God, the Comforter, dwelling within our hearts, chiding us if we go astray, and comforting us when we penitently return to the footsteps of Jesus.

No man liveth to himself, and some day we will know how wide was the limit of our responsibility, to the end that we are our brother's keeper, and the very appearance of evil must be avoided. The question is one of love; do we love the poor, weak brother enough for all this care of him? Christ did; he died for him; he died for him just as you know he died for you. Then that is enough for us to make all self-denial, to use all watchfulness of ourselves, and to extend to him every aid and every encouragement.

In our study of Paul, we cannot fail to see how he was just consumed by his love for Jesus; he was ready for any danger—yes, even for death itself, if thereby the gospel would be enhanced and the name of the Lord Jesus glorified. All of his faculties and all of his energy was used for the one purpose. Now, as we are nearing the end of the year's lessons, let us strive to keep in mind that the great force which so enabled the apostle to do so much in the service of the Master was his great love for him. If we ask for this same power of love, we will find that when it is given us, we will also love him for whom Christ died, be he ever so poor and lowly; and we will extend to him every aid, for we will as freely give as we have freely received.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

NOTICE!

The Class of the First Year will meet the Committee at the Methodist Church in Brookhaven at 9 a.m., Tuesday, Dec. 7, prepared for a written examination. W. H. SAUNDERS.

NOTICE.

Those who are coming up to the Mississippi Conference for admission on trial at the approaching session are requested to meet the Committee in the Methodist church at Brookhaven on Tuesday morning, Dec. 7.

D. SCARBOROUGH,
Chairman of Committee.

The class of the fourth year will please meet the committee for examination at the M. E. Church South, Brookhaven, Miss., on Tuesday, Dec. 7, at 9:30 a. m. The examination will be in writing, and it is important that every member of the class be present and on time.

I shall be glad to hear from those who have not written me as to whether or not they will be ready for the examination. ROBT. SELBY,
For the Committee.

HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

According to established custom, the Mississippi Methodist Historical Society will hold its regular Annual Session at Brookhaven, Miss., on Tuesday evening, Dec. 7, 1909. The subject to be discussed will be "Rise, Growth and Benefits of the Campmeeting." T. B. HOLLOMAN,
Vice President for Miss. Conf.

RAILROAD RATES.

To the Delegates and Visitors to the Mississippi Annual Conference::

The Southeastern Passenger Association has granted the usual reduced rate to Brookhaven and return on the following conditions:

Pay full fare going. On purchase of ticket, request a "certificate receipt" from the agent. If more than one ticket is purchased, at every junction point secure a "certificate receipt." These "certificate receipts" must be presented to the undersigned, or to the assistant railroad secretary, during the Conference session, to be properly stamped and signed. These "certificate receipts" are then to be presented to the local agent, who will sell return tickets for one-third the fare originally paid, plus 25 cents. No reduction of fare is made unless these "certificate receipts" are purchased.

No certificate receipt issued with children's half-fare ticket, mileage, clergy, or any other form of transportation at less than the regular first-class fare, will be honored for reduced fare returning. No certificate of less than 75 cents will be honored for reduced fare returning.

When the usual announcements are made daily just before adjournment for dinner, the time and place will be announced where the railroad secretary will sign these certificate receipts. Parties holding them will please present them at that time, and not expect them to be signed during the session of the Conference or on the street.

This information, it is hoped, will prevent some of the misunderstandings heretofore. C. F. EMERY,
Railroad Secretary.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

CLASS OF THE FIRST YEAR.

Please let all the members of the class of the First Year, who have not finished in the Correspondence School, meet the Committee of the First Year at the First Methodist Church, at Alexandria, on Dec. 7, at 9 a. m.

C. C. MILLER, for Committee.

NOTICE.

The Board of Education of the Louisiana Conference is requested to meet on Tuesday, 7:30 p. m., at the First Methodist Church, in Alexandria.

R. H. WYNN, Chairman.

NOTICE.

Applicants for admission on trial into the Louisiana Conference, M. E. Church, South, will meet the committee at 216, 13th St., Alexandria, La., 9:30 a. m., Dec. 7, 1909.

Let all applicants be prepared for a thorough written examination on subjects laid down in Discipline. Certificates from Correspondence School will be taken in lieu of an examination upon those subjects taken in that school. By order of committee diplomas from reputable colleges certificates of graduation in high schools of Louisiana will be accepted in lieu of an examination on the ordinary branches of an English education.

PAUL M. BROWN,
Chairman of Committee.

NOTICE.

The class of the second year, Louisiana Conference, are requested to meet at the Methodist Church, in Alexandria during the forenoon of Tuesday, Dec. 7. The chairman will give a lecture on Bible Study in the afternoon at some convenient hour. All undergraduates are invited to attend, and others welcome.

S. J. DAVIES.

NOTICE.

Those members of the class of the fourth year in the Louisiana Conference who desire to be examined are requested to meet the examination committee on Tuesday, Dec. 7, 9:30 a. m., at the First Methodist Church in Alexandria.

The entire class, including those who have taken the Correspondence Course, and those who have not prepared for examination, are requested to meet the committee at 3 p. m., in the same place. R. H. WYNN,
Chairman.

NOTICE.

The Southwestern, and the Southeastern Passenger Associations have each made a reduced rate of one and a-third fare on the certificate plan. We are trying to get a straight rate without the trouble of certificates, but have not succeeded yet. In case we don't, let everybody get a certificate when you come, so we will be sure to have the required number.

The hotels and boarding houses have made special rates for the occasion as follows:

Hotel Bentley, European plan. Rooms from one dollar up. When occupied by two persons, 75 cents per day up. I will be glad to make arrangements in advance for any who may wish me to do so, but would prefer that you write to the hotels direct. It is not really necessary to write in advance.

Rapides Hotel, American plan. Special price of two dollars a day. Boarding houses can accommodate a limited number at one dollar a day.

Of course, we will entertain all preachers and lay delegates. I do not know how many preacher's wives we can entertain. About thirty have said they want to come. I wish I could throw open Alexandria's doors to all. I fear that the best I can do will be to get them special rates at the hotels and boarding houses. Write me about it if she wants to come. Certainly they are as much entitled to the pleasure of the trip as anybody.

I would like to know who are coming up for admission on trial and others whose names are not in the last copy of the Minutes. I would also like to know of any whose names are there who will not come. Before the delegates and preachers leave home I want to mail them a card telling them where to go direct from the train.

Urge your lay members to come as visitors. Bishop Candler is to open each session with a short address and there are many other features that will be interesting to all Methodists. I will appreciate an announcement from your pulpit of the rates, etc., given above.

Why Lowney's Is Best

The reason for the richer flavor and more nourishing quality of Lowney's Cocoa is, because it is purely the choicest cocoa beans, ground finer than flour, without adulteration or chemical "treatment."

The Dutch Cocoas are rotted with strong alkali to make them dark and "soapy"; of these a State Food Commissioner says: "Most of the alkali is active and should not be taken into the human stomach."

No cocoa goes as far in satisfying as LOWNEY'S.

HAZLEHURST, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: It really seems to me only a short while since our coming to this place, and yet four years have gone swiftly by and we are at the parting of the ways with a very earnest congregation and a large number of very dear friends. We feel sure, be our lives short or long, we shall never live among a people with whom we shall part with more deeply-felt regret.

This year, while not so fruitful in additions, has been one of considerable development and we think in some respects the best of the four.

One of the best features of the year has been the work of the Epworth League which has nearly fifty members and which has resulted in the development of our young people into very efficient Christian workers. Recently they had charge of the Sunday night service which was truly an inspiration to everyone who attended.

Our Sunday School has done a fine year's work and including all departments, now has an enrollment of 230. Our average attendance in the main school has been nearly one hundred. Last Sunday we had 119 present.

Our Woman's Foreign Missionary Society has had a good year. During this Annual Conference year they have raised $110 for foreign missions—more than the congregation gives on the regular assessment. I never realized until our auxiliary was organized how poor a charge is without one. The fact that they more than double the church's contribution to foreign missions is the smallest result.

We also have a competent Ladies' Aid which the next pastor has my permission to convert.

Our Conference collections are all in hand, and the pastor and presiding elder will fare as well.

The man who comes to Hazlehurst will be well taken care of and will find himself delightfully situated.

Recently we had a week's revival services. Brother C. N. Guice doing all of the preaching, and leading the singing. Our people had heard him sing and knew what to expect and large congregations greeted him from the first. They were equally delighted with him as a preacher and time and time again the house was taxed to its utmost. The eight young people who made a profession of faith in Christ, were sufficient fruitage to justify this meeting, but it will be long remembered as a source of inspiration to many Christian people of all denominations. Brother Guice will be readmitted to the Mississippi Conference at its coming session and that charge will be fortunate which receives him as pastor.

We look forward to a happy Annual Conference. Brookhaven is preparing a royal welcome. We trust the editor, both the old and the new, will be with us that we may give the hand clasp of appreciation to the one and of best wishes to the new.

NOTICE, LOUISIANA PREACHERS.

I have just received a communication from Mr. W. C. Everette, of the Dallas Publishing House, that he will have on hand on Monday and Tuesday before the Conference session convenes on Wednesday, an ample supply of report blanks. It is expected that each preacher will have his report on file by the close of the first session of the Conference on Wednesday. It will be of great help to the Statistical Secretaries if these reports can be filed on Tuesday before the Conference begins.

I call special attention to the small amount assessed to each charge for Minutes. We trust that the full amount of the assessment will be raised. We were forced last year to send the Minutes collect because we did not have the funds to prepay the charges. We will dislike to repeat this another year. The amount is small, and all can get it.

R. W. VAUGHAN.

With the beginning of the new year, in addition to all that it has given heretofore, The Youth's Companion will add each month three new pages—one for boys, one for girls, and one for the household in general. The mission of the new pages will be to tell how the home may be made more homelike, and how the boy and girl may work well, play wisely, and grow in strength of body, mind and character. No doubt they will emphasize and make still more effective The Companion's strong, unwavering desire to be a real friend to every family whose home it enters.

CATARRH

Quickly Cured by a Pleasant Germ-Killing Antiseptic.

The little Hyomei (pronounced High-o-me) inhaler is made of hard rubber and can easily be carried in pocket or purse.

Into this inhaler you pour a few drops of magical Hyomei.

This is absorbed by the antiseptic gauze within, and now you are ready to breathe it in over the germ-infested membrane, where it will speedily begin its work of killing catarrh germs. Hyomei is made of Australian eucalyptol combined with other antiseptics and is very pleasant to take.

It is guaranteed to cure catarrh, bronchitis, croup, coughs and colds, or money back. It cleans out a stuffed up head in two minutes.

Sold by druggists everywhere. Complete outfit, including inhaler, $1. Mail orders filled by Booth's Hyomei Co., Dept. 11, Buffalo, N. Y. Send for free sample bottle and booklet, "Both's Famous People."

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property-holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property-holders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically not outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co., for a detailed explanation.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

CLASS OF THE FIRST YEAR.

The class of the first year will meet at the Methodist Church in Okolona at 10 a. m., Nov. 30. Correspondence certificates will be accepted, but they will not "cover" the refusal to meet with the class. Take notice!

J. E. CUNNINGHAM,
H. S. SPRAGINS,
W. M. YOUNG,
Committee.

CLASS OF THE SECOND YEAR.

The class and committee of the second year in the North Mississippi Conference will meet at the Methodist Church in Okolona, Monday night, Nov. 29, prepared for a written examination. Those who have taken the Correspondence Course will not be required to meet the committee until Tuesday.

W. W. WOOLLARD, Chairman.

CLASS OF THE THIRD YEAR.

The class of the third year will please meet the examining committee at the Methodist Church, Okolona, at 10 a. m., Tuesday, Nov. 30. The brethren will please bring materials for a written examination.

L. M. BROYLES,
J. T. MURRAH,
R. A. TUCKER,
Committee.

CLASS OF THE FOURTH YEAR.

The committee and class of the fourth year will please meet Tuesday, 9:30 a. m., Nov. 30, 1909, in the Methodist Church, Okolona, Miss.

MEETING OF THE HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

The Methodist Historical Society of the North Mississippi Conference will hold its annual meeting in the Methodist Church at Okolona on Tuesday night before the convening of the Annual Conference. Arrangements have been made for a full programme for the evening.

W. W. WOOLLARD,
Vice-Pres. for North Miss.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTICE.

There comes an urgent request from the General Sunday School Board for reports from individual schools, as well as from charges, after the manner of a new blank, form for which has been mailed to each pastor, together with the blanks for each superintendent, or secretary to fill out. Please get these reports as accurately as possible that we may have the data for the "Year-Book" next year.

If your charge, or your school does not appear therein, please do not blame us, unless the report is handed in.

These reports should be in the hands of Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, or the undersigned, on or before the first day of Conference.

Should you prefer mailing them to either of us at Okolona, do so and avoid trouble for yourself and us.

R. P. NEBLETT, Agt.
Shelby, Miss.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

To the Preachers of the North Mississippi Conference—

Dear Brethren: As president of the Conference Board of Education, I write to urge you to raise every dollar assessed against your charge for education. The income at Millsaps College from tuition and from endowment is somewhat less than usual, and therefore the need of full collections is more imperative than usual. See to it that as great a per cent. is paid on education as on anything else, and do not let that be less than one hundred. The needs of Grenada College are similar to those of Millsaps. Let equal justice be done all the collections.

Respectfully, E. S. LEWIS,
Pres. Board of Education.
Winona, Miss.

ADMISSION ON TRIAL.

The committee will meet the class for admission on trial into the North Mississippi Conference at Okolona, Monday night, Nov. 29, 7 p. m., at the Methodist Church.

REDUCED RATES TO THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The Southwestern Passenger Association has agreed to give reduced rates from all points in Mississippi except on the Alabama Great Southern for the approaching session of the North Mississippi Conference at Okolona, Miss. In order to secure this reduction for the return journey, delegates and visitors must obtain from ticket agents a certificate that full fare has been paid for each ticket purchased in going to the Conference.

J. R. COUNTISS, Sec.

MINISTERIAL RELIEF ASSOCIATION.

The Ministerial Relief Association of the North Mississippi Conference is hereby called to meet at Okolona, Wednesday night, Dec. 1, 1909, immediately following the close of the memorial service in honor of Bishop Galloway. We desire to have all the members of the Conference present.

VALUE OF ROYALINE OIL.

Royaline Oil, made by the Royaline Medicine Co., of New Orleans, La., has won all of its trade against competing goods purely on its merits. That is why, when a bottle of Royaline Oil is bought it always leads to the sale of several more bottles. Royaline Oil is the great antiseptic. FROM ESCATAWPA, MISS.

We are rounding up our third year's work on this charge. When we came here, we found one church, two had been destroyed a short while before by a storm. We have rebuilt these two churches (Escatawpa and Caswell Springs), anew, and we are now arranging to put electric lights in our church at Escatawpa.

Last year we built a house for Mrs. Laura Price (widow of our late Brother Price) the land and material were donated, and our Endowment Board gave us the money to have the home built.

The amount of $4000 has been added to our church on this circuit within the last three years.

The spiritual growth of our church this year has been very gratifying. We have held six meetings, and they were all successful. We continued our meetings in Escatawpa two weeks. Rev. R. P. Fikes did the preaching; the church was greatly revived. Some of the results of this meeting are: forty-two conversions, four accessions and several family altars pledged.

Brother Fikes was also with us the most of the time in two meetings we held at Orange Grove. Visible results were: twenty-four conversions, seventeen accessions and several family altars pledged. Brother Fikes did splendid preaching with telling effect in each meeting he was with us.

We have had sixty-eight conversions, thirty-one accessions, baptized fifteen children; quite a number of family altars pledged and organized two Epworth Leagues this year. Our Conference collections will be reported in full.

GRACIOUS PREPARATION FOR HIS COMING.

Matt. xxv, 1-13; 1 Thess. v, 4-10.
(Advent.)

1. Nearly nineteen centuries ago, the Lord Jesus Christ, was caught up into the clouds from the midst of his wondering disciples. He had given them full warning of his departure, and promised that he would return. When he comes again the fullness of all things will be brought to pass, and his disciples will come into their own. For this return his followers were to watch and keep everything in readiness.

2. When shall the Master returu?

This question troubled the hearts of his disciples before his departure, and they questioned him closely. He stated that no man knew the time of his coming. In the state of his humiliation, not even the Son of God knew the determined time. Men have made many foolish predictions and set many dates, and great throngs have gathered on the hillsides watching for the return of the Lord. The early Church constantly looked to the skies, ever expecting their triumphant King. There are those among us who still try to count the exact days from Daniel or Revelation. There is a larger host, who are making a still more foolish prediction, against which our Lord has given special warning: they say, "My Lord delayeth his coming." (Matt. xxv:48) There is only one thing that is perfectly clear from the statements of the Lord, and that is, he may come to-day. When he does finally come, men will still be predicting that the world has centuries to wait.

3. How will the Lord come?

As the flashing of the lightening from the east to the west. There will be no question. The Master has promised his unseen presence with his disciples, and some have confused this with his second coming. But when his day shall come, there will be no need of special evangels to tell the story. All the world will know it, and all the Master's disciples shall gather with him to enter into the fullness of his kingdom.

4. How shall we wait for his coming?

We do not know the hour, nor the day of his return. There is only one way to do, and that is to get ready for his return to-day, and live so that we shall he ready at anytime when he comes. In the parable of our lesson the foolish virgins had no oil in their lamps, and it was too late to make ready when the bridegroom appeared. We will not be ready for our Lord, if we neglect our duties and spend our days looking to the skies. He has appointed to each of us our tasks, and in the round of daily duties we may best await his return. When he shall come, there should be no feeling of fear in the hearts of his disciples, but the heart should leap for joy, as one rejoices at the return of his best friend. If to-day, the heart has communed with the Lord, and the day's tasks have received the hest that is in you, if the heavens should suddenly blaze with the glory of the returning Christ, you should go forth to meet him with peace in your heart, and a song of praise upon your lips.

SECOND CHURCH, COLUMBUS, MISS.

The Juniors have recently reorganized with the following officers:

Miss B. Hearon, superintendent; Lovis Redus, president; P. James Boucher, first vice-president; Leonard McKellar, second vice-president; Daisy Lynch, third vice-president; Beunah Baggett, fourth vice-president; Myrtle Haggett, secretary; Ledyard Reynolds, treasurer.

With a membership of twenty-nine these Juniors are doing good work. They have just made a substantial Thanksgiving offering to the Orphanage and are eager to do more for the good of the work.

The Senior League has the following officers:

President, Edd Pennington; first vice-president, Miss Hearon; second vice-president, Mrs. Pridmote; third vice-president, Mrs. Sam Ervin; fourth vice-president, D. L. Ervin; secretary and treasurer, Mr. M. Redus.

This League is alive in all departments. They have regular weekly devotional meetings and other meetings at stated intervals. At the close of a revival held recently in their church they presented the visiting minister with $25. So, they are doing good in a material as well as a spiritual way.

FIRST CHURCH, COLUMBUS, MISS.

The Senior Epworth League has recently installed the following officers:

President, W. E. Kennedy; first vice-president, P. G. Hogan; second vice-president, W. J. Mattox; third vice-president, Mrs. W. E. Kennedy; fourth vice-president, J. B. Love; secretary, Miss Maggie Mullins; treasurer, Miss H. E. Stokes.

All of the new officers are introducing new lines of work into their departments. The first vice-president has weekly, as well as monthly devotional meetings; the second vice-president has a special committee to visit hospitals; the third vice-president will soon begin the study of the Discipline; the fourth vice-president has organized a Mission Study Class and has hegun the study of "The Frontier."

Under the auspices of the fourth vice-president, Dr. Hamil gave his illustrated lecture on Japan which was very much enjoyed and enthused our workers on the subject of missions. This League pledged $50 for the Hiroshima Girl's School, at the Conference in July. That amount has already been sent, and, besides, the pastor has received a very good gift on his Conference collections. Under the leadership of the beloved pastor, T. W. Lewis, and the president, W. E. Kennedy, this League expects to accomplish much for the Master, this year.

The "Galloway Juniors" were organized Oct. 24, with the following officers:

Miss Helen Hampton, superintendent; Harris Cook, president; Nell Carter, first vice-president; A. W. Hampton, second vice-president; Inez Egger third vice-president; Mary Hackleman, fourth vice-president; Joe Louis Fant, secretary and treasurer.

They now have a memhership of thirty-four and are working to make themselves worthy of the name they have chosen.

MARY M. STOKES,
Reporter North Miss. Conf.

If pastors and Leaguers in the hounds of the North Mississippi Conference will send their League reports to Miss Mary M. Stokes, they will confer a favor on the Advocate and the Leagues.

BISHOP E. E. HOSS,
Who is Now Holding the North Mississippi Conference at Okolona, Miss., and Who Will Preside Over the Mississippi Conference at Brookhaven, Miss., Next Week.

It is [illegible] hard for Dr. Anderson, of the Western Methodist, or Dr. Winton, editor of the Christian Advocate, Nashville, who, over the columns of the Western Methodist, [illegible] of his own, for the discussion of Vanderbilt matters, to convince the public that no effort has been made to wrest the literary and scientific departments of the University from the control of the Church, or to locate the new buildings for the Peabody School for Teachers on the Vanderbilt Campus, or to secure such action by the Tennessee Legislature as would enable the trustees of Vanderbilt University to enlarge its influence by effecting a merger of some kind with another institution. Dr. Anderson sees in the whole controversy over the subject "a tempest in a teapot." Others see there is a tempest throughout the whole Church, stirred up by Dr. Kirkland, the Chancellor of Vanderbilt, when he had introduced a bill into the Legislature, which bill, to say the very least, was not in the interest of the Church, but which, had it passed, would have, in point of civil law, weakened the hold of the Church on Vanderbilt trust funds in the hands of the trustees. Chancellor Porter, of the Peabody Board of Trust, who knows as much about the proposed merger of the schools as anyone, has settled the question of the location of the new school, so far as he is concerned. He says: "It will not be located at Vanderbilt, although parties interested in that school and in adjacent property are seeking to persuade the public that if it is not located there 'the million' will be lost. The Vanderbilt is a church school, and will so continue. It was established by the Methodist Church, South. That great organization will not permit the ambition of a few men to divert it from the purpose of its organization." Chancellor Porter is an "old man," and his statements have been ruled out of the controversy by some on account of his age, but we feel sure that he would not have used the language we have quoted had he not known of the effort to divert Vanderbilt University from the purpose of its organization.

The Romanists have many shrines, and images and statues of the Virgin Mary. They are objects of great veneration to the faithful. The tales told of the wonders effected in the presence of these shrines sometimes equal the real miracles recorded in the New Testament, which were performed by our Lord and his apostles. Not all of them are for good; now and then they are for punishment. A tale of the latter character comes direct from Rome, to the effect that a certain man—a butcher by trade—"an anti-clerical" (one who is supposed to hate not only the priesthood, but the church), had insulted the Virgin by forcing his dog to lick her image. The butcher, it is said, "fell senseless, and assumed the rigidity of death." But he was not dead. "He was conveyed to a hospital, where he recovered. Since then he has been crazy, and barks like a dog." The neighbors all around are convinced that a great miracle has been performed, and, as is the wont of Roman Catholics under such circumstances, "are flocking in pilgrimage to the shrine," and solemn functions are being held by the priests "in reparation of the outrage" to a stone image. The poor butcher may have fallen down as dead in the presence of the image, but that the insult to the image was either the cause or the occasion of the so-called miracle would be difficult to prove.

The color line separating the whites and the blacks is being more closely observed year after year. The whites are determined to keep on their own side of the line, and to force the blacks to stay on their side. A pure food exhibitor refused to serve a colored woman at his counter, notwithstanding she had paid an admission fee. She brought suit for damages, but lost. The case was carried to the Supreme Court of the State, and that court decided that "a private business concern [illegible] serve a negro." And the Supreme Court of New York has ruled that "the proprietors of private schools are not compelled under the civil rights bill of that State to accept negroes as pupils." And in some states, while they give negroes access to all public schools, such are the protests of private citizens that separate schools are necessary. And so the colored man is a constant loser even in the North. And we have no doubt that where the distinction is observed and the colored man's civil rights are respected, he lives more peaceably with his Southern neighbors, and is happier than if he was constantly trying to secure social equality. Southern people, as a rule, not only have confidence in honest, industrious and well-behaved negroes, but respect them. In all the forty-four years of the negroes' freedom, we have never known an [illegible] negro to meet with abuse, [illegible] get into such troubles as stir the people to vengeance.

The great railroad man, Mr. J. J. Hill, who might also be very properly called a great economist, has in recent months put forth some statements well adapted to challenge the attention of all thoughtful people. Mr. Hill declares that the soil production of the country is not keeping pace with the population, and that unless there is an awakening among the farmers of the country, in a little while somebody will suffer for bread. We are not prepared to dispute Mr. Hill's statement—nor are we able to defend it. We know, though, that everything the people eat and wear has gone up in price, a pretty sure indication that the supply is not in excess of demand. There are more farmers to-day than ever, and the acreage is likewise larger than ever, but the crops are not as large as they should be. In other words, the farmers do not work to the best advantage. So says Mr. Hill. And population, both by immigration and natural growth, is constantly increasing. Mr. Hill says also that the people are too extravagant, living too fast. Their desires are never satisfied. In almost every department of life there is a demand for higher salaries—a very just demand, if the word salaries includes wages, the pay of ordinary laborers. But, confining salaries to the pay of government officers, bank officers, and hundreds of others that might be named, the demand for more pay is simply a demand for more to spend in pleasure, fine clothing and luxurious living. In these things the people are extravagant—living too fast. It is, indeed, time to call a halt.

The Washington Monument, more than 500 feet tall, does not satisfy all American patriots. It is a memorial, but answers no practical purpose. The idea is suggested of building a memorial that will be expressive of American sentiment in regard to the "father of his country," and at the same time a real benefit to the people. An association has been formed with a view to raising by popular subscription the sum of $2,500,000 to erect a memorial building in Washington, "the building to be used as headquarters and auditorium for every educational, patriotic, art and literary organization in the country." Many leading men, and scientific, art and medical associations have pledged their help in promoting the enterprise. "With the will and last words of George Washington as their warrant for 'promoting institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge' by the proposed building, the originators of the undertaking propose to interest the people throughout the United States in its support. They point out that Washington personally provided $25,000 at his death for the cause of higher education, and that while the fund was never available for the purpose, the people should carry out on a broad scale his dying wishes in this matter.' The association desires very much to have all the money in hand by Washington's birthday, February 22, 1910. As the amount is to be raised by popular subscription, the dimes, as well as the dollars of the people will be accepted.

THE INSTITUTIONAL CHURCH.

"The Institutional Church"? Well, what kind of a church is that, anyway?

Dr. [illegible], in writing after twenty-five years' successful experience in this line says that "A church when it finds itself in a peculiarly unresponsive and adverse environment instinctively proceeds to supplement its ordinary functions, as preaching, prayer meeting, Sunday School and pastoral visitation, with a system of philanthropic and educational institutions, through which it endeavors to touch people on the physical, social and mental sides in order to draw them within hearing of its religious message. In this way it becomes an Institutional Church."

As we rapidly become a nation of cities, the church is being put to a severe test. In spite of our marching orders to conquer the world and the unconditional promise of the abiding presence of the Captain of our Salvation, the query is often raised whether or not we are "holding our own," and the palpable fact stands before us that the church is not enjoying a degree of growth commensurate with the material and numerical progress of the urban population.

In our American cities, Protestants in particular have followed largely a policy of moving away from the congested sections and have built costly and beautiful buildings in the more quiet residence districts. Thinking more of building up the church than the people, we have sounded a retreat before the strongly entrenched forces of the enemy, and have abandoned the throngs of men, women and children in these whirlpools of iniquity leaving them with little more than the service of misguided fanatics and often unscrupulous and designing mission workers whose work contributes more against Christianity than for it.

We are raising money for the noble purpose of sending our strongest and brightest young missionaries to the lands abroad, yet as these thousands of eager and unfortunate foreigners crowd into our down-town communities, we withdraw from them, leaving them to the mercy of the saloon and its allied system of debauchery.

Annually there comes from rural sections, the army of young lives seeking employment, education or special training, affording the well-seasoned timber from which the city has in former years constructed her best citizenship yet the few churches that remain by closing their doors practically six days in the week, leave the residents of the boarding house or cheap hotel, to the constant attraction of the warm, elegantly-furnished saloon, wineroom, cheap theatre and other vicious influences which stealthily but surely decoy thousands of unsuspecting youth from soberness, purity and peace to failure and utter disaster.

There are the cheerless homes, the uncarpeted floors, bare walls, destitute children, brutal men and vicious women of the slum. The night is hideous with the cursings and brawlings of "the tenderloin" the very air of which is saturated with the foulness of sin.

Shall this seething mass of human life with all kinds of customs and notions, many of which are anti-American and anti-Christian, be surrendered by the Church?

Sheer patriotism says something must be done, while the ascended Savior expects his Church to declare that by the power of the divine spirit the city shall be saved.

The general purpose with all churches of this kind is the same. The various departments in each locality however, must be inaugurated after a careful study of the composition of the community, and final plans adopted, after selecting the best from many experiments, readily dropping the many that have failed. A thorough knowledge of the situation and a ready adaptation to the needs of the community are primary and vital conditions to success. No cut-and-dried-plan will avail for every section of every city, any more than the size of my suit or number of my shoe will suit every man I meet.

The methods of a generation ago are not saving the day and something is going to be done. Clinging to the old-time methods the Church has failed downtown. The revival agency, great as it has been and still is, will not solve the problem. Some of our best missionaries abroad have spent a lifetime in seed-sowing with but scant ingathering, yet we try to convert the heathen of our cities with the regular Sunday routine, and the usual two-week's revival. One of our weak points to-day is ever-eagerness to reap, forgetting that no harvest is gathered without prayerful sowing. The revival will gather in the grain in due season, if the good seed has been scattered.

In our own field, particular stress is laid upon preventive work among children and young people, remembering also the needs of the more mature. Since the State provides penitentiaries, jails, workhouses, asylums, etc., to take care of the wrecks of humanity, the Church by her timely ministrations builds the wall at the top of the cliff, thus hindering the wreck of countless human beings.

Our Church in Kansas City, Mo., is located in the "north end," a cosmopolitan section with something like twenty thousand people and we are the only Protestant Church. In the same district, are 150 to 175 saloons, with perhaps as many disreputable houses, a number of cheap theatres and the allied vices of these institutions.

This Institutional Church is made possible by the zealous, tactful and faithful efforts of Rev. C. W. Moore, D. D., who with his co-workers, was enabled to enter the present building four years ago next February. The day Nursery and a remnant of the old Campbell Street congregation, made houseless by fire, were transferred to this new edifice. Through the energy and business skill of Dr. Moore, the church, with its equipment, worth $75,000, was dedicated April 18, without a cent of indebtedness or a collection of any kind whatever.

The church has two main divisions—the department of worship and the institutional—all under the general superintendency of Dr. Moore. Miss Mabel K. Newell, of the Scarritt Bible and Training School, and a strong factor in the development of the work from the beginning, has supervision of the institutional features. Two years ago the undersigned, was appointed pastor of the church, having charge of all the religious work of the congregation. Last year we had 130 additions, we have a vigorous Sunday School, helpful meetings for the young people, Home Mission Society doing good work, Men's Club, prayer meeting, and the usual activities of the church. The church reaches very many unchurched people through her visitation to the sick and distressed, conducting funerals and hand-to-hand service. Misses Ethel Jackson, Lee Critenden and Mrs. W. G. Gatlin have been our resident deaconesses for the last year and without the service of these consecrated women the success of the year could not have been made possible. We also have nurses, housekeeper and about seventy-five volunteer workers.

The title to the property is vested in the Methodist Church Society, a corporate body, and a considerable part of the funds raised by the superintendent is administered by this organization. The Woman's Board of City Missions is correlated with this society, and under its supervision a large part of the work is projected and this body of women expended over $5000 in the work last year. During the entire Conference year over $20,000 was expended for various objects.

About $600 children and young people are regularly touched by the varied activities of the institution.

The institutional features are the day nursery, sewing school, cooking school, music school, club work, pure milk station, juvenile court work, night school, playground, summer outings, mother's meetings, etc. All this service is purely nonsectarian and already our capacity is taxed to the limit.

The support comes from the broad-minded, liberal men and women of various faiths and sects.

In a church of this kind the single congregation is not usually very large, but the number of little groups touched each week and hearing some word of divine truth will aggregate an audience equal to the morning congregation in most of our larger city churches.

The Institutional Church strives to be a religious and social center, sending forth ennobling and uplifting influences throughout this territory of a growing city.

THE FOUR YEARS LIMIT SHOULD BE REMOVED BY THE NEXT GENERAL CONFERENCE.

By Rev. Q. A. Oats.

Mr. Editor: For several years I have been convinced that the four years limit was not necessary, but an incumbus on the church, and so expressed myself in some of our church organs perhaps fifteen years ago. I have felt much interest in the many articles appearing in our different periodicals, advocating this change. It shows the growing conviction of the need and the certainty that it must come. I have seen very few articles opposing it, and they advance no valid arguments against it. So far as I have seen, they seem mainly controlled by a sentiment for the old, and speculative fears of a change.

These are the stock arguments that have been offered against every advancing enterprise of the past. There is more danger in an over conservatism than in hasty changes, when they grow out of true zeal for a good cause. These are easily changed when the mistakes are realized, but not so with an iron-bound conservatism that has shaped all things to its limits, and hardened and caloused all within its grasp. It has made moribund conditions, but the other gives opportunity for life after all. The limitation was first a custom, caused by the judgment of those having in charge the affairs of the infantile church. It was after a time incorporated into a statute. The time was two years. This was lengthened to four years among other radical changes made by the General Conference of 1866.

A limit may have been necessary when it was instituted, though I must confess that I cannot now so see it. Only conviction of the great wisdom of the fathers, who evidently knew the situation, leads me to an admission that such was possibly the case then. If it ever was necessary, that necessity is past, and the law should be relegated to the junk-heap.

Conditions change. This is the reason that the power to change pastors, vested in our General Superintendents, is wise, and gives us the most effective pastorate in the world. It corresponds with a growing and advancing world, affecting church polity like it does everything else. If the changes may be left to the judgment of our bishops, three years out of four, why not for any number of years? While there are reasons for changing the pastors they imply, with equal force, that reasons may exist requiring the pastor to remain longer, the one necessarily involves the other. If it be necessary to hold a man four years on a charge, is there any reason why it might not be necessary for one to stay five years, or even during his useful ministry?

To hold on to an old thing and old plans may be like trying to dress men in the habilaments of childhood, when they have long since outgrown them, and they no longer meet their needs, are unseemly and are in the way. In fact, to hold on to this limitation because it is old is like an attempt would be to force the work of to-day by the same rules primitive men used.

Taking off the limit will give preachers better opportunities to learn their people, the conditions of the work to be done, and to lay foundations for enterprises. There is no question that we have done too much work of a tentative character. This is plain to any one who will view the work in newer and more growing sections and compare our work in church building and other enterprises with the plans of secular institutions, and especially with other churches. Though there are some other causes, especially our reaching and planting on the ground earlier and before the real advancement could be correctly foreseen and before conditions would allow for permanent plans, yet the main trouble has been in the change of pastors before they could foresee the situation and plan for it and carry plans to perfection. There have been instances when pastors have planned and began enterprises that their successors either neglected or ignored or were incompetent to understand or to execute, and they have either totally failed or were, with loss, retarded for years.

I once heard a bishop tell the preachers in a Conference: "My brethren, drive down your stakes for four years." I thought, at the time, why not for five, ten or as if forever? There is no doubt but this should be the spirit. But the frequent removals and the dire wall of limit, presented by the four years' term will, in spite of all a man may wish, have a deterent effect.

Without the limit bishops would have a better chance to use their men where most needed. The limit is arbitrary and absolute, and acts directly on the wisdom of the bishop. It is not a limit any more on the preacher than the very power upon which we depend to carry on our work. Imagine a man carrying out a contract, employing men to do his work, and confronted with a rule by his employees that he can only use a man in one department of the work for a certain length of time. He may have only a certain class of men who can be used, the work is uncompleted, the term expires and the men must be removed. Here the arbitrary limit says, "Stop." though calamity be the result. Is there any difference between this and our law of limitation. If there is I must confess inability to find it.

In view of just such a condition the church has, from time to time, been forced to introduce exemptions, as in the case of missionaries, school men and chaplains in the army and navy. To this we may add instances of forced constructions on thinly veiled evasions of the law on the ground of emergency or necessity in making the appointments.

The exception of missionaries was no doubt only intended for those in foreign fields, where they have to learn the language, the customs and convert and thoroughly train them in all the doctrines and plans of government of the church: and a law of limitation would prove absolutely prohibitory. Yet they are construing this law to apply to our own land and to full-blooded American populations. There have been instances of evading the law, and may be now, by appointing a supply for one year, usually by a local preacher or some one not expected to have anything to do with the work, while the real pastor holds a nominal place in the minutes. How does one of our bishops appear demanding of preachers an obligation "not to mend our rules, but to keep them," after pursuing such a course?

It may be said it is sufficient to allow the bishops such privileges in exceptional and extraordinary occasions. A novice can see the folly, danger, and absurdity of this. It is virtually to say the bishop is above all law and authority, if he only claims the case exceptional and extraordinary. This is as bad as popery. The wise thing to do is to remove the restriction, and it is the safe thing.

If it is necessary to allow the missionary, in any station, to remain an indefinite period, subject to the judgment of the appointing power, it may be in any other. I am convinced, if it is necessary to call an appointment "a mission" in Portland, Ore., and keep a man there seven years, it may be in the country mission in Mississippi, and the bishop will have just as much

[illegible]

It is suggested that a repeal of the limit will bring on a settled pastorate and an abandonment [illegible]. One of the bishops is represented as saying, "If the preachers are to be moved they must be kept movable," an advocacy of the present law. As much as I admire and honor the bishop, I have very little respect for this argument. Is it possible that the preachers are not movable without a law saying they shall be removed at the end of four years? The minutes show that about three-fourths of the preachers are moved every year. Is it possible that our great bishops, with absolute power over the pastors, are impotent with the unchangeable law [illegible] and all else guaranteeing them the authority of the church to move any preacher when they see fit which is the regular pastorate? If this be the case they had better get out of the way and let some of us lesser folk do it. There are several who can. If they cannot, the rest of us three-fourths will help them.

Surely, the average of one-fourth have not grown so omnipotent—if so, "upon what meat doth these, our Caesars, feed?"

I believe in a changeable pastorate, and am one of the last who would advocate anything that would prevent it, but I believe that the statute limit is against the principle, that should rest entirely on the wisdom of our bishops as to when the move should be made. If I were a court of appeal trying a bishop for ignoring the limit I would pronounce the law unconstitutional, as it is something that tends to do away with our general superintendency. If the church can, by statute, say that a man must be moved at the end of four years, it might legislate the whole matter out of the hands of the bishop—if not by direct actions, it could by indirection, or parity of reasoning.

The church has as much right to say a man may be a bishop and not move a man at all as to say he must move them at the end of a definite time. I believe its removal would throw responsibility where it belongs and require it in full force. There are many whom both bishop and church believe should move, who contend for the fourth year and are allowed to stay because responsibility is removed from church and bishop by the law; therefore, I am certain that there are many men now remaining four years that would not if the limit was repealed. I am also satisfied that there are many who would remain four years and longer who do not now have the opportunity. If no other reason for this, it would be that many now remaining four years would get out of the way and there are other reasons I would give, if I could without extending the limits of this article, already too long.

There is no doubt our church has been placed at a great disadvantage in cities by forced removals of the pastors. There can be no other reason for the constantly decreasing place our church holds by comparison with other churches of similar character and standing in intelligence, numbers, means and evangelical zeal. That we are los- [illegible]

In conclusion, I will say [illegible]

A HEART-TO-HEART TALK.

Dear Dr. Boswell: Why should we want to get a new name for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South? [illegible] already. The new order of worship [illegible] revising of the Hymnal is enough for a lifetime. Let every preacher and every Methodist [illegible] the "new name" idea. [illegible] take the place of Methodist Episcopal Church, South? Not never in this world. [illegible] I trust that our leaders will not accept any such name as "Free-Will." The Methodist Church, with its world-wide missions, its teaching, its unselfish doctrines, its grand government and consecrated ministry, is superior to any other organization on earth. As one Baptist [illegible] was kind enough to say, "The Methodist Church takes the lead, blazing the way for other churches to follow." Its system [illegible] preachers and the limited pastorate [illegible] greatest and most beautiful of [illegible] God forbid that it should ever be changed.

[illegible] Rev. [illegible] Lewis tells us what he would [illegible] called to be a layman [illegible] allow the layman to give his advice. No layman should dictate a sermon, or make any suggestion [illegible] regard to the "preacher" [illegible] all he is to give the message. While [illegible] say, yet it is true that some of our [illegible] become indifferent and negligent in [illegible] duty and it is right that some [illegible] whether layman or minister [illegible] their rescue. [illegible] intelligently able to advise any [illegible] the ministers of God [illegible] consecrated men and women [illegible] allow me to [illegible] the mistakes and short comings, as well as [illegible]. I want to mention a few things wherein some of our preachers are indifferent and negligent. One [illegible] is the singing [illegible] a church where [illegible] the pews, this work should not be left altogether for the pastor. Yet [illegible] the preacher-in-charge, and should see that the church is supplied with books, make it the business of some one to distribute them and insist that the congregation join in the singing. And O, sometimes do let us have that sweet old soul-lifting Doxology, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow."

One other reference—and it hurts me to mention it. I was visiting in a town this summer, and heard the pastor announce a revival meeting to begin in that church on a given date. He said that the success of the meeting depended on the members. He also told them of many faults and short comings (which was right), yet the pastor should put his whole soul and interest into it—organize prayer meetings, have a personal talk with as many as possible, get the young and old interested in the song service, let the Christians and sinners know and feel that his soul is burdened, and his heart cry is, "Lord give me this town or I die." But no, this pastor did not show very much interest—nothing more was said or done. Of course, the meeting was cold and formal, and not largely attended.

The church and people of every charge want to find in their pastor a leader, and they look to him as such, and if he shows a lack of interest, it soon shows up among outsiders and some of the preachers. This should not be. If the preacher waits on his members to keep things moving, and the members wait on the preacher, nothing will be done.

While I think the preachers should do their whole duty, and should be prompted thereto, I do not mean to excuse the members. Oh, no! I intend "giving out their spelling lesson" next time. The members, especially the stewards, often come far short of what they should do for their pastor. They should stand by him; aid him in all the collections; see that his salary is paid without the preacher having to give it a thought; see that he has a comfortable home; go to church and see that others go; and a thousand other things. But, I did not start out to mention any of the temporal needs. I want to say in closing, with dear Brother Downer, "That Methodism's supreme need is 'perfect love.'" More of the "holy fire" which burns out every spark of selfishness, and makes our ministers, laymen and members so busy fighting the devil and holding up Christ, that they will not have any time to think of a new name for the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, or to make any other unnecessary changes. These words have come from one whose soul is burdened.

METHODIST.

REMINISCENCES AND ELSE.

Dear Dr. Boswell: In your "old standby" of the 4th instant there appear articles from different brethren that I will most briefly notice, the editor being willing. Brother Belk, of Holly Springs, always writes a letter worth reading: much enjoyed by many, no doubt. Oh! how it stirred my soul, referring to an "old log house, with a corner dedicated to father, who held family prayers." Sorry Brother Belk did not say that his splendid boys have similar privileges. You were good in giving your views on sanctification. Did I say your views? Wesley might demur. Brother Downer writes of Circumstances of Self and Wife. It must be heart-rending to be thus afflicted. What a glorious, God-given privilege to provide, and well, for such claimants upon our Conference treasury! May they feel the Omnific arm underneath them.

It is set forth that your successor is soon to mount the tripod of our dear old ADVOCATE. How history numbers its pages? Yes, I have had too much to say. I look back this holy day and my eyes grow dim, as memory carries me back; enables me, in some degree, to enjoy the brain and hearts of some of our masters in Israel. I recall the unsettled condition of a local preacher on infant relation to the Church. By request, he went with me to hear Dr. T. L. Boswell preach on that subject. He came from the church exclaiming, Oh! I am satisfied, fully, absolutely satisfied, he is the grandest man I ever knew. Is he not a most wonderful man? And so he was. In the finest points he has had no superior, if an equal, in the Southern Church. Dr. Mahon, of the Memphis Conference, is like him, only he lacks that rapid, easy, graceful supply of well chosen words. Dr. Boswell was the easy master of his native tongue. A strong, pure, clean-cut, Anglo-Saxon, poured from his classical lips as limped water gushes from the rock. To me, he was "sui-generis." I wish to say more, but I must quit. God bless you. He has, and will.

DISTRICT MEETING.

The Fourth Annual District Meeting of the Woman's Home Mission Society of the Crowley District was held at Morgan City, Nov. 3-5. Six auxiliaries were represented, and attendance of home auxiliaries, with visitors, was fine.

We found here the unique condition of all denominations working together in a Home Mission Society; and their good will towards visiting sisters was evidenced by royal entertainment in their homes; a fine reception at the parsonage, and delightful automobile and launch rides.

Reports showed a membership of 215 in nine flourishing auxiliaries in our district. 165 children are enrolled in the Brigade in four auxiliaries, and six auxiliaries observed the Week of Prayer. $225 sent to Conference Treasurer, and $1428.48 spent for local work. The records here were by no means full.

Helpful discussions on Home Mission work: The duties of officers; the working of committees; the Conference Expense Fund; the Extra Dollar, were held. The many phases of local work, parsonage building, education, etc., received attention.

Pastor and visiting preachers gave us spiritual lessons and encouragement, and we believe much good will result from the meeting.

MRS. A. E. PRICE,
District Secretary.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

It is indeed gratifying to read the encouraging reports from the auxiliaries, especially concerning the Week of Prayer. Surely the Week of Prayer is a good thing in many ways, and it should be observed by every W. H. M. Society.

One Press Superintendent writes, "As the result of the Week of Prayer our society is in a good physical and spiritual condition." Our auxiliaries need well-informed members, if we had them, we would have enthusiastic workers.

The Mt. Olive Society has appointed a Lookout Committee to glean information from Home Mission fields, and keep the local auxiliary posted. This auxiliary has also appointed a Hustling Committee to secure new members and to visit and encourage the old ones. They have a Home Department in the auxiliary through which they hope to claim every woman in the church as a member of the society. At an early date they expect to begin the Reading Course, given by the Board of Home Missions.

Every auxiliary should have a press superintendent and she should feel it her duty to report to the local paper and the Conference press superintendent at least once a month. This report should be made as attractive as possible.

Word comes from the secretary that three new auxiliaries have been organized in the Jackson District, one at Union with twenty-one members, and one at Fletcher Chapel with eighteen members, and one at Bentonia with eight members. This gives Jackson the banner for the largest number of auxiliaries reported to the press superintendent for this year.

The secretary reports all of these societies enthused with the work, and that the third vice-president of the society at Fletcher Chapel has organized a Brigade with 31 members. We extend to these new auxiliaries a hearty welcome and hope that we will prove a blessing to them and they to us. Let us remember these in our prayers. This same district secretary says that all of the auxiliaries in the district seem to have taken on new life this year. We are so glad our women are being awakened to the needs of this branch of church work; but there are yet so many who are only "hearers."

The secretary of the Natchez District has been visiting most profitably and pleasantly among the auxiliaries in her district, giving them encouragement and renewing interest. There is nothing that arouses interest more than attention shown by some consecrated Christian who is filled with the love for the work, and good always comes to both sides.

MRS. J. L. NEILL,
Press Superintendent.

OUR COUNTRY CHURCHES.

Mississippi is on the eve of a great agricultural revolution. Verily the farmer is coming into his own. It is now his day. Modern and improved methods of farming are obtaining rapidly. It is being ascertained that it is easier to reclaim an old worn-out acre of land than it is to clear a new one. Our country is being threaded with telephones. Rural Free delivery brings literature to our doors. Daily newspapers are not uncommon in the country neighborhoods. A public school is on every hill top. Our great agricultural and mechanical college at Starkville now has three wings hovering over the three different sections of the State. One in the hill section at Holly Springs, one in the delta section at or near Greenville and one in the piny woods section at McNeil. In addition to this the legislature has provided for an agricultural high school in each county. It is true that our Supreme Court only very recently declared the bill unconstitutional because of class legislation, but it is almost certain that the legislature that passed that bill in 1908 will re-enact it with such amendments thereto as may meet the defects pointed out by the Court. It is a day of agriculturalism in Mississippi. The Boys' Corn Clubs being organized all over the State by the various county superintendents of education are adding immense interest to the move. The agricultural spirit is thus penetrating our homes and taking hold of our boys. The idea is fast obtaining that the most promising vocation for a young man is intelligent farming. The brain as well as brawn is playing a very large part in the farming of to-day. A bright future is just dawning upon us. What the Carolinas and Georgia have done we can do. We are just waking up to our possibilities. Our great daily papers are devoting an unusual amount of space and time to the agricultural move. The disposition to leave the country and rush to the towns and villages is losing its charm.

Now, what does all this bode to our country churches? It is easy to see that it means the uplifting of every one of them. The time is not far distant when a country church will be preferred to the one in the town. With good schools, daily papers, telephones, free delivery of mails, modern homes, well-cultivated fields, good roads, a fine crop of young men and women who believe in making the country home a delightful one, it must be evident that our country churches will be the beneficiaries and become a part and parcel of the spirit of progress. Let every minister, who now has the good fortune to be pastor of a country church, get right into this spirit of improved agriculturalism and have his community hasten the day which is now fast dawning for improved country lfe. The harvest is ripe. Our churches will be wise if they catch the onward move and join in it. A hint to the wise is sufficient.

LETTER FROM MEXICO.

The following is a letter from Mrs. O'Bierne, a missionary in Mexico, to her mother, Mrs. T. J. Porter, a member of my charge (Zwolle, La.). Thinking it might stimulate our people on foreign missions, I ask you to give it a place in the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Yours fraternally,

J. C. PRICE, P. C.

San Luis Potosi, Mexico, Oct. 31, 1909.

Dearest Mother: I had the time of my life Saturday, Sunday and Monday. Felt more like a real missionary than ever. One of our Bible women visited San Pedro, a mining town, about twenty miles away, sold a few Bibles, distributed some tracts and rented a little house for us to have services in, and asked Brother Onderdonk (our pastor) to let one of his young preachers go out there occasionally. So it was planned that last Saturday, Gregoria, the Bible woman; Francisco Olazable, the best fellow in Colegio Wesleyano, and Miss Moling, were to go, but Miss Moling being ill it was decided, fortunately for me, that I should go in her stead. Gregoria said we'd better take some food and a blanket, as we might have to camp, which we did, including the few toilet articles we might need. I wore a rebosa on my head, of course. We had to leave at 5:30 a. m. to get our train, a freight that brings the ore to the smelter which is in the edge of San Luis. We borrowed the little folding organ from the Sunday school. Francisco carried this and his suit case, Gregoria a thin pad—could not call it a mattress—and her basket containing tortillas, fryolas, chile, corn boiled in the shuck, coffee and sugar. There were about 200 people waiting for the train at the crossroads where we got off the street car. They were nearly all laborers and their wives. The women with their bright dresses and black rebosas, the men in their tight trousers, gay blankets and immense sombreros, clumps of cacti, with here and there the dark-green of a pepper tree with its graceful foliage and brilliant berries, the mountains in the back ground with the sun touching earth and clouds and sky with purple and rose and gold, one of the most gorgeous sunrises I ever saw, made altogether a picture fit for an artist's brush, one worth going many miles to see.

Fortunately, we got seats in the caboose and did not have to go on the flat cars, as most of them did, but the odor and smoke of cigarettes would have been almost unbearable had I not been sitting by a window, as men, women and children are smoking. I saw a mother give her little-three-years-old child a cigarette. With the mountains always in sight, after a few miles we could tell we were going up-grade, and after a while could see the city of San Luis lying out behind us like a little village. Then we got into the mountains and the city was lost to view, but the peaks, rising on every side, made most beautiful scenery.

We arrived at the end of the road at 9 o'clock, but had about one-fourth mile to walk up the mountain side to the town. The air was so exhilirating this was a pleasure, only we would get out of breath and have to rest occasionally.

I wish you could see the town just as I saw it. Two beautiful Roman Catholic churches towering above the little houses of adobe, stone and tents galore, with hundreds of doors in the mountain sides showing that many had made their homes in the bosom of mother earth. There was no boarding house or hotel, so we just camped in our little house, rented a little brasero, got charcoal to burn on it and here made coffee in an earthen pitcher, fried meat and warmed up our food. I never ate when food tasted better. The house was made of stone with a dirt floor, the only opening being the door. We had service Saturday night and great crowds gathered around, but only three dared to come in. They've never had Protestant services and were scared of us, I suppose, and, of course, are taught to hate the "cursed Protestants." A policeman was sent to keep order and he was our good friend all the time. Francisco preached like he had a house full. He really did have a big audience in the street, several hundred, I suppose. It is against the law to preach out of doors, but not to listen there. We sang and prayed and preached and gave away many tracts, not at all discouraged with our beginning. After the meeting we spread out our pallets. Francisco in one end of the room, Gregoria and I in the other, blew out the candles and the darkness served as a curtain. He had only a blanket to lie on, and we had only a thin pad between us and the ground, but we did not get cold, for the fleas kept us exercising all night. I've never seen anything like them. My body was speckled from head to foot. We rose while it was dark and dressed.

Two drunk men and one crazy man called on us during the day. At 11 o'clock we began to sing. The policeman had not yet arrived. Crowds gathered around and many near the door were mocking and making fun, no one having entered. A man, a rough laborer, came in, strode up to Francisco and said, "I'm a friend to Protestantism and I fear these people are planning to do you harm if the policeman does not come soon." I knew that I was the only American in the place, that these people were wicked and fanatical, that humanly speaking we were at their mercy, but I never felt more thoroughly given up to God's will than then. The ninety-first Psalm came to me almost as if a voice had spoken it. Francisco asked me to play, "Peace, Be Still"—you know it, "Master, the Tempest is Raging," and the last verse,

> "Whether the waves of the storm-tossed sea,
> Or demons or men or whatever it be;
> They all shall sweetly obey thy will,
> Peace be still."

The words were a message of assurance to our hearts. I felt that his presence surrounded us as a wall of fire. In a few moments the policeman came, restored order, took his stand near the door and there was not one word more of disturbance. Several people came in and Francisco preached as I have never heard him before. His face was fairly transformed by the power of the Spirit. Again the street was crowded for nearly a block. When the call for penitents was made seven came forward, two from outside the door, and three of them were weeping. The missionary and Bible woman were weeping too for joy. How God can bring victory out of defeat. There was hardly fifteen minutes during the afternoon that there was not some one at the door asking for tracts. The people are starving for the bread of life. There was a larger attendance at the evening meeting and more interest. A shower of stones came in at the door before we started the service, but no one was hurt. We lay down at a late hour, tired, but, oh, so happy. I thought of him who left the glories of heaven to suffer for me, who had not where to lay his head, and I was glad that I could be his servant.

These people are very much on my heart. A regular work ought to be established. We have no funds for it. We need a little folding organ and money to pay the workers' expenses. We ought to have a church there—$250 to $300 would put up a very neat one. I feel that we must have it. Miss Moling and I will visit them occasionally as it is possible. I'd like to go every Sunday; really, to live there and work would suit me best, but I am glad of what I do here. I am told there are several thousand people in San Pedro. The silver and gold mines are very rich and though they have been worked for about four hundred years will last for years to come. I believe in a few years we would have a self-supporting work there. The people are as wicked as can be, drunkenness and impurity being the principal vices. I saw an old, gray-headed woman lying in the dirt in front of a saloon with her head down-hill so drunk that she appeared to be dead. There is much more, but I must stop.

My soul is mounting up! The heavens are cleft above! Praise the Lord! Lovingly,

NELLIE O'BIERNE.

Due to an oversight the contribution from the Hammond Sunday school to the "Work Day" Orphanage fund was omitted from the printed list in the "Visitor." We regret this omission very much, for we appreciate all that has been done and want all to have due credit. This amount, $5.35, was among the first to come in. It will appear in the next issue of the Visitor.

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION CALENDAR FOR 1910.

The publishers of The Youth's Companion will, as always at this season, present to every subscriber whose subscription ($1.75) is paid for 1910 a beautiful calendar for the new year. The picture panel which suggests the title, "Venetian," for the calendar was painted by the famous marine artist, Thomas Moran. His Venetian scene, reproduced in the calendar by thirteen-color lithography, will be found well worth preserving, long after 1910 is gone by.

SOUND TO THE CORE.

How do you like to take a good, big, bite out of a nice, plump, rosy apple, and find that it is all decayed inside? Not very pleasant, is it? Well, a dishonest boy or girl is like nothing in the world more than that apple. He may appear well, but below the surface he is unsound and bad. If you wish to be sound and good to the core, if you wish to be loved and trusted and valued, you must be honest.—Selected.

THERE WERE TWO TO SEE.

Two boys were one day walking along the street together. One of them had just come out of a store, where he had bought some things for his mother. While waiting for the clerk to get them for him, he had stood beside a large basket of fine ripe pears.

"Why did you not pocket some of those nice pears?" asked the other boy, who had stood in the door and seen the fine chance he had to help himself. "There was no one to see you?"

"Yes, there were two persons to see me, even if you had not been there. I was there to see myself, and I could never have felt happy again if I had stolen; and God was there to see me. And how could I have knelt down and said, 'Our Father, who art in heaven,' if I had taken what did not belong to me?"

Let us remember, when we are tempted to do wrong, because no one seems to be looking at us, that at least two persons will know of the act; one the actor, and the other the great Judge of all.—The Sunbeam.

HOUSECLEANING IN JAPAN.

Housecleaning in this interesting country is done by law. At the outset policemen orter tea tables, bedding, straw matting, all the Lares and Penates out on the sidewalk, where they finish their official inspection with a sprinkling of lime and antiseptic. "This is spring house cleaning in Japan," says the Boston Herald. The wife of Rev. Dr. Dearing, general missionary of the Baptist Eastern Missions, has managed cleaning for seventeen springs at her home in the Flowery Kingdom.

"April is a busy month for the Japanese housekeeper," she says. "From attic to—alas! we have no cellar—from attic to ground floor we get ready for the summer months of moisture. The policemen come and tell us that we must have the house cleaned by such and such a day. They go through the city by blocks. Everyday the housekeepers living in one block are notified, the next day the housekeepers in another, and so on, until the city is clean. Everything has to be taken out in the street, and everything is inspected. They pour in antiseptics and lime in anticipation of the coming plague. Fortunately, it very seldom comes."—Selected.

THE HISTORY OF A $10 CHECK.

The first I remember was hearing some one say: "This is given for Thanksgiving." I thought to myself: "Am I given?" The more I thought about it, it seemed to me that I was to give myself. "Who gives himself feeds three—himself, his hungry neighbor, and me." So I gave, and gave—until I had given all myself. This is the way I did it:

Two little boys had no rubbers to wear on stormy days, and often got their feet wet, and would be sick. A small part of me was given to buy rubbers. These same little boys could have no mince pie and crullers for Thanksgiving dinner, and boys do like pie and crullers! I gave another small part of me for a good big pie and crullers.

A woman who is ill said she would enjoy some oysters, and I found out she needed calves'-foot jelly, an outing flannel gown, nice clean sheets, pillow-cases, and a blanket. I was so glad I could give of myself for her needs.

I heard of a mother with two little children who needed butter and oil, and I helped again.

Then a woman who works hard every day, whose husband is ill, and who has three little girls, could not afford to buy a Thanksgiving dinner for them. Well, I just said: "This is my chance." If you could only have heard that woman's expressions of thanksgiving when she saw the dinner—chicken, potatoes, onions, cabbage, sugar, tea, butter, bread and crackers! You can imagine how the little girl's mouths watered at the sight of the good, fat mince pie and crullers.

Still a little of myself remained, and I decided to use the rest of me in buying milk tickets for some one who needed milk

I am nearly all gone, but I must say I have enjoyed the giving of myself to help make the twelve persons have a happy "Thanksgiving Day."—Selected.

A FOURPENNY TURKEY.

He was a bouncing big turkey; and they hung him by the heels, so that his nose almost touched the walk just outside the butcher's shop. A little girl was standing there watching it. You could see that she was a hungry little girl; and, worse than that, she was cold, too, for her shawl had to do for hood and almost everything else No one was looking, and so she put out a little red hand and gave the great turkey a push; and he swung back and forth, almost making the great iron hook creak, he was so heavy.

"What a splendid big turkey!"

The poor little girl turned round; and there was another little girl looking at the turkey, too. She was out walking with her dolls, and had on a cloak with real fur all around the edges; and she had a real muff, white with little black spots all over it.

"Good morning, Miss," said the butcher man. You see he knew the little girl with the muff perfectly well.

"That's a big turkey, Mr. Martin."

"Yes," said the poor little girl timidly. "He's the biggest I ever saw in my life. He must be splendid to eat."

"Pooh!" said the little girl with the muff. He isn't any bigger than the one my papa brought home for Thanksgiving to-morrow. I know."

"Could I have a leg if I came for it to-morrow?" asked the poor little girl, softly.

"What! haven't you a whole turkey?"

"Never had one in my life," said the poor little girl.

"Then you shall have this one," said the little lady with the muff. "Mr. Martin, I've got some money in my savings-bank at home, and my papa said I could do just as I wanted to with it, and I'm going to buy the turkey for this little girl."

The poor little girl's eyes grew so very large you wouldn't have known them. "I shall love you always so much, so very, very much, and I'll go home for Foxy to help. Foxy is my brother, and I know we can carry him."

I haven't room to tell you all about it, but the poor little girl got her turkey and papa his bill.

"What's this?" said he. "Another turkey, eighteen pounds, $3.60?"

"That's all right," said the little girl who had the muff. "I bought him, and gave him to a poor little girl who never ate one, and the money is in my iron bank."

The bank was opened, and there were just four big pennies in it.—New York Tribune.

ARE PREACHERS WORTH WHAT THEY ARE PAID?

One man who has a very low estimate of the Christian ministry, taking no account of their spiritual functions, but judging them in the light of their worth in dollars and cents, never thinking for a moment that the ministry has anything to do in conserving the peace and honor of a community, upon which everything depends, tells us that "the preachers are paid a great deal more than they are worth." This man is of the opinion that what preachers receive over and above what they earn is just that much money wasted. Another man believes that preachers are underpaid, and sets forth the fact as the one great reason why there is a dearth in the ranks of the ministry, and as an inducement to men to enter the ministry "would have the salary of every preacher in the United States doubled without delay."

We do not believe that the Church is so secularized as to keep men called of God out of the ministry through fear of pecuniary suffering. It is hard to think of a man called of God drawing back because the compensation is not adequate. A man of that kind is in no proper frame of mind or heart to undertake the ministry even though he had an assurance of five thousand a year. "Adequate compensation," after the world's standard, does not enter into the contract between the Lord and one who proposes to preach. And as poorly as some of the Lord's faithful ones are paid, we could not conceive of a greater calamity to the Church and ministry than to "double the salary of every preacher in the United States without delay." It would be a blessing to double the salary of thousands we do not doubt, nor do we doubt that it would be a blessing if the salary of thousands of others could be cut half in two.

Of course we do not sympathize at all with the notion that all preachers are paid more than they are worth. The idea at the bottom of that statement is that preachers are worth nothing at all. Men who entertain the notion are few. Judged by any standard, many preachers are underpaid. We do not mean by this that they get less than is sufficient to meet their desires and make them comfortable, but that they receive less than they really earn. Many of our good men, some of them our best men, though uneducated, give all their time to earnest work, and succeed in building up the Church, and never receive anything above a bare living. They deserve more. But there are others, who, compared to the ones [illegible] named, and [illegible] the same way [illegible] will [illegible]

[illegible]

When it comes to pass that the preachers are estimated at their true worth [illegible] by their success in doing the work of the Church and by their personal qualifications, and the importance of churches is determined by their [illegible] mainly and finally and eternally [illegible] the cause rather than by their wealth and [illegible] position, and willingness to pay a large salary, the inequalities we now see and hear [illegible] will disappear.

But there will always be [illegible] more or less [illegible] happy in the belief that there will always be a class of faithful men, filled with [illegible] ready to give them the bread of life [illegible] serve [illegible] to reward them at the [illegible]

Thank the Lord [illegible] faithful [illegible]

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY

For some time past there has been considerable interest about Nashville concerning a supposed scheme to merge the Peabody College with Vanderbilt University. Efforts were made to secure from the State of Tennessee, the city of Nashville and Davidson County, the amount of $250,000, $200,000 and $100,000 respectively, provided the Peabody Board of Trustees would appropriate a million dollars additional to build a great Teacher Training School in Nashville. The effort was successful. It soon became noised around that the Chancellor of Vanderbilt University was figuring in the matter with a view to merging the interests of the two schools. This looked like trying to bring the Peabody under sectarian control, inasmuch as Vanderbilt University is a Methodist institution. But the cry of "sectarianism" checkmated the movement then. Col. E. C. Lewis, in a letter to the Nashville American, says, "they tried to get rid of Vanderbilt's charter and the Methodist Bishops." How much truth there is in all that Col. Lewis says, we are not prepared to determine; but it is certain that the Peabody [illegible] at Nashville bought ground near Vanderbilt [illegible] for the proposed Teacher Training School. On Monday, Oct. 4, the county court of Davidson County, moved by strong opposition to the proposed association of Peabody with Vanderbilt, adopted a resolution "providing that the $100,000 voted by the people of the county be held up and not turned over to the trustees until after the January term of court." This indicates that there is ground for believing that the merging of the two schools was in prospect. During the debate in the county court it was alleged that the merger scheme included the [illegible] of both institutions [illegible] the Chancellor of Vanderbilt University. [illegible] just to say in this connection that [illegible] who is charged by Col. Lewis [illegible] in connection with Chancellor Kirkland, with trying to secure the passage of an act of the Tennessee Legislature whereby the proposed merger could be more easily effected, had nothing [illegible] with the scheme. Instead of this [illegible] he worked against it and helped to defeat it. [illegible] on the other hand it is denied that there is [illegible] any purpose on the part of the [illegible] to merge the [illegible] the light of events transpiring [illegible] the last session of the Tennessee Legislature, we are unable to see [illegible] Dr. Kirkland, Dr. Witt and others [illegible] before that body for the passage of a bill that would have allowed the trustees [illegible] to enlarge the contractual powers of the [illegible]—that is, enable them to convey portions [illegible] of their institutions of learning [illegible] regarding the same [illegible]. If Dr. Hall, who made these statements before the legislative committee [illegible] and represented the [illegible] trustees of the University [illegible] Kirkland and Dr. Witt [illegible] explain how the trustees could consistently take [illegible] which, according to their own admission [illegible] belong to the Church, and convey them [illegible] institutions. Certainly they do not [illegible] that an act of the State Legislature can [illegible] of a moral obligation.

What means this from Nashville as late as November 13: "The Peabody Board denies that [illegible] merger or affiliation was ever meant, but [illegible] nothing more is contemplated than such arrangements between two independent institutions as shall avoid duplication of plants, of [illegible] and of instructors, as shall enable each [illegible] on terms and for consideration satisfactory [illegible] to supply the other with such educational facilities as the latter could secure for itself independently only at great and unnecessary expense. As there could be no effective co-operation [illegible] unless the two institutions were located in immediate proximity to each other, part of the campus of Vanderbilt University, if that could be acquired, or, if not, then other land in the immediate vicinity of that campus, [illegible] the trustees to be the true site for the [illegible] college, and [illegible] has been fixed upon as [illegible]"

What [illegible] very like a merger,—a first [illegible] arrangement. It is equivalent to two railroads [illegible] forbidden by law to merge [illegible] agreeing to use the same tracks, the same engines, the same rolling stock, and the same depots and terminals, thus supplying each other with facilities that could be purchased independently only at great and unnecessary expense." But what troubles us even in a merger like this is to know how Vanderbilt [illegible] paid for their services from Church funds can give valuable time to outside institutions [illegible] But being [illegible] under sectarian influence and control, it is possible we do not know what a University [illegible] is capable of accomplishing.

In connection with the statement above quoted comes the news that the entire scheme for disposing of the vast Peabody trust fund may be revised, and that after all Nashville may lose the Peabody Training School. This uncertainty grows out of the hard opposition to the merging of the Peabody with the Vanderbilt—opposition on the part of Peabody's friends because they do not wish that institution brought under sectarian influence, and on the other hand, because there is fear of secularizing Vanderbilt University, to say nothing of diverting sacred trust funds into channels never intended by the founders and owners of the institution.

It seems to us that in view of the widespread uneasiness generated by Dr. Kirkland's bill before the Tennessee Legislature, and the statement attributed to him, viz, that "the finding" of the General Conference Commission appointed to investigate the relation of Vanderbilt University to the Church "is not worth the paper it was written upon," and if Vanderbilt is the property of the Church, the trustees should say so unequivocally, and declare to the Church that they accept the finding of the General Conference Commission as final. That would at once allay all suspicion and all agitation. If this is not done we do not see how even the General Conference can settle the question. As matters now stand, the trustees are masters, and as Dr. Winton has intimated, can be mastered only by appeal to Caesar.

A PERSONAL NOTE.

By Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald.

For the outgoing and the incoming editor there is a kindly greeting in my heart. That the blessing of God may rest on Dr. Boswell, is my prayer. He has been sound and sensible, faithful and diligent, about three-thirds right in his opinions, with the courage of his convictions. On Dr. Meek, his successor, his mantle will fall. The brethren of the patronizing Conferences know him, believe in him and love him. The proper way for them to express their confidence and affection is to build up the subscription list of the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Nashville, Tenn.

PERSONAL.

We shall expect to hear of fine reports from North Mississippi, for there come to us advices of good crops and prosperous conditions in that section.

Miss Ada Parker, a missionary to Brazil who is now spending her furlough in New Orleans, brightened this office by her presence, one day last week.

Rev. C. McDonald writes: "Brother Powell is bearing his sufferings patiently and his condition is very much as for weeks past. I know his brethren pray for him and sympathize with him."

Rev. F. M. Williams, an honored superannuate of the Mississippi Conference, will spend the winter at Oak Ridge, visiting his daughter, Mrs. Mollie W. Grant. Doubtless his presence will prove a blessing to that community.

Rev. Thos. J. Martin, Sr., sends in a handsome club of eleven subscribers from Ringgold, La. We appreciate this, especially as this is the season of the year when, in the rush of preparation for Conference, many forget the Advocate.

It is with great pleasure that we learn that Prof. W. L. Weber is once more in his place at the head of Centenary College, and able to meet the duties of his position. All his friends will rejoice to know that he is much improved in health.

The Assistant Editor recently had a revival in the church of which he is pastor. He was assisted by Rev. Walter G. Harbin. He states that Brother Harbin is the most satisfactory help he has ever had in a revival, and that he commends him to those seeking a deeply spiritual preacher for revival work.

Rev. H. H. Griffin has been stationed at Danville, Ark., this year. It is a good, live town. He is building a splendid, new church there. When completed, it will rank among the best churches in the Arkansas Conference. He is delighted with his new field.

The members of the Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences are setting their faces towards the respective meeting places on Wednesday next. Bishop Hoss will hold the Mississippi Conference in Brookhaven, Miss., and Bishop Candler the Louisiana Conference in Alexandria, La.

Mr. J. F. Long, General Secretary of the Mississippi State Sunday School Association, made a pleasant call at the Advocate office one day last week. Brother Long is an experienced Sunday School man, and speaks in glowing terms of the work of the International Sunday School Association in his State.

Bishop E. E. Hoss was in Greenville, Miss., on Sunday Last, with Rev. R. A. Meek, of the Greenville District, North Mississippi Conference, and was entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Barlee. The Bishop delivered two powerful sermons (morning and evening) to large congregations in the Methodist Church of that place, Rev. J. R. Countiss, pastor.

Our friend, who is a brilliant preacher, great church builder, and, above all, a successful soul-winner, Rev. J. E. Wray, D. D., has been transferred from Houston, Tex., to the South Georgia Conference. Resolutions were adopted by the preachers' meeting of Houston expressing their appreciation of the work done by Dr. Wray while in their midst, and voicing their regret at his departure.

Rev. W. C. Harris writes from Tolpa, Tex.: "Well, here I am in my new charge in the Northwest Texas Conference, and some things are encouraging, some are otherwise. On the whole, I am glad that I am here. We have been received most kindly, and have good reason to hope for a pleasant and successful year." May the favor of the Lord follow our brother in Texas, as it did in the North Mississippi Conference.

We quote from the Gloster (Miss.) Record: "Thanksgiving was appropriately observed in Gloster, business of all kinds being suspended. A union service was held at the M. E. Church, South, Dr. H. W. Featherstun, P. E. of this district, preaching the sermon. The sermon was a masterly effort, and was greatly enjoyed." During the past year, once a month Dr. Featherstun has given a strong, clear, and much-appreciated exposition of Scripture in the Epworth League prayer topic.

Mrs. Elizabeth Bancroft Ramsey, the wife of the late Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, of the North Mississippi Conference, died Sunday evening, Nov. 21, in Durant, Miss. Sister Ramsey was born in Mobile, Ala., Dec. 25, 1829; was married to the Rev. T. Y. Ramsey Feb. 4, 1847, and, had she lived until next Christmas, she would have been eighty years old. She was buried from the Durant Methodist Church, Tuesday morning, at ten o'clock, Rev. N. G. Augustus and the pastor officiating. A fitting tribute to this faithful servant of the Lord has been promised this paper at an early date.

Rev. O. G. Halliburton has been blessed with good meetings at both his churches, Bogue Chitto and Norfield. He was assisted by Brother W. M. McIntosh, of Iuka, Miss., and Rev. G. T. Tatum, of Jonesboro, Ark. Brother Halliburton says they are fine helpers. Both meetings proved to be spiritual uplifts to the churches, and resulted further in the conversion of sinners. All told, between seventy-five and one hundred persons were added to the Church. At the close of the Norfield meeting, thirty-two adults and three infants were baptized, and a Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of thirty members was organized. Brother Halliburton is in great favor with his people.

Rev. O. S. Lewis, of Broad Street Church, Hattiesburg, Miss., writes that his work has been "greatly blessed of the Lord. The membership was wonderfully revived in a fifteen days' meeting that closed two weeks ago. The spiritual condition is better now than ever before during the year. All departments of the church, the Sunday School, League, and Woman's Home and Foreign Mission societies are in flourishing condition. The young people and children are doing great work in their societies. Nearly all our young people will pray in public and testify. The W. H. M. Society and W. F. M. Society of the Hattiesburg District held a joint Conference in our church, Friday, Saturday and Sunday. The Conference was a decided success—and especially was our church greatly blessed. We feel greatly encouraged and are so thankful for God's blessings."

NEW ORLEANS PREACHERS' MEETING.

The pastors reported as follows for November:

Parker Memorial—Congregations good. Very large Sunday School; enrollment 455. Good revival. Epworth League at its best. Received two new members. Thanksgiving offering amounted to $536.33. Subscriptions, $26. There is enough in sight to put up the wood work on the church.

Epworth—Doing well. Growing all the time. Received four members. Best Sunday School in town. All at work in its interest. Epworth League fills its new room. No debt. But we need a new banquette.

First Church—Spiritual condition better. People united. Additions this year, 110. Argosy Society raised this month $336. Bought a new piano. Hopeful League.

Louisiana Avenue—Moving season effects our membership materially. Good board of stewards. All departments at work. Have a new Sunday School superintendent caused by the retirement of Brother W. B. Thomson who has for thirty-three years faithfully served in this office. Epworth League doing fine.

Second Church—"Good year Bishop." Encouraging Sunday School. Good home department. Revival successful under the leadership of Brother Niebergal. One Woman's Society, uniting Foreign, Home and Ladies' Aid Societies.

St. Mark's Hall—Present last night, 100. Children's hour is good. Largest field in the city. Enrolled in sewing school, 135. Average attendance, 75.

Rayne Memorial—Encouraging fall work. Had every seat taken at morning service yesterday. Sunday School moving on with enthusiasm. Adult department is well organized. Have two deaconesses.

Carrollton—Fine board of stewards. Everything encouraging. League and Sunday School well organized. Membership is active in all lines of work.

Felicity—Have put extensive repairs on the church caused by the storm. Building needed repairs from top to bottom. Sunday night service largely attended because of the use of stereopticon to illustrate Scripture truths.

Douglas Park Mission is doing well.

Dr. Parker, as presiding elder, reported this to be the best of the three years on the district. A spirit of hopefulness is evident everywhere and all the preachers have been hard at work.

Albert S. Lutz, Secretary.

A FEW KIND WORDS.

Dear Doctor Boswell: In returning to my Conference (North Alabama) after a year of hard and faithful service at Second Methodist Church, allow me to say that no preacher has ever had a more generous and gracious reception and treatment by both preachers and laymen, than that extended me by the North Mississippi Conference. They are a goodly company of saints. The Pastors Union of this city has honored me in making me their chairman for the year and in electing me to deliver the special sermon on Thanksgiving Day. I go from this section with the kindest remembrances for all and praying the blessings of God on them. As you are soon to make a change of work, I will profess my admiration for you as a Christian gentleman and faithful and competent editor. May blessings attend you and yours.

No pastor ever had a more faithful and efficient presiding elder than Rev. L. M. Lipscomb.

Yours in Christian bonds,

M. H. Wells.

Miss MAGGIE B. BLACKWOOD, daughter of Brother and Sister J. H. Blackwood, near Drew, Miss., departed this life on the 16th of October, 1909. She was born in Choctaw County, Miss., December, 1887. These dates compass the life of one of the best young women of our church. She was of a joyous and happy disposition which made everyone feel better who was in her company. She loved to sing the sweet songs of Zion and always enjoyed the Sunday School and protracted meetings. A kind friend, loving sister, and dutiful daughter. May the remembrance of her graces be a light to brighten the pathway of father, mother, brothers and friends on their way to the celestial city. Her pastor,

J. RITCHEY.

WILLIAM ALFRED SUMMER, son of Willie Summer and Cornelia Rhodes, was born in Smith County, Miss., Feb. 23, 1870, and died Oct. 10, 1909, at his home in Morton, Miss., in his fortieth year. He was married to Miss Bnla Flowers, Oct. 25, 1903, who, with three children, are left to mourn their loss. He died of typhoid fever after an illness lasting about thirty days. All that medical skill or skilful nursing could do was done, but to no avail. "Death loves a shining mark." And seemingly the one whom the community could least spare was ruthlessly cut down in the prime and strength of manhood. His death cast a shadow over the entire community. He united with the Methodist Church in early life, and lived an honored and consistent member of the same until the day of his death. He was reared in the Sunday-school and church, hence he knew not what it was to live outside the influence of either. He was a steward and Sunday School superintendent in the church when he died, and had been for a number of years. He discharged the duties of each office faithfully, and to the best of his ability. As a citizen, he had the respect and confidence of the entire community; discharging faithfully every public trust committed to his hands. His character was above reproach, he was chaste in speech, courteous, noble-hearted, and generous to all. The love of Sunday-school scholars for their superintendent was shown by the beautiful floral tributes presented by them at his funeral. He was a good husband, a kind and loving father. The heart-broken wife said to the writer a few nights before he died: "He has always been so good to me and the children; so kind and gentle; an angel in the home." His place will be hard to fill in both church and community. It is in the home, however, around the fireside, in the hearts of the wife and children, that the loss of him will be most keenly felt. He died as he had lived, in the comfort and consolation of the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ. "A prince and a great man has fallen this day in Israel." May the grace and the comforting presence of the Heavenly Father sustain the wife and the fatherless children.

W. J. DAWSON.

RESOLUTIONS.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Suday school at Lauderdale:

Whereas, The messenger of death has invaded the ranks of our Sunday school and called from earth to heaven one of our members in the person of MRS. HOLLIE HUNTER: therefore be it resolved by the Methodist Sunday School at Lauderdale,

First—That in the death of Mrs. Hunter our church and Sunday school sustains the loss of one of its best members and most faithful teachers, a consistent Christian Woman, whose example is worthy of our imitation.

Second—That we bow in humble submission to the will of our heavenly Father who has called this, his faithful child home.

Third—That we hereby as a school extend to the bereaved ones our most sincere sympathy in this, their great sorrow.

Fourth—That a copy of these resolutions be recorded upon the Sunday school book and a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publishing.

Signed, T. H. Naylor, Superintendent; Mrs. Susan Case Moore, Teacher.

RESOLUTIONS.

The following resolutions of sympathy upon the death of a valuable official member of the Lauderdale Charge was adopted by the Fourth Quarterly Conference:

Whereas, The messenger of death has invaded our church fold and called to his reward our friend and brother, SAMUEL K. GULLY, who was a member of this Quarterly Conference; therefore be it resolved by the Fourth Quarterly Conference now in session at Lauderdale,

First—That in the death of Brother Gully our church at Lauderdale and the entire pastoral charge sustains the loss of a true, good man, the official board a wise counselor, a most faithful and efficient steward, and the country a noble citizen.

Second—As a church we bow in submission to this dispensation of Divine Providence, and shall ever cherish his friendship in our memories, while we feel keenly his departure from us.

Third—We desire, as the official body to which our beloved brother belonged, to express our sorrow and sympathy for the bereaved wife and child and other relatives, praying God's comforting and sustaining grace upon them.

Fourth—That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the journal of this Quarterly Conference, a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication, and a copy sent to the wife of our departed brother.

Signed in behalf of the Quarterly Conference by F. S. Ormond, Preacher in Charge; T. H. Naylor, Steward from Lauderdale Church; W. S. Pigford, Steward from Lockhart Church; M. G. Ellis, Steward from Bethel Church; J. G. Bishop, Steward from Marion Church.

Lauderdale, Miss., Nov. 10, 1909.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

The Sunday School of the M. E. Church, South, Byhalia, Miss., adopted the following memorial on the death of Harvey Fitts, which occurred Oct. 13, 1909:

HARVEY, son of W. D. and Gussie May Fitts, age 7 years, was a very bright, promising child.

God in wisdom has been pleased to transplant from this earthly flower garden of youth, the little plant that was budding into beauty and loveliness, to his celestial garden of beauty and happiness that it may bloom and shed forth its aroma beyond the skies and thereby make heaven richer with the sweet, pure, little soul of Harvey Fitts whose bright, young life endeared him so much to all who knew him. And while his going away has caused great sorrow and mourning in the hearts of his loved ones, and while our hearts are sad; yet, Be it resolved:

First—That we bow in humble submission to the will of God who doeth all things well.

Second—That while our Sunday School loses one of its brightest and sweetest members, we know that his pure, young soul has received welcome sweet from the Christ who said "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Third—That we tender to his loving, sorrowing, heart-broken parents and family our deepest expressions of love and sympathy, and through the gloom of sorrow's night which has come to them, we trust that by aid of the Divine Spirit they can look forward to the heavenly mansion where there will be a sweet re-union of souls.

Fourth—That these resolutions be spread upon our Sunday School Minutes, also published in our paper, the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and a copy sent the grief-stricken loved ones.

FROM CHOCTAW MISSION BY A CHOCTAW.

The following letter was written to the presiding elder, Rev. T. J. O'Neil, who requests its publication in the Advocate:

Rev. T. J. O'Neil, P. E.: I will write a few lines in regard to the Choctaw Mission. We had the best time this year that we've ever had in a long time. I wish to say this much that you might know all things are well with us. The Choctaws after so long a time have found out that Brother S. J. Tubby, is their best friend; now they say, "he is the Indians' best helper." I have said it for sometime He was the first and he is last. I beleve we, as a church ought to do more for Tubby than we ever have done. He needs more. He ought to have, more we are poor Choctaws. But we willing to pay $35 on the charge, and let him go, and do the work he never has had a chance since the mission has been known. We all see the mistake. If you will help him little more we are going to do more than we've ever done before. He is coming to the center of the work, where he won't have so much riding to do, and do more good. He has a fine school at Philips Chapel, and goes Saturdays and Sundays to preach. The work is spreading all over this country. I hope you all will pray for me. I am helping my preacher all I can. Good-bye, Brother Neil.

SIM J. TUBBY.

FROM OLIVE BRANCH, MISS.

Dear Doctor: Just a few words from Olive Branch. My fourth Quarterly Conference was held some days since. We reported everything "in full," with preacher's salary overpaid. Had a fine day. My Epworth Leagues are still on a "boom." It would do your heart good to see the young people so actively at work for God. I am proud of my Leagues, the "Banner Leagues" of our Conference. Have a fine people. My Sunday Schools are doing very fine work. Large crowds greet us at our regular services. It has been a great year at Olive Branch Circuit. Have had some seventy-five conversions, and fifty accessions this year. Organized two Sunday Schools, and one "Banner Epworth League." Repaired and painted one church. Everything reported "in full" at fourth Quarterly Meeting. We are ready for Conference at Okolona, Dec. 1st.

God has been with us.

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property-holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property holders' line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically no outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co., for a detailed explanation.

LESSON FOR DEC. 5, 1909.

PAUL ON THE GRACE OF GIVING.

II Cor. viii, 1-15.

Golden Text: "Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive."—Acts xx, 35.

We are now nearing the close of the year's lessons, and also near the close of the Church's Conference year; it is a time of retrospection, and a time of summing up of the past year's duties, to determine whether our task has been fulfilled, or whether we have been neglectful of responsibility. Not by any means is the question of financial obligation a matter of little consideration. There has never been a limit put upon Christian giving, not even the tithes of Abraham, for Zacchaeus, the Chief Publican, gave half of all his goods to the poor. There is a grace of giving: not that any blessing can be bought, but that as we are the children of God, saved by his grace, our liberality comes from a spring of gratitude that began to flow when God touched our heart. There is a giving without grace: it is the giving that is prompted by other matters than love, gratitude or compassion. It is those who give from the right motive that are more blessed than those who receive. Paul did not make it known to the Corinthians that the liberality of the Macedonians was their own act, and by that act they merited the grace of God that was bestowed upon them: he did show them that their great poverty and trials and affliction, was the way in which God worked out their liberality: thus, in receiving this grace at first, they were fit instruments by which God bestowed his grace upon others.

The Corinthian Church was inclined to be more materialistic than spiritual, from the effect of environment, for, as we have learned, Corinth was a great trade center at that time, and its people were more or less affected by rules of compensation than by the deeper things that Paul refers to in an endeavor to incite the proper motive for liberality.

The poor people, the common people that heard Jesus gladly, are the most acceptable givers. The Lord taught this when he called attention to the one that had cast "all her living" into the treasury. It was not desired to create emulation between the church of Macedonia and that of Corinth; such means used to increase a contribution often becomes unwise. It was desired to show the Corinthians, and all other churches, how riches of liberality can proceed from trials, afflictions and even from deep poverty.

The Macedonians had first given themselves to God, and then earnestly sought a part of the grace of ministering to others: they wanted to be in the fellowship resulting from such work of love. Titus had been to Corinth, not only as a messenger bearing Paul's letter, but as a visiting minister on a special mission, one that had two objects to be effected. The poor Jews in and around Jerusalem were in actual want, and if their necessities could be relieved by the Gentile converts, Paul hoped thus to reconcile the two separate factions of the church—a blessing would thus be given the givers and also the receivers. The Corinthians already abounded in many gifts: they had faith and utterance and knowledge in earnest zeal, and in love: then why should they not also possess the grace of giving?

Paul was giving no command: we are never commanded to give: the amount thus procured would not be a gift. God never commands his children to give: but, through his Word, he teaches the blessing that follows the giving by a willing mind.

We have the great example of our Lord Jesus Christ, who, though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that we, by his poverty, might be made rich. No such condescension is known among men. He left his throne in heaven to come to earth, where he had no place to lay his head. All the angels of God worshiped him, yet he took upon himself the form of a servant. None ever appealed to him and went away empty-handed. Now, then: we can fulfill our purposes (or promises) by our deeds. The acceptability of the gift is not determined by the amount, but by the ability and the willingness of the giver. No gift is solicited, when the recipient is relieved, at the distress of the giver: some must not be eased and others burdened. Equality must abound in that the abundance of some supply the want in others. Christian liberality consists in the bestowal of that which is considered of value.

Paul worked with his own hands that he might not be burdensome to others, and also that he might have to give him that needeth. Earnings represent expended energy, and when we part with the money earned, then we have an interest in the object for which money is expended. This interest is the gateway of the grace of giving, and when we enter thereby we are partakers of fellowship with those who have likewise received the grace of liberality. So, then, when the Church calls for aid in her several departments, let us consider our response a privilege. God accepts a willing mind according to that which a man hath, and he will supply a seeming lack, just as he kept the meal barrel and the cruse of oil from failing by the faith and prayer of Elijah. God has never allowed any of us to want, even when we have only half-done our duty: what, then, will he do for us if we "bring all the tithes into the storehouse?" He tells us what he will do: that he will open the windows of heaven and pour us out such a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it.

If the well-to-do Christian withholds where there is urgent need, he will find, at the final "trial balance" that he has "nothing over:" and if the poor brother shares even his penury, there will be to him "no lack."

This is the lesson that comes to us from the wilderness between Elim and Sinai; where God rained the manna from heaven alike upon all: this same grace of giving is for every one, from him who was the Living Bread, and it was from him that we learn "that it is more blessed to give than to receive."

UGANDA THE MISSIONARY MARVEL.

In his recent book, "My African Journey," Winston Churchill says that Uganda is the only country he has ever visited in which every person of suitable age goes to church every Sunday. He estimates the native Christians at 100,000, while Bishop Tucker gives 62,867 as the number of church-members, and 52,471 as the average attendance. The churches have sittings for upward of 125,000. The native teachers and evangelists number nearly 3,000. Mr. Churchill affirms that in all his travels in Africa he never saw better order or happier homes than in this portion of the Dark Continent, where only a few years ago missionaries were brutally slaughtered by the natives.—Ex.

HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

According to established custom, the Mississippi Methodist Historical Society will hold its regular Annual Session at Brookhaven, Miss., on Tuesday evening, Dec. 7, 1909. The subject to be discussed will be "Rise, Growth and Benefits of the Camp-meeting."

T. B. HOLLOMAN,
Vice President for Miss. Conf.

RAILROAD RATES.

To the Delegates and Visitors to the Mississippi Annual Conference:

The Southeastern Passenger Association has granted the usual reduced rate to Brookhaven and return on the following conditions:

Pay full fare going. On purchase of ticket, request a "certificate receipt" from the agent. If more than one ticket is purchased, at every junction point secure a "certificate receipt." These "certificate receipts" must be presented to the undersigned, or to the assistant railroad secretary, during the Conference session, to be properly stamped and signed. These "certificate receipts" are then to be presented to the local agent, who will sell return tickets for one-third the fare originally paid, plus 25 cents. No reduction of fare is made unless these "certificate receipts" are purchased.

No certificate receipt issued with children's half-fare ticket, mileage, clergy, or any other form of transportation at less than the regular first-class fare, will be honored for reduced fare returning. No certificate of less than 75 cents will be honored for reduced fare returning.

When the usual announcements are made daily just before adjournment for dinner, the time and place will be announced where the railroad secretary will sign these certificate receipts. Parties holding them will please present them at that time, and not expect them to be signed during the session of the Conference or on the street.

This information, it is hoped, will prevent some of the misunderstandings heretofore.

C. F. EMERY,
Railroad Secretary.

NOTICE.

The class of the third year, Mississippi Conference, will meet in the Methodist Church, Brookhaven, Miss., Tuesday, Dec. 7, at 2 o'clock p. m.

The chairman will give a lecture on Bible Study in the afternoon at some convenient hour. All undergraduates are invited to attend, and others welcome.

S. J. DAVIES.

NOTICE.

Those members of the class of the fourth year in the Louisiana Conference who desire to be examined are requested to meet the examination committee on Tuesday, Dec. 7, 9:30 a. m., at the First Methodist Church in Alexandria.

The entire class, including those who have taken the Correspondence Course, and those who have not prepared for examination, are requested to meet the committee at 3 p. m., in the same place.

R. H. WYNN,
Chairman.

NOTICE.

The Southwestern, and the Southeastern Passenger Associations have each made a reduced rate of one and a third fare on the certificate plan. We are trying to get a straight rate without the trouble of certificates, hut have not succeeded yet. In case we don't, let everybody get a certificate when you come, so we will he sure to have the required number.

The hotels and boarding houses have made special rates for the occasion as follows:

Hotel Bentley, European plan. Rooms from one dollar up. When occupied by two persons, 75 cents per day up. I will be glad to make arrangements in advance for any who may wish me to do so, but would prefer that you write to the hotels direct. It is not really necessary to write in advance.

Rapides Hotel, American plan. Special price of two dollars a day. Boarding houses can accommodate a limited number at one dollar a day.

Of course, we will entertain all preachers and lay delegates. I do not know how many preacher's wives we can entertain. About thirty have said they want to come. I wish I could throw open Alexandria's doors to all. I fear that the best I can do will be to get them special rates at the hotels and boarding houses. Write me about it if she wants to come. Certainly they are as much entitled to the pleasure of the trip as anybody.

I would like to know who are coming up for admission on trial and others whose names are not in the last copy of the Minutes. I would also like to know of any whose names are there who will not come. Before the delegates and preachers leave home I want to mail them a card telling them where to go direct from the train.

Urge your lay memhers to come as visitors. Bishop Candler is to open each session with a short address and there are many other features that will he interesting to all Methodists. I will appreciate an announcement from your pulpit of the rates, etc., given above.

H. R. SINGLETON.

NOTICE, LOUISIANA PREACHERS.

I have just received a communication from Mr. W. C. Everette, of the Dallas Publishing House, that he will have on hand on Monday and Tuesday before the Conference session convenes on Wednesday, an ample supply of report blanks. It is expected that each preacher will have his report on file by the close of the first session of the Conference on Wednesday. It will be of great help to the Statistical Secretaries if these reports can be filed on Tuesday hefore the Conference begins.

I call special attention to the small amount assessed to each charge for Minutes. We trust that the full amount of the assessment will be raised. We were forced last year to send the Minutes collect because we did not have the funds to prepay the charges. We will dislike to repeat this another year. The amount is small, and all can get it.

A REAL MARVEL AMONG MISSIONS.

The wonderful progress of Christianity in Korea is one of the most remarkable events in the modern mission field. Actual mission work only began there about twenty-five years ago; but it is noteworthy that it was preceded by the advent into the country of the New Testament, translated into Korean by Missionary Ross, of Mukden. When the missionaries arrived they found, with astonishment, small circles of Koreans who had begun to believe, and were waiting for further instruction. The Korean Christians have three characteristic traits: they are earnest Bihle readers, earnest in prayer, and earnest in mission work. It may almost be said that every Korean Christian seems to be born a missionary or an evangelist. Four hundred and fifty Christians met lately in Seoul to take counsel how they could hest spread the glad tidings among their countrymen. They had already given all the money they could: they decided, therefore, to give their time and strength as a voluntary offering to the Lord's work; each one promised a certain numher of days, so that before the close of the meeting two years of work were provided for. Other voluntary workers joined them, and the result was that after some months of service 2,000 souls were led to faith in Christ.—Missionary Review of the World.

FROM LAUDERDALE, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: As I have not reported anything from this charge during the year, I will send you a few items which may be of interest to some.

The work of the church on the Lauderdale charge is moving along fairly well in some respects, but not as encouragingly as it might do in a general way. The four Quarterly Conferences for this year have all been held and are a part of the history of the church in these parts.

The church is closing its third year under the present pastorate, and we believe is now in better condition to do more effectual work in the future than it has been for some time.

During the three years the most immediate results have been along material lines in the way of improving church property. One church building has been completely overhauled and remodeled so that it is practically a new church and one of the neatest country churches in this section of our Conference. The church at Lauderdale has been recovered this year, and plans are on foot for some work on the interior to be done next year. Considerable improvement has also been put npon the parsonage, and we have succeeded in increasing our insurance protection npon church property.

Our church has lost a number of good members during our three years at Lauderdale by removal to other charges, and several by death.

There will be some deficit in finances, due to several things, some of which are unavoidable, but most of them could have been avoided.

Several young persons have united with the church during the present year. Our protracted meetings this year were some better than the two preceding years. Two of our meetings were condncted by the pastor. In the other two the pastor had the assistance of Dr. James M. Weems, of Shubuta, and Rev. W. H. Lewis, our faithful and appreciated presiding elder. Both of these brethren rendered us faithful work and the fruits will continue to be seen in the future.

Our presiding elder has given general satisfaction during the year, and we confidently expect his return for another year and hope that he will be.

with LOCAL APPLICATIONS, as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials free.

FROM HAYNESVILLE, LA.

Dear Brother Boswell: I am now abont to close my first year's work in the ministry. I will write a short acount of it to the Advocate.

I am junior pastor on the Haynesville Charge, under Rev. W. T. Woodward, pastor, my work being missionary.

I have six appointments, viz.: Dykesville, Relief, Shongaloo, Millerton, Woodward's Chapel (newly built church in Ware settlement) and Mineral Springs. Only two of these being organized churches, viz.: Dykesville and Woodward's Chapel.

We held meetings at three of these points; the pastor helping, resulting in almost a hnndred conversions, twenty-four additions to our church and a revival of the churches. Owing to the lack of time, we did not get to hold meetings at every point. The success of the meetings was due to the wonderful power of God and the consecrated effort of a man of God.

Just here I wish to express my appreciation of the pastor. During all my relationship to him he has proved himself a consecrated, broad-minded, manly man. Brimful of energy and letting it out in the most practical ways. Some of the fruits of which being a splendid new church at one point on my work and plans on foot for another, if Conference sends him back. Our association has been one of pleasantness and harmony. Results show that he has done more for the cause here than any other one man.

The outlook for this new work is encouraging. Three of these places in the near future, with the gospel administered, will prove strong churches, and a fourth can easily be established in a territory not yet occupied, and near enough to be easily filled by the same pastor of the three, making four appointments that will support a pastor. Respectfully,

JAS. M. S. CARPENTER.

A WORD FROM ENGLAND.

The following is part of a letter written from Doncaster, England, under date of Nov. 8, 1909, by Mrs. F. L. Faulk, a daughter of the late Dr. Reynolds S. Trippett:

"Dear Dr. Sawyer: I have been intending writing you for the last few weeks, but have not been very well. You will be sorry to hear that since I wrote you last, my dear Sister Sallie has also passed peacefully away, after an illness of four months. She never went out after the death of my dear father. She had been suffering from a nervous complaint for several years and his death caused such a shock to her system, that she entirely collapsed and seemed to gradually fade away. It has been a great grief and trial to me. I felt I could not write you at the time, but longed very much for you to know. Her end was peaceful and she knew us all and seemed fully resigned. I have decided to remain in England for the winter, later than that I have not formed any plans. My thoughts are often with you all and I would have very much liked to attend the Louisiana Conference, but am not able to do so. I have suffered a great deal with my heart, and have to lead a very quiet life. I can only pray for you all and beg you to also remember me in your prayers. Will you please give my kind love to your wife and all my old friends and thank the brethren of the Conference for all their kindnesses to my late father? Hoping you will all have a very pleasant session, and with very kind regards, believe me,

Yours very sincerely,

F. L. FAULK."

Dr. J. W. Blosser, whose likeness appears above, is well-known throughout the country because of his remarkable success in the treatment of catarrh, deafness, bronchitis and asthma.

He has discovered a method of treating these diseases which is different from all others, both in method and effect. It is not a spray or atomizer, douche, salve, cream nor inhaler. It "opens up" and cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs, then stops the nasal discharge and spitting, and permanently heals the diseased membranes.

Any sufferer may have a demonstration of what this remedy will do by sending name and address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., who will send a five days' treatment and an illustrated booklet, absolutely free. Those who have availed themselves of this free offer have been surprised at the pleasing and wonderful effect of the remedy. The full treatment is not expensive.

WISHED FOR DEATH.

Terrible thing to be so sick, that death would come as a welcome relief from suffering!

How much, then, must one be thankful for a medicine that relieves such misery and brings one into a less desperate state of mind.

Cardui, Woman's Relief, has done this for many women, and may be expected to do so for many more.

Thousands of ladies have written to tell about their suffering, and how it was relieved by the use of Cardui.

Among this long list of letters written, stands forth Mattie Camphell, of Ratcliff, Texas, who says: "Two years ago my health was bad. I suffered untold misery. I ached all over. Life was a burden to me. At times I wished for death, to end my suffering.

"At last, I decided to try Cardui. I took one bottle and it helped me. I took 12 bottles more and now I can say that Cardui has stopped my suffering and made life worth living.

"I would not be placed back where I was—not for this whole world rolled at my feet."

Try Cardui. It contains not one grain of dangerous mineral ingredients, but is purely vegetable, and a safe, reliable remedy for young and old. Sold everywhere.

ABSTINENCE AND STRENGTH.

Dan. i:8-16; I Cor. ix:25-27.

(Temperance Sunday.)

1. It is very hard for young men and women not to drift with the tide of worldliness that abounds in society. On every side there is a tendency to do as the rest of the world is doing. How strong then must have been the pressure on the young men, selected from among the Hebrew captives, to do as others were doing. They had been placed in positions of honor and power. There apparently lay before them lives of usefulness if they would only conform to the ways of the world in which they were placed. Yet, with tact and judgment they protest against breaking the Jewish law. They seem to have even exceeded the requirements of that law in the standards which they set for themselves.

2. The result of their abtemious lives, was shown both in their physical health and in their scholarship. The lesson of their lives has slowly been learned by men, and to-day the athlete goes into careful training, and men who seek to make the most of their bodies or their brains, study the physical conditions that lead to success. In all our schools we teach the evil effects of liquors, and of glutinous living. Whether from one cause or another, the average life of men is lengthening in all Christian countries.

3. The motives that lead to a temperate life, should appeal more forcibly to the Christian than any other. If the athlete goes into training and keeps training his body under in seeking an earthly crown, how much more should we who seek a heavenly crown. It is not enough that you do well, you should do your best. You have not attained to your best, until by temperate life, you have placed your body where it is fitted for the best service. This body is to be a temple of the Holy Ghost, and we should care for the tenement in which we dwell, in such manner as to honor our heavenly guest. If the Master sends us forth in his service, we cannot do the things for him which we should, unless we have taken proper care of the body which must run his errands. To that one who conserves both the physical and spiritual forces, the running shall not be in vain; but sometime he shall look into the smiling face of his Lord, and hear the plaudit of his Master, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

CHARLES FORSTER SMITH'S REMINISCENCES AND SKETCHES.

The most notable book brought out by our Publishing House in a long time is "Reminiscences and Sketches" by Prof. Charles Forster Smith. The reminiscences are personal and intimate recollections of great characters with whom Prof. Smith was associated in his own useful life. The sketches are delightful etchings of men and scenes. Only once or twice does the writer go outside his own wide field of personal observation.

The initial paper is a reminiscence of Landon C. Garland, the first chancellor of Vanderbilt University. Perhaps, as he himself, on the pages of the paper, fears, the author idealizes Chancellor Garland. Chancellor Garland was one of those men, of whom Washington and Bishop Galloway were types—men who, excelled in almost anything by some, yet in everything excelled all. It is hard to sketch such a character, but Prof. Smith has succeeded in the case of Chancellor Garland, and of Washington as well, in presenting a living portrait.

Readers of this Advocate will be interested in the strong but all too brief portrait of Bishop McTyeire. Holland McTyeire and Jno. C. Keener had a large share in planting Methodism in New Orleans. The Conference that elected Dr. McTyeire Bishop, met in New Orleans in 1866. This was the radical General Conference of the times. It removed the ancient penalties from non-attendance on class meetings. It abolished the six month's probation. The time-limit it changed from two to four years, and came near abolishing it altogether. It originated District Conferences, and four years later they had come into use throughout the Church. It introduced lay-representation. It set off the Colored M. E. Church. It removed clerical trials from the open Conference to a special committee.

Holland N. McTyeire stands forth on Prof. Smith's strong page in all his rugged strength and gracious gentleness.

The strongest sketch in the book is "The South's Ideal Hero," who is of course, none other than Robert Edward Lee. That one article is worth the reading of the whole book and more than justifies its publication.

Quite an interesting sketch is "The Pastor For Me." A symposium, with this subject made up of contributions from our leading men in various walks of life, would be of great interest to pastors, and, to a degree, helpful, if they did not take it all too seriously. For it is not always the pastor one wants who is the pastor one needs.

The book contains nearly five hundred pages, and the composition and printing are very creditable. It is a book every one ought to read. It is a book which, once begun, any one will want to read.

WALTER G. HARBIN.

HOW TO CURE SORES, BOILS, ETC.

Every parent who reads this paper has frequently felt the need of a reliable home remedy for old sores, boils, chronic ulcers, bone felons, carbuncles, severe burns, poison oak, cuts, bruises and the many forms of inflammation which are so common in children and older people alike, also in the domestic animals. Such a remedy ought to be kept on the medicine shelf of every home, ready for use at any time. For more than half a century "Gray's Ointment" has filled the need in thousands of homes in America and in many foreign countries. It is without doubt the most perfect prescription ever written by any physician. You can get a 25c. box at your druggist's. If you have never used Gray's Ointment send for a trial box which we will gladly send free, postpaid. Address Dr. W. F. Gray & Co., 809 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

Dr. Chas. R. Phelps, of Roberts, Mass., writes: "Gray's Ointment is my main dependence in cases of carbuncles and unhealthy granulations, ulcers and blood poisoning."

MISSISSIPPI TRAINING SCHOOL, MONTROSE, MISS.

It was my happy privilege to mingle with this school and people at Montrose in a nine-day's meeting. I was delighted with President Betts, the faculty and students. It is a fine school, and doing a grand work for God and the Church. There are several promising young preachers in training under Dr. Betts for the itinerant work. We ought to stand by this needed school.

THE METHODIST TRAINING SCHOOL.

By Rev. A. M. Trawick, Jr.

To begin the work of the fourth session of this institution for Christian workers there is a faculty of nine teachers and instructors, two of whom were added to the teaching force during the summer vacation. This gives the Training School an adequate corps of instructors so that better and more thorough work may be done in all departments this year than during any previous year of the school's history.

It is the purpose of the school to furnish adequate training in every subject necessary to best preparation for active life but not to offer anything as a mere accomplishment. More and more is it becoming possible every year for our teachers to specialize in their appointed fields and to develop their full strength in what they teach.

We have a student-body this year of which we may justly be proud. We shall have a graduating class of fourteen or more most excellent young women and two or three men, all of whom have had the equivalent of a high school graduation, and some of them additional training for two or three years in college.

The junior class numbers about thirty, and these with some ten or twelve special students have among them most excellent spirits to be trained for service and leadership. It is a joy to help such devoted young lives in their work of preparing for the best life in the church.

A few others are expected to enter in the course of a week or two, so that our enrollment will be about sixty pupils for the first term, which is the limit of our facilities for board and room until some improvements are made.

The government of the students is altogether in their own hands, and is in all particulars the application of the Honor System to their moral and social life while in the Training School. The school has, of necessity, an ideal of work and character, but beyond holding out this ideal constantly in all the activities of the school, nothing is done to compel obedience to a set of rules or regulations. Laws for individual life and conduct emanate altogether from the students as a body, and it is gratifying to the last degree to observe how jealous the students are for their own reputation, and how true they are to the ideal of the Training School. The members of the faculty are in heartiest sympathy with this feature of student life, and they are ready to believe that this system of student governing will yield better results in character and efficiency than any other method of supervision.

A further feature of student life is its spirit of mutual helpfulness and co-operation for the common good of all. We are far from teaching or practicing any form of communism, or erecting in the school any artificial standard of social conduct. But as a Christian family we seek to make our daily life minister to the comfort and pleasure of all who are associated with us. To do this, every student is responsible for some little task in keeping the building in the best order, and in preserving a homelike atmosphere in the entire institution. The young ladies and gentlemen enter very heartily into this assignment of duty, and the result is not only to settle the vexing problems of many servants about the building, but also to preserve a genuine spirit of sympathy and assistance like that which exists in large homes.

A character of our school life which distinguishes it from most others is the social half-hour just after supper every evening. This is a time to forget lessons and tasks and personal complaints—it is a season of fun and enjoyment for a few minutes and is maintained throughout the year as a purely voluntary expression of student life. At the opening of the session it is peculiarly fitting to speak of this feature, in as much as by it many students avoid homesickness and a spirit of loneliness. And, too, a good hearty laugh is no bad preparation for a few hours of hard study to follow, so from the early morning devotions we spend the day together praying, working, studying and in social fellowship, a group of fellow laborers in a common cause.

At the beginning of the year we are about ready to install a new laundry and heating plant, and we are proud to say our furnace will be provided with a smoke consumer, which, if successful, will be a needed object lesson to this smoke-laden city in order that we may, if possible, assist in making things what they ought to be.

The Training school is in the midst of a district where all kinds and conditions of humanity congregate. We have within our reach boarding houses, tenements, apartments, houses of known immorality, dwellers in attics, in basements and in back alleys—white people, black people, Jews, Syrians, Protestants, Catholics, people of no faith and of every faith, and with immorality, disease, vice infidelity combined with the utmost respectibility on every side. It is our modest ambition to do for this community what no church or institution is doing. The Catholic Cathedral is on one side, a colored church in the center, a poor little rescue mission further on, and the Training School Community Hall are the active religious forces in this population, estimated variously at six to ten thousand people. We desire to reach their souls, their minds and bodies and to that end we have a clinic with a trained nurse in attendance, a room for social entertainments and a hall for religious meetings.

In the center of the North Nashville Cotton Mill district we have, under our own control, a social settlement which is the center of all our religious activity in that part of the city. One of our deaconess graduates of last June is head resident at the settlement, and here are held the children's clubs, the children's story hour, and their cooking classes, and here, also, are conducted the weekly club meetings for girls, for boys and for the mothers.

The clubs are under the leadership of our students and they are required also to do a certain amount of friendly visiting in the neighborhood adjacent to the settlement. This kind of work is exceedingly attractive and profitable to the students, and we believe also to the people among whom they labor. Certain it is that we give no better preparation to Christian workers than this actual, living contact with souls.

The Training School is the creature of prayer and consecration, its one motive is love to God and humanity, its one aim is to catch the vision of need and of service, and its one desire is to be faithful to its generation upon the earth.

HERNANDO, MISS.

We have just closed our last meeting this year. After a week's meeting in the beautiful new church at Horn Lake, we received into the church sixteen members. This makes thirty-four additions to that church this year. We began a year ago with only five members and an old dilapidated church building. This burned down in the spring, without a dollar of insurance. The new church cost, complete, painted inside and out, nicely carpeted, $1,100.

We have had sixty-two additions on the entire charge, and expect to report everything paid in full at Conference. W. D. WENDEL, Pastor

MOSS POINT, MISS.

We have just closed a meeting at this place, in which we were assisted by Rev. C. N. Guice. The results of the meeting can scarcely be stated. It was a time of refreshing from the presence of God to many of our people. I do not know the number converted. Forty-four applied for membership in our church. Some of these are children of tender years, who will be kept on probation for a while for further instruction and training. We will probably receive into full fellowship as many as twenty-five or thirty before Conference. I cannot give the exact number until I have had a personal interview with each applicant. As my time is out here, the names of those not received will be left for my successor to take care of, and to receive at his discretion. During the meeting quite a number of family altars were pledged. The ladies of my church were greatly revived; not so many of the brethren, though quite a number of them also were blessed. The greatest work was done among the children and young people of the church and Sunday school.

Brother Guice needs no words of commendation from me, but I am glad to say that we were more than pleased with his work. He won the hearts of my people, and impressed them with his deep consecration, his fine singing, his splendid preaching, and his freedom from eccentricities. There are no objections to his methods. He is manly, dignified, and tender. He preaches the truth with plainness, directness and force. He has a great future before him, if he continues studious, humble and faithful. The prayers of our people follow him wherever he may go. W. B. LEWIS

INDIA TO BE REDEEMED BY INDIANS.

A hundred years ago Carey uttered these words, whose significance has not yet been fully grasped by the missionary enterprise of to-day:

"I conceive that the work of duly preparing as large a body as possible of Christian pastors and itinerants is of immense importance. English missionaries will never be able to instruct the whole of India. The pecuniary resources and the number of missionaries required for the Christian instruction of Hindustan can never be supplied from England, and India will never be turned from the grossness of her idolatry to serve the true and living God unless the grace of God rest abundantly on converted natives and qualify them for mission work, and unless by the instrumentality of those who care for India they be sent forth to the field. In my judgment, it is on native evangelists that the weight of the great work must ultimately rest."—Missionary Review of the World.

We believe that by every surge and swell of life, social, political, industrial, God's purpose moves to fulfillment, and that by every swinging cycle of evolution or revolution mankind makes progress onward and upward forever.—Charles W. Casson.

For a long time city engineers and authorities have been looking for lasting paving material. New Orleans found it about fifty years ago—round, smooth boulders, averaging in size almost half as high as a man's head. Where they came from we do not know—but they were evidently put in shape by the action of swift-flowing water, or ground into shape by glaciers. They lasted—are still used on some streets, and are as good to-day as ever, but they are death to teams and wagons. A French engineer has at last hit upon a plan whereby the desired pavement may be secured. The Chicago Journal says: "It consists of the iron shavings from lathes and similar machines, which are mixed with cement, making a combination which is almost indestructible. In making paving-blocks according to this process a mould is filled with these iron shavings and the interstices filled with cement grout, sufficiently fluid to penetrate the entire mass. The blocks thus formed are said to possess great strength and resistance to abrasion and also (what seems less credible) elasticity under blows or jarring. Tests made of such blocks are said to have shown a resistance to compression of about 150,000 pounds a square inch and at a tensile strength four times that of neat cement." The material is doubtless as good as it is represented, but the "iron shavings" are not to be found in sufficient quantity to supply the need of the many cities which are demanding the best pavements.

The world now has wireless telegraphs, wireless telephones, wireless electric lights, balloons that can be directed through the air like ships on the water, and flying machines. But the list of wonderful things is not complete. We read of steam cars running on a "single rail." The inventor claims that he has demonstrated its practicability. The first thought in connection with such cars is that they would naturally fall to one side through the force of gravity. But the force of gravity is overcome by the force of huge gyroscopes, or "spinning tops," such as children use as toys. Everybody knows how these tops, in spinning, keep an upright position. To the single-rail car is applied the gyroscopic principle. The inventor first applied the principle to ships, which worked so perfectly that he concluded it would likewise work on cars, and began to experiment. "He first made a small car, seventeen feet long. This car ran on a single wire stretched in the air, holding its balance more perfectly than any tight-rope dancer; for even when the wire was gently swung the car held its upright position, carrying the inventor's daughter across the span." Encouraged by his success, the inventor sought assistance through which he "was able to build a full-size railway car, fifty feet long, ten feet high, and ten feet wide, weighing twenty-two tons. In this car are two steel tops, made in the shape of a horizontal wheel on an upright shaft. Each of these tops, or gyroscopes, weighs 1500 pounds, and they revolve 3,000 times per minute. The car is propelled by a gasoline motor." This car was tried first on Nov. 10 on a track one-eighth of a circular mile long. Its action on a single rail was wonderful. It carried forty passengers, went backward and forward, and stopped, always holding itself perfectly erect, a strange thing, explained by the fact that the gyroscopes (or big tops) keep turning for two hours after the machinery stops. The passengers, in order to further test the car, all went to one side. But instead of tilting it with their weight the car was raised slightly on the side to which they went by the effort of the gyroscope to find equilibrium. The inventor, one Mr. Brennan, an Englishman, believes that his engine will run from 100 to 150 miles an hour, that there will be a large reduction in railway expense, and a complete revolution in construction.

Two or three weeks since we called attention to the heartless conduct of two automobile drivers who failed to stop and look after a man whom they had run over with their heavy machines. We thought then that the climax of criminal heartlessness had been reached. But not so, the climax was reached in New York on the night of Nov. 23, when a man driving a sixty-horse power touring car struck a young woman. Finding that "the body clogged the wheels, he stopped, jolted the machine free, and then made off at high speed," utterly regardless of the fact that he had destroyed a human life. It does look as if any man, with human instincts, even though he saw the gallows staring him in the face, would have stopped to relieve a dying woman. But not this inhuman wretch. In view of this awful tragedy the Police Commissioner has "called a mass meeting to urge Legislative action." The Commissioner in speaking of the matter said: "Any engineer who runs a harmless donkey engine in this city gets his license from the police department. If an accident occurs and he is responsible, his license is revoked. Why, even with the asphalt rollers—the law requires that a man go ahead of one of them and wave a danger signal; but sixty-horse power automobiles run wild through the streets and what can we do? Arrest them. Bah, bah. We arrest a chauffeur and he is fined $10, which he pays and goes out and does it all over again." Nothing short of life imprisonment will stop these heartless criminals doing their evil work.

At a late election in the town of Plainville, Neb., on the liquor question, the prohibition ticket won. Forthwith the whisky element began, in their practical way, to answer the prohibitionists. They attempted to burn the town. "Incendiaries scattered kerosene over a number of buildings, cut the firebell cord, and set fire to the saturated buildings. Fire was discovered in the Methodist Church. A few minutes later flames broke out in the parsonage, and then in the other residences of prohibition leaders. Within the hour forty different fires were started." Such is the saloon argument against prohibition. But it avails nothing. The saloons are going; and drinking men on all sides are losing. Not only the Church and good society are against the evil, but business itself, which the saloon men arrogantly claim is dependent on the trade, is going against it. The United States Commissioner of Labor recently addressed a note of inquiry to 7000 business firms asking their attitude toward the drink question. He received 5308 replies. "Every one acknowledged that the drink question was taken into consideration in the choice and treatment of men." As thoroughly saturated with liquor as is Chicago, and as firmly as the people at large uphold the traffic, a policeman who enters a saloon while on duty does so at his risk. It means discharge. It means the same thing to a man in the employ of any big respectable firm. Many railroad corporations will not employ any man who does not sign the pledge, or act as if he had. This is one of the strong aspects of the temperance question to-day. "The business man has become a temperance evangelist." Business is helping to seal the doom of the legalized liquor traffic.

Writing of the wealth of the Great West, the St. Louis Republic says: "There is yet much more of truth than of pleasantry in the remark by Senator Aldrich at Omaha to the effect that the West has become the capitalistic section of the country, and that before long Eastern farmers who want to borrow money to put crops on their farms will have to come West to get it. * * * The productiveness of Western and Southwestern lands has not its equal in the world, and this productiveness is being converted into wealth at a rate which is one of the surprises of the first decade of the Twentieth Century. It is not only putting money, bank stock, county bonds and other securities into the coffers of farmers and land owners, but it has already become the foundation of many flourishing industries that can be conducted nowhere so cheaply as in proximity to productive farms. Cheap food, abundant coal and better climate make odds in favor of Western manufacturing against which the East cannot hold its own in the more important industries. The extraordinary gains in manufactures shown by the Census for St. Louis and other Western cities and towns during the first half of the decade indicate plainly enough the direction in which the industrial revolution is moving. Verily the West is the seat of the country's real wealth, as it is of political power. The significant fact is that the West is beginning to assert itself economically and politically in ways which make a profound impression upon the country." When the great Panama Canal is completed, about which time there will be deep water transportation from Chicago to the Gulf, the Southwest will share in the great prosperity of the country and New Orleans will be the [illegible].

Two or three weeks since, Mr. Bryan, the leader of the Democratic Party and three times its candidate for the presidency, came out unequivocally against whisky. He came dangerously near to committing himself to prohibition—so near, indeed, that some understood him as favoring that policy with reference to the liquor traffic. And a few party leaders have inferred that it is Mr. Bryan's purpose to make prohibition a "party question" in the next national campaign. Considerable fear is manifest in certain quarters lest Mr. Bryan shall undertake to write prohibition into the national platform. And protests against such a step are not wanting. The idea seems to be that Mr. Bryan desires to run for the presidency again on the prohibition issue. A Southern Congressman says: "He is a very noble man, but as a statesman he has not made good. Surely three chances ought to be enough. That part of the American people known as the Democratic Party will not, in my opinion, let him dictate any such paramount issue for it as prohibition. Local option in the several States is all right and is in line with Democratic principles, but to let Bryan make a national issue of it would be equivalent to the party's going into a receivership with him as the receiver, with no responsibility to court or public." Our own impression is that politicians everywhere are discovering that the prohibition issue is becoming "paramount." They can but know that a question which agitates communities, and counties and whole States, is bound sooner or later to agitate the nation as a whole. The difference between Mr. Bryan and some other leaders is in the fact that what he sees he frankly acknowledges, and they do not. None of them undertake to tell us why prohibition is good for communities and counties and not good for States and the whole nation. They cannot do it.

"WHY DO THEY GO."

By Rev. Theo. Copeland, D.D.

A recent number of the Nashville Christian Advocate (Oct. 8th), contains an article under the above caption. In the course of his remarks the writer says, "Let us have honest, fearless discussion." One would naturally suppose that a person bent on doing things fearlessly, would not withhold his name, and hide under the euphonious epithet of "Layman." Dr. Geo. W. Young, the temperance orator of Kentucky, on reaching home from one of his extended tours, found his wife in great distress. During his absence she had received several anonymous letters, notifying her that if her husband persisted in his assaults upon the legalized liquor traffic, she might expect him soon to come home in a box. The Doctor allayed her fears by assuring her that no one except a coward would write an anonymous letter, and nobody but a simpleton would believe its contents.

Who is "Layman," the gentleman that has spread on the war paint, and "fearlessly" entered the arena to fight the unbearable abuses perpetrated by the high dignitaries of the Church? Did his courage fail as he surveyed the situation and saw what havoc is being wrought in Israel, so that while prudently concealing his identity, he cries out:

> "The time is out of joint: O cursed spite,
> That I was ever born to set it right?"

Is there "a widespread feeling of dissatisfaction existing in the minds of both the ministry and the laity of our Church concerning the matter of autocratic power exercised by our Bishops and our centralized form of Church government?" To this query there is only one answer, and that is a flat denial. Some isolated cases there may be; but that the feeling is "widespread". I do not believe. There has never been any organization, civil, social or religious which has worked entirely without friction, and received the approval of all men; and we may not reasonably expect such a thing this side the millennium. If a perfect system were projected along any line, imperfect men (of whom the world is full) would fail to appreciate and endorse it.

An appeal to history will convince any unprejudiced mind as to the excellence of our itinerant system with its Episcopal supervision. It is confessedly the best method that has ever been adopted, and other denominations recognize its peculiar merit.

But "why do they go?" Why are so many "potato slips" taken from the Methodist patch and transplanted to other soil? It might be well to pause long enough to note that considering the size of our "bed," we have not lost so many "slips" after all the fuss made about the matter. Very few ministers have left our fold after they became famous; and all who have gone might have been as eminently useful—perhaps not so famous—if they had remained. So far as my knowledge extends, not many of them departed because of the "autocratic power" exercised by our bishops.

Some ministers are allured by the prospect of larger stipends; they are enticed by the greed of gain; so that the larger the prospective salary, the more inviting and more promising the field of usefulness.

Other ministers hear the trumpet blast of Fame, "That last infirmity of noble minds," and the clarion call appeals to their noble souls and away they go.

Methodism set out in the beginning to evangelize the world, not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, but by preaching the gospel, in demonstration of the Spirit and of power. This preaching, after the model of apostolic times, is too tame, entirely, for some lofty souls, and they have sought other environments.

Others there are who can tolerate no credal restraint. They are broad and liberal to the last limit. "No pent-up Utica" of Methodist standards or shorter catechisms can contract their powers. Brilliant meteors of this class are constantly shooting off from their denominational orbits, most of whom are destined to sudden darkness, or innocuous desuetude. According to some scientists, the planets and satellites of the solar system belonged originally to the great body of the sun. By some process they were thrown off into space and are cooling with the lapse of time, while the king of day shines on with undiminished splendor. Methodism does not need men who are not in sympathy with her institutions, and there are plenty of patches around us whose owners would like to have the "slips."

I have mentioned the main reasons why men leave our church. If a disgruntled divine deserts our fold, he must have some excuse for his action. Is "the autocratic power of our bishops so dreaded that our ministers dare not raise an objection or propose a reform till they have escaped from their power by quitting the church?" Truly, brother, this is "a serious charge" and "a humiliating confession." But it is one thing to denounce men and measures under an assumed title; it is quite another thing to state the plain, unvarnished truth. As to our chief pastors, their record is before the world. Not one of them has ever dishonored his high calling. None of them have laid claims to papal infallibility. They are subject to like passions as other men and they doubtless realize this fact as keenly as do their critics. Some of them have achieved international distinction. They stand at the front of the stupendous movements which are being inaugurated to evangelize the whole world.

If we no longer seek their merits to disclose, let us at least not drag their frailties into public print till we are "honest and fearless" enough to let the world know who we are, inasmuch as the arraignment of the bishops by some individuals would not create widespread apprehension.

GENERAL ENDOWMENT FUND FOR SUPERANNUATES.

There is no doubt but that our General Conference did a wise thing in providing for a general endowment fund for superannuated preachers and orphans and widows. This ought to have been done fifty years ago. But there is one provision in the plan which I hope our next General Conference will change. This provision requires that our present superannuated preachers shall have only three-fourths of the interest on this fund and that one-fourth must be added to the main fund until five million is received. Some of the members claimed that this was carried. It may be business according to the world, but it is not justice according to the ethics of the New Testament. There is no reason why that one-fourth of this small sum should be denied the old preachers of this generation, who have cut their way through the cane brakes; swam the rivers and pressed their way into the far West; traveled large circuits on small salaries that it way be given to preachers of the next generation, who will serve a richer church on smaller charges and receive much larger salaries. This is a great injustice to those who have borne the burden and heat of the day, and will keep many from contributing to this fund who would otherwise do so. For their sympathies are with those who have had the hard work to do on the least pay. With this exception, I am for this fund with all my heart. But I am not in favor of raising it by an assessment. It is without a precedent, as far as I know, to raise endowment funds by assessments. They are made for present necessities. It was not the purpose of the Conference to raise this fund by making an assessment to come in competition with our pressing necessities. It was a wise provision to have a fund which would continue to grow by contributions from the wealthy and by wills and bequest without interfering in the least with our pressing necessities. I suppose that no one thought of assessing the present poor church to help take care of the preachers of the future richer church. There would be more reason for issuing bonds to run for forty years to help take care of the old preachers who have had the harder work to do on the smaller salaries.

Of course, I would not favor such a move, but of the two, it would be the more reasonable. I use whole numbers. If our Conference would bear an additional assessment of over one thousand dollars for the General Endowment Fund, it would bear it for our present superannuated preachers, and a thousand dollars to this fund would be a great help to our needy old men.

But if we pay it into the General Endowment Fund, our Conference would receive forty-five dollars of the one thousand, if other Conferences should all do their part; but our Conference has furnished over six thousand to this fund, of which we only receive ninety-five dollars. According to these figures, our Conference would receive only fifteen dollars. The amount we have paid into that fund at six per cent. would bring $360. On this we get ninety-five dollars. These figures show that the North Mississippi Conference has contributed about three times her prorata of what has been paid in. And yet they ask us to assess our people over a thousand dollars more to help take care of the old preachers of other Conferences who are building up Annual Conference funds, and not doing their part in supporting this General Endowment Fund. We are not a rich Conference and have done far more than our part. And if this fund must be raised by assessment, the General Conference should take such action that would force each Conference to bear its part of this assessment.

Until something of this kind is done I shall vote first, last and all the time, against assessing our Conference to raise this fund. It should be raised by agents appointed for that purpose, and by wills and bequests, from those who are able to give and not by placing an additional burden upon the pastor who has more to do now than he can do as it should be done. Some of our circuits have now more assessments than they have Sundays in which to take them up. Our connectional men do not realize what a burden some of these preachers have to bear.

As a Conference, we resolved to take this collection and we ought to do what we have resolved we would do. J. W. Honnoll.

"A NEEDED LEGISLATION."

The legislation suggested by Brother H. P. Lewis, Jr., in the ADVOCATE of Nov. 4, the non-use of tobacco by the ministry, to be brought up for consideration at the next General Conference is calculated to bring forth much discussion, and ought, until the question is rightly settled.

As a layman, I agree with Brother Lewis and endorse his suggestion. It might be expected that there would be a division of opinion among the laymen in regard to the question, but it is much to be regretted that there should be among the ministry, for they ought to be a unit in opposition to its use.

Brother J. W. Campbell does not say whether he is a user of the obnoxious weed, but his article of Nov. 18, in opposition to Brother Lewis' suggested legislation would be a good weapon in the hands of saloon keepers and non-reformers. In fact, the "limiting conscience" and abridgement of personal liberty is their stock in trade argument.

Brother Campbell says, "When the Church has thus far aped Rome in its arrogant assumption of power, we may expect the Church to dictate as to our diet and our apparel."

Brother Campbell seems to forget that he is a minister of a Church that has prescribed rules of living for its ministry and members, and does prohibit some of the very things that he is so much alarmed about for fear that it may. Is there not a rule that prohibits the "putting on of gold and costly apparel, and drinking spiritous liquors?" Is not that a "dictation" as to apparel and diet? And it would be wisdom to prohibit the use of tobacco. For if those who have voluntarily become the shepherds and spiritual advisers of the people cannot, like the great Apostle Paul, surrender their own wills for the good of the flock, then the Church should demand it of them, as it does in many other things.

Are not the legislatures of many States, if not of all, enacting laws against the use of tobacco in some of its forms, without any thought of its moral or religious phase, but for the purpose of life-saving and health preservation, and why should a great Church balk at enacting legislation against this evil. Brother Campbell says, "If it is in the power of the Church to legislate more common sense into our heads and more Christian charity into our hearts," which is another argument of the non-reformer, "You can't legislate temperance or morality into a man," they argue, and I do not doubt but that Brother Campbell helped to vote liquor out of Mississippi in order to reform the drunkard and rear temperate men in the future. Every man that enters the Methodist ministry places himself under the direction of the Church and to some extent abridges his personal liberty.

I heard it stated that a pastor made the statement, that he believed tobacco was being used just as God intended it to be used. Then to be consistent, when he supplies himself with tobacco and cigars and seats himself around the fireside to enjoy his luxury, he should supply his wife with a mop and a snuff-box and place the spittoon between them and as he chews and smokes and spits, let her dip and mop and spit, and enjoy the luxury with him, for she too, would be using the tobacco as God intended, for is not snuff a form of tobacco made for the use of women. D. S. HARMON.

Meridian, Miss., Nov. 23, 1909.

"A NEEDED LEGISLATION."

I have read and re-read Brother J. W. Campbell's reply to Brother H. P. Lewis' article of Nov. 4, on "A Needed Legislation."

I note that Brother Campbell doesn't oppose "the needed legislation" because it prohibits the use of tobacco among the Methodist clergy, but for fear if such legislation were enacted, it would only be a matter of time until we, if we remained true to the Church, could have no choice in our diet or apparel and our consciences would be in the custody of Church laws.

If that be a logical process of reasoning, and we are permitted to draw such a conclusion from the passage of "The Needed Legislation," must we not by the same process conclude that the law making body which enacted our General rules, did thereby become the custodian of the "personal conscience?"

This is the inevitable conclusion, since we find in those general rules the following: "* * * It is expected therefore of all who continue therein (the Church) that they should evidence their desire of salvation: first by doing no harm, by avoiding evil of every kind, especially that which is more generally practiced, such as: * * * the using many words in buying or selling; the putting on of gold and costly apparel; softness or needless self-indulgence."

Since these general rules have been existing for some time and the Church has never become "a lot of long-faced Nazarites, and etc.," we can hardly see why the passage of "the needed legislation" would even tend toward subjecting us to loss of "personal ministerial conscience."

If a preacher were to say: I can conscientiously take my "toddy" three times a day in both sickness and health, I wonder if Brother Campbell would say a remonstrance would be an infringment upon his "personal ministerial conscience?"

"Does Brother Lewis, or any one else, say I am not discussing the question at issue." To be sure the question is being discussed, but in what way? For us to justly affirm that the passage of "the needed legislation" would cause the Church to assume control of the personal conscience we would have to first affirm that no similar enactment with equal weight had ever been passed without producing such assumption.

Surely there are similar laws with equal weight and the Church has never become so presumptuous in its discipline. Therefore, we believe Brother Campbell's reasoning to be anomalistic.

May the Lord bless Brother Campbell and the Church at large. LOYD DECELL.

HIGHER CRITICISM.

Mr. Editor: Since the time is short until our General Conference convenes, ought not the subject of higher criticism have a little more attention through our Conference organ? I understand that we are in the twentieth century. That we have advanced thinkers who ought to be appreciated; but ought there not be some check to certain teachings from our pulpits? Can we afford to keep quiet with our ordination vows upon us, while we hear taught from our pulpits that there was no such place as the Garden of Eden? That God never called Abraham to offer Isaac? That Abraham lived among heathen who offered their children in sacrifice to their gods, and he deciding to show his zeal equal to theirs, attempted to offer his son, and God called him and stopped him in the attempt? That there was no such being as Jonah? That the Book of Jonah was an allegory? That Darwin was correct in his teaching as to the origin of man, that he came from the lower animals? With love for our cause, I am yours in Christ.

W. J. PORTER.

TIME TO ACT.

By Conference resolutions, general acknowledgements and personal confessions, our Conference (Mississippi) has to some extent placed a ban on the use of tobacco by preachers. Even those who use it, and object to the Church prohibiting its use by our ministers, hasten to say that they do not want to be known as defending its use, but appeal, as the basis of their objections, to one's personal liberty and conscience.

Many, in the light of their conscience, let me say, feel convinced in their hearts that it is a real sin to use tobacco. I have yet to find a preacher who advocates its use to be helpful or commendable to our calling, but almost to a man all, deplore its use, and recognize it in the least sense as a needless self-indulgence.

There are thousands of our people, and some preachers, who have become slaves to the habit, and are seeking, or wishing for some remedy to get release. Is the Church raising her voice as she should in trying to save our boys from forming this habit that makes so many of them slaves?

Is it consistent in a preacher, who uses tobacco, to preach against its use by others? Doesn't his teaching on that point become null and void because, forsooth, he uses it himself? Sound preaching is not in saying to the people, "Do as I say, and not as I do," but rather that the preacher should practice what he preaches, and say, "Follow me as I follow Christ." When ordained ministers are asked the following: "Will you be diligent to frame and fashion yourselves, and your families, according to the doctrines of Christ; and to make both yourselves and them, as much as in you lieth, wholesome examples and patterns to the flock of Christ?" Par. 495, page 283.

If our Church hopes to be the force she ought in saving the boys of our land from forming the tobacco habit, she must have a ministry free from its use.

It is my belief that the General Conference has as much right to act in this matter as it had to say to the membership that they should not dance, play cards, attend theatres and circuses. If the ban has been placed on these forms of wordly amusements for the benefit of the membership, why shouldn't the General Conference place a ban on the use of tobacco by preachers?

So, I am strongly in favor of having our next General Conference take some action towards discouraging the use of tobacco by ministers in such a way that we will have a ministry, within a few years, entirely free from the tobacco habit.

A GENERAL CONFERENCE MEMORIAL.

At the fourth Quarterly Conference of East End Church, Meridian, Miss., held Dec. 1, the following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That we hereby memorilize the General Conference to be held in Asheville, N. C., in May, 1910, to grant to the women of the Church the full rights of the laity."

WHAT OUR PUBLIC SCHOOL IS, AND WHAT IT IS NOT.

It is the most potent factor for the development of both mind and spirit of the future true American citizen. It is ballast for this tempest tossed commercial time. It is the greatest social equalizer the world has ever known, in teaching the brotherhood of man, in breaking preferment, castes, and in inspiring youth with equal possibility of success. It has one of the attributes of divinity, it is no respector or choice of person.

It bestows its blessing upon the son of the humble as soon as the heir of the great. It delights to honor toil and persistent effort. It crowns its conquerers with imperishable laurel of immortal thirst, that is never slaked save when the life is given to better humanity as a deed of gratitude.

To know that the public school is the greatest quarantine station in the land, is joy. For it woos away from sin and wrong, thousands that would for its lack cost the country many times its price in civil protection and moral redemption. Before its shrine, comes worshipers from every land.

Its greatness is best seen by comparison with those countries that have no such system, or even to our own men when it knew no way to educate all without endless friction and poor results. Holy Writ tells us of a stone cut from the mountain that in its motion filled the earth; may we not say in like manner, has the public school come to be regarded by the American people? The present prosperity in power of producing is only a dividend declared on the investment of the public school. How many of the eminent men can settle their dues of obligation and gratitude with the public school? We glory in our colleges and universities, but these are almost wholly dependent upon the public school. Our "free" school is but the manual to guide us into "free" government. The one who objects to the public school, as a system, is an enemy to our free institutions, and government by the people. The public school is the balance of power on election day.

No reasonable praise is too good for the public school, that has contributed more for the material, social, economical betterment of the country than many other forces combined.

But the public school is not the home, and a mistake is made to assume it to be. Many children are sent to school to get what training it is their fortune to have. It may be proper to teach the child in school the principles of Christianity but never expedient to teach church preferment.

A GLANCE BACKWARD.

While not given by nature the trend of camping with the retrospective, but rather to introspection and the prospective, yet the date, Nov 7, 1909, marks an epoch in my Christian Church and homelife. Upon the threshold of young manhood, (my twentieth birthday) away from childhood's home and among strangers, I communed as a member of Central Methodist Church, Meridian, Miss., for the first time. Three anniversaries fell successively upon communion day, and now after the lapse of forty years (my 60th birthday), wife and I, with ten children, all knelt at the same altar and took the sacred emblem at the hands of our pastor.

Each child has been converted at home. A grown son, steward with me in the same church. God has proven, indeed, to me a good paymaster. He always makes the sequel right. While the years in their flight seem not few, and I am still in the vigor of a strong and active physical manhood, yet when the retrospective is called in, many indeed have been the changes. History has been rapidly made. From memory I recall the names and faces of seven pastors and the same number of presiding elders who have been summoned to their reward. The names of but two, now effective preachers, who were in the Annual Conference then, and four or perhaps six, when as a lay delegate, I attended my first Conference. One of its cherished impressions was an altar call and service during a business session. The membership of Central Church now numbers between six and seven hundred, and not more than a dozen of these names were on the church roll when I joined. Not a single steward, trustee, class leader, or local preacher, then a member of the Quarterly Conference, is now here. Repeatedly honored throughout the years with an official connection in every place to which a layman was eligible, I have ever striven to give proof of belonging to God and evidence of an appreciated membership in the Church of my choice. While many indications show the imperative need of a great travail upon the part of the entire Church, and in spite of her seeming shortcomings, or failures to measure up to the every predominant demand, of this wonderful age, and while this may be called "the perilous times" of prophecy, yet the heart's consolation is that our God is not dead, but is in his Church and will prove bigger than the devil.

Believing we are on the very threshold of the breaking out of revival fires which shall sweep every land, my heart's desire as a layman is, that we may, in pulpit and in the pew, strive day by day to keep the price paid for answered prayer.

In faith and prayer,

L. P. BROWN.

EAST McCOMB METHODIST CHURCH.

The above is a picture of the East McComb Methodist Church, which was built this year. The first Sunday in January found a small congregation in the open air (on the lot where the church now stands) worshiping God, beginning the work which has resulted in the erection of a nice church at a cost of $2,200, and now has a membership of 112.

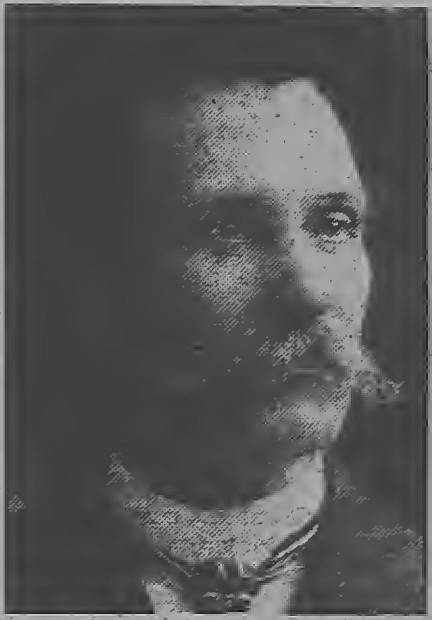
While the membership is made up largely of people who depend upon their daily labor in the McComb Machine Shops for a living, I feel safe in saying that all claims will be paid in full by them by the time our Conference opens on Dec. 8.

In our work on the Summit and East McComb Charge, we have seen some advancement at each appointment, and, while our collections are not yet paid in full, we hope the next ten days will work wonders on this charge.

Hoping that our coming conference may be a great blessing to all in attendance, and each pastor may receive the proper appointment, I am faithfully,

J. T. ABNEY.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT THIRTY-THREE YEARS.



MR. W. B. THOMSON.

We give above a picture of Mr. W. B. Thomson, who has been superintendent of the Louisiana Avenue Methodist Sunday School, New Orleans, for thirty-three years. He now turns over the burden of the superintendency to Brother S. E. Schmink, but will himself continue to work in the Sunday School. As Brother Thomson is the Treasurer of the Mission Board of the Louisiana Conference, and has filled many other offices, covering a long period of years, he does not need an introduction to our Louisiana readers.

PERSONAL.

Mr. W. H. Summer, of Nettleton, Miss., called at the ADVOCATE office one day last week. He is at present taking a course in pharmacy in New Orleans.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Bridges, from Phillips, La., called at the office last week. Into this home the ADVOCATE has gone as a familiar friend for many years. We appreciate the visits of those who belong to our large circle of readers.

We learn that there has been at 29th Street, Gulfport, Miss., a meeting of deep interest and good results. A goodly number, mostly in the church, were converted. The meeting still abides in cottage prayer meetings every night. These cottage prayer services have been deeply spiritual meetings where people were deeply convicted, repented and were saved.

Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Preston, of Logtown, Miss., announces the approaching marriage of their daughter, Pearl Adell, to Rev. J. C. Rousseaux, pastor of the Methodist Church at Bon Ami, La. The wedding will take place on the 29th day of December. May a long, happy and prosperous life be theirs, and the Master's approval crown them when they stand before him at the last.

Rev. W. A. Hart, who has been returned by Bishop Key, to Johnson City, Tex., for his fourth year, rejoices in the fact that over one hundred persons have been added to the church in the first three years of his pastorate. He finds West Texas a delightful country. His wife has greatly improved in health. He has one complaint, in which we join; that the preachers do not report enough concerning their charges, for the Advocate. This is Brother Hart's principal source of news from home.

The Trustees of the Seashore Campgrounds met in Epworth Lodge on the campgrounds Thursday of last week. The new charter has been completed for transfer to the school board and has been sent to the Secretary of State of Mississippi for ratification. There will be a called meeting in January to complete the transfer to the school board. At the meeting on Thursday last, the following were among those that were present: Dr. E. L. McGehee, L. N. Dantzler, W. T. Griffin, R. P. Roach, A. S. Daniels, S. H. Meyers, A. S. Tomlinson and Rev. N. E. Joyner.

WEEK OF PRAYER.

Our Home Mission work as an auxiliary of the great parent organization is so uplifting in its broadness that we are almost breathless when we try to take in the vast machinery, as it were, of all the small auxiliaries and their seemingly small work summed up in the larger work as a whole.

It is this greatness of the whole that enables each one to do their best and the greatness of these small auxiliaries is the way in which they bring the big things out.

There is a great work to do; the W. H. M. Society is called to do it. We are not to be classed as uncharitable because we are Home Mission workers, nor are we ourselves to be so narrow-minded as to think that all we do should be for home work. Home Mission work in its broadest sense is as important as Foreign Missions. Home Missions does not mean, "Me and my wife, my son John, and his wife, us four and no more."

The local work is a prominent feature, but the connectional idea, which takes in all the work that is being carried on by our grand society in the fine schools, rescue homes, settlement work and other enterprises, is the important thing that calls for individual earnestness and endues us with enthusiasm and inspiration. This is the spirit that will filter through each act and give us the inner-life that permeates through our work and makes the sweet and mighty soul that is so abiding to us all. God alone can sum up the good that may come from the observance of this Week of Prayer by all the auxiliaries. Aside from the financial view of it all, there will be a warming up of Laodicean inactivity which is neither cold or hot, and the consecration of our best work for the blessed Master who is calling, calling for each one of us to come and work in his vineyard.

The topic for each day is inspiring.

LOUISVILLE, MISS.

The market conducted by the Woman's Home Mission Society of the M. E. Church, South, was a success—a neat little sum being realized. These funds will be used in paying for the beautiful Mason-Hamlin Lizet organ that was purchased by the Woman's Home Mission Society after the board of stewards of this church had turned this noble instrument down. They are a band of earnest, zealous workers, and deserve the full credit for this handsome instrument now in the Methodist Church, they having succeeded in making three payments on the organ and raised every cent of money paid out except eighty-seven dollars and eighty-three cents. Let all honor be given to them and we men will step aside and let the laurels be worn by those who have won them.

OBSERVER.

HAVE FAITH IN GOD.

BY REV. ROBT. DOWNER.

The sermon that forms part of this communication was delivered by an aged, fully consecrated Baptist minister during "Reconstruction days" after the "Civil War," in East Baton Rouge Parish, La.

The reporter was the wife of a minister, who at one time was superintendent of education for said State. She was a cultured, well educated school teacher, also a member of the M. E. Church, South, at the State Capitol, personally known to the writer, and by him this sermon was copied from the original manuscript, that the reporter had presented to her pastor about the year 1874.

That year, my ministry was in said Parish. Some few glints of sunshine were seen in the political sky, harbingers of a period when white supremacy would again reign, but even in 1874 the negro was the dominant political factor. The listeners of that sermon were composed of widows, orphans, and veterans of many bloody battlefields, who were striving to maintain an existence, under most distressing, heart-breaking, helpless conditions. While voiced in a style not current in the twentieth century, it yet presents "Faith in God," as essential to Christian triumph, that gave good cheer to those who heard, possibly not excelled, by some college graduates of a later ministry.

Evidently he had studied Elijah, and owned an unexpurgated copy of the Bible. God bless the dear old stranger, if yet alive. His sermon has blessed my soul in the many sore trials that befall the itinerant minister, and I send it forth upon its mission to establish and strengthen faith in God; praying that untold good may follow its publicity, and that "he being dead, may yet speak."

THE SERMON.

Joshua 6th Chapter; Verses 4 and 5.

"My dearly beloved brethren: I have chose this chapter, as the foundation of my discourse for two reasons. First, it's a test of your faith, second, it suits the present times. We all talk a heap about faith nowadays, but genuine faith is a mighty sceerce article. Lets compare ourn with the children of Israel. They was ordered to take Jericho. It was a strong city, full of armed men, and surrounded by a high wall. They was few in numbers—faint-hearted, and bodied too, I guess, (for they had bin a livin on biled corn three days). They was in a strange country; rations dun giv out; manna stopped; a new leader, and he, a marching e'm up agin a walled city, a sight harder to take, than any, Sherman, or Grant, or Butler, ever took. They saw no prospect of doin anything;—what was they to do? Why nutten—but obey orders, and "blow on their rams horns." They nowed enugh;—they nowed that the God that they profest to trust in, had apinted Joshua their leader, and they took it fur granted, that whatsumever he told e'm to do was right, whether they seed through it, or not. Now if "faith is the substance of things not seen, whar's the sence of holdin back, 'till you can see what's a cummin? As a beleving Christian, you can't do no sich thing; but like these childurn of Israul, you got, "to pass on, and blow with your ramhorns," at the stated time and place.

They all got ready; the priests took the ark, and before it seven trumpits of ramshorns. The furst day they marched round, and when they cum to the appinted spot, "they blowed with their ramshorns. Didn't see nuthin of the good of it, but as Joshua commanded they "passed on." Second day round agin; when they arriv at the same spot they "blowed with their ramshorns and passed on." Third day, fourth day, fifth day, and sixth day these old Christians marched round the strong city and blowed with their ramshorns. Now they begin to wonder whar's the good of all this marching and blowin? Our number is lessenin, one drappin here, another thar, soon, we'll all be worn out. Now does Joshua tell them whats guine to happen? No! Does he tell em when? No! he jist tells em "blow on your ramshorns, and pass on." If they had nowed zactly whar, when, and how, it was all to be did, would that been a trien of their faith? No! my brethren, and theres times now when we've got to go it blind, "blow on the ramshorns and pass on." Many a time as we open our eyes with the morning light, we say, "What'll become of us?" "we hav'nt got enough for this day's suply;" the ile's a most out, and the meal is but a hand full." Well, whar's your "ramshorns;" may be your sick, got no medicine; no doctor, no nourishment; no, nuthin!" "What shall we do? Blow on your ramshorns, you've got them. "The last pertater is in the pot;" never mind that—whar's your ramshorns? Once in several days the Sabbath rolls round; you're in the grass; every hour counts—never mind your crop; you keep the Sabbath holy and you'll be a blowing on your ramshorns. When you go to church, and they take up a cullection, you feel of your one lone dollar in your pocket; look at your old shoes; think of your family, and wonder, which needs this dollar most, them or the church? Now, I say, "trust God; drop it in the hat, it'll tuch bottom, and you'll be a blowing on your ramshorns." Sum of you says, "O these is uncommon trien times; taxes is a eaten us up; tradekills is ruining the country," "niggers is stealing us out," and poverty is a pressing us on all sides;" Well, may be it is the sixth day with you, all you can do, is take your "ramshorns, blow and pass on." Remember, the childurn of Israul when they had marched round six times; they looked at them high walls; they was'nt cracked; they never seed em even shake; had they any reason fur thinken that they was guine to fail? "No!" Does good old Joshua cheer em up by saying; jes one time more you've got to go? No! He increases the task; tells em, "turmorrow is the seventh day, and you must march around seven times." Now don't you feel fur em? Can't you picter ther hopeless distress? That was'nt all they wasn't to say one word; not to speak, 'till Joshua told em to speak. Nowadays, if any of us has troubles, we murmur agin Providence, complain of our neighbors, and seem ter furget all a bout havin any ramshorns to blow on. Brethren, cheer up; some of us is on the seventh trip; of the seventh day round Jerico, and the time aint fur off when the Priest will blow on the ramshorns fur the last time, and the people will all be commanded to shout, for the Lord hath given you the city. Then, farewell to trials; farewell to hard times; farewell to sickness and death; but, let me still keep my "ramshorns." They'll bring to mind the faith that triumphs over all. Many of you, all that's used to organs and sich like, may think ramshorns was mighty poor music; but they fetched the walls of Jerico down, and sounded sweet in the ears of the childurn of Israul.

A WOMAN'S HEART.

Do you know you have asked for the costliest thing ever made by the Hand above—
A woman's heart and a woman's life, and a woman's wonderful love?
Do you know you have asked for this priceless thing as a child might ask for a toy,
Demanding what others have died to win with the reckless dash of a boy?

You have written my lesson of duty out; man-like you have questioned me:
Now stand at the bar of my woman's soul until I shall question thee.
You require that your mutton shall always be hot; your socks and your shirts be whole;
I require that your heart be as true as God's stars, and as pure as his heaven, your soul.

You require a cook for your mutton and beef: I ask a far greater thing;
A seamstress you're wanting for socks and for shirts: I look for a man and a king!
A king for the beautiful realm called "Home," and a man that the Maker, God,
Shall look upon as he did the first, and say, "It is very good."

I am fair and young, but the rose will fade from my soft, young cheek one day:
Will you love me then, 'mid the falling leaves, as you did 'mid the blooms of May?
Is your heart an ocean so strong and deep I may launch my all in its tide?
A loving woman finds heaven or hell on the day she becomes a bride.

I require all things that are grand and true, all things that a man should be;
If you give all this I will stake my life to be all you demand of me;
If you cannot be this, a seamstress and cook you can hire, and little to pay.
But a woman's heart and a woman's life are not to be won in this way.

HISTORY AT THE DISTRICT SCHOOL.

The new teacher glanced smilingly over the school, and was delighted to see so many bright young faces among her new charges.

"Now, children," she said, opening her history book, "we will run over our history, so that I may find out what you know. Willie Perkins, you may tell me why Washington crossed over the Delaware."

"Ahum—er—why, now, er—ahum," began Willie; "why, becuz"—

"Because what, dear?" asked the teacher.

"Becuz he couldn't go under it," said Willie.

"Dear me, Willie, what an answer!" ejaculated the teacher. "Polly Hicks, you look like a bright little girl. Why did the Father of his Country cross the Delaware?"

"Pleathe, mim," replied Polly, "I gueth it wath becuth the Hudthen wath too far away for him to croth that."

"Mercy!" cried the teacher. "Really, you will all have to stay in this afternoon, and study your history. I will now test you on arithmetic. Maggie Wilkins, if I were to divide three bananas among seventeen boys, what would be the result?"

"A riot," said Maggie, speaking up like a little drum-major.

"Possibly," said the teacher; "but that is not what I mean. Tommy, you may take the question. Three bananas among three boys—that would be one banana apiece for each boy; now three bananas among seventeen boys would be what?"

"Three bananas, mim," answered Tommy.

"I know, but three into seventeen is"—said the teacher.

"Three bananas would go into seventeen boys once and none over," said Tommy confidently.

It was then that the new teacher resigned.

THE BOY WHO WOULD NOT GIVE UP.

The energy that wins success begins to develop very early in life. The characteristics of the boy will commonly prove those of the men, and the best characteristics of young life should be encouraged and educated in the wisest possible manner. The following story illustrates this truth:

Said Judge P—: About thirty years ago I stepped into a book-store in Cincinnati in search of some books I wanted. While there, a little ragged boy, not over twelve years of age, came in and inquired for a geography.

"Plenty of them," was the salesman's reply.

"How much do they cost?"

"One dollar, my lad."

"I did not know they were so much."

He turned to go out, and even opened the door, but closed it again, and came back.

"I've got sixty cents," said he; "could you let me have a geography, and wait a little while for the rest of the money?"

How eager his little bright eyes looked for an answer, and how he seemed to shrink within his ragged clothes, when the man, not very kindly, told him he could not. The disappointed little fellow looked up at me with a very poor attempt to smile, and left the store. I followed him, and overtook him.

"And what now?" I asked.

"Try another place, sir."

"Shall I go, too, and see how you succeed?"

"Oh, yes, if you like," said he in surprise.

Four different stores I entered with him, and each time he was refused.

"Will you try again?" I asked.

"Yes, sir, I shall try them all, or I should not know whether I could get one."

We entered the fifth store, and the little fellow walked up manfully, and told the gentleman just what he wanted, and how much he had.

"You want the book very much?" asked the proprietor.

"Yes, very much."

"Why do you want it so very much?"

"To study, sir. I can't go to school, and I study when I can at home. All the boys have got one, and they will get ahead of me. Besides, my father was a sailor, and I want to learn of the places where he used to go."

"Well, my lad, I will tell you what I will do. I will let you have a new geography, and you can pay me the remainder of the money when you can, or I will let you have one that is not quite new for fifty cents."

"Are the leaves all in it, and just like the others, only not new?"

"Yes, just like the new one."

"It will do just as well, then, and I will have eleven cents left towards buying some other books. I am glad they did not let me have one at the other places."

Last year I went to Europe on one of the finest vessels that ever plowed the waters of the Atlantic. We had beautiful weather until very near the end of the voyage; then came a terrible storm which would have sunk all on board had it not been for the captain. Every spar was laid low, the rudder was useless, and a great leak had shown itself, threatening to fill the ship. The crew were all strong, willing men, and the mates were all practical seamen of the first class; but after pumping for one whole night, and the water still gaining upon them, they gave up in despair, and prepared to take the boats, though they might have known no small boat could live in such a sea.

"I will land you safe at the dock in Liverpool," said the captain, "if you will be men."

He did land us safely; but the vessel sank, moored to the dock. The captain stood on the deck of the sinking vessel receiving the thanks and blessings of the passengers as they passed down the gang-plank. As I passed he grasped my hand, and said: "Judge P—, do you recognize me?"

I told him that I was not aware that I ever saw him until I stepped aboard his vessel.

"Do you remember that boy in Cincinnati?"

"Very well, sir—William Haverly."

"I am he," he said; "God bless you!"

FOOTBALL'S TOLL ON LIFE.

A few years ago, when football casualties were so numerous, there went up a demand for its reform. The athletic managers—those connected with colleges and universities—got together and "reformed." But the reformation has been about as much a blessing to the boys as the recent revision of the tariff has been to the country. Writing of the doings of the game for the season, up to about Nov. 1, the Christian Advocate, New York, says:

"Michael Burke, of Shenandoah, Pa., a student of a medical college in Philadelphia, died on Sunday of injuries received on Saturday. Eugene A. Byrne, a student at West Point, and left tackle on the West Point team, was injured in Saturday's game with Harvard, and died on Sunday. Byrne was paralyzed from his mouth down. His father was there and saw his son fatally injured. Roy Spybuck, football player of Haskell University, fell on his head while making a tackle on Saturday, and died in the hospital at Kansas City. The injured whose accidents have been made public since this season began (barely a month ago) number over 128, and up to Monday of this week, fourteen players have been killed this season. Of the 128, 100 have suffered serious hurts. Many have been hurt whose cases have not come to public notice. We have counted up nineteen who had their collarbones broken, twelve whose legs were broken, and eleven whose ribs were broken. In our letter on games we denounced football, some thought too severely. At the time of our writing this another young man who was kicked on the back of the head and suffered concussion of the brain, superinducing convulsions, was said to be dying: Naval Cadet Wilson, of Annapolis, was lingering on the verge of the grave, and several others not mentioned in the list were seriously injured. The Princeton authorities, when asked whether the death of Cadet Byrne would have any effect on the games scheduled by Princeton, received a negative answer, and it is said that the football men regard it as an extremely exceptional case rather than as an accident to be taken as an indictment of the game. There is nobody so blind as those who are determined not to see."

Such is the toll on life and limb taken by football. Read the above and cease to wonder that the brutal game is so much opposed. And be surprised no longer that the Conferences in Mississippi and elsewhere put a ban on inter-collegiate athletics. Will anybody ask these Conferences to cease their opposition? We hope not.

"DR. CHAPMAN'S NEW METHOD."

Dr. Chapman, the great revivalist, has recently adopted a method in his work that should meet with general and hearty approval. He is one of the most evangelical and successful preachers of the day. Instead of requiring, as heretofore, all pastors who co-operate in revival work, in a given place, to suspend their stated services on the Sabbath, and the mid-week prayer-meeting, he suspends his own services, and urges the churches to keep up "their regular schedule of meetings." What time he loses by this arrangement he makes up by preaching Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons.

The Chicago Interior quotes Dr. Chapman as saying that he "now sees that much of the value of his work has been lost because after his brief campaign in any given city the churches were all out of their regular routine, and they lost motion as they tried to get back into their ordinary channels of work again." It is a wonder that Dr. Chapman, so constantly engaged in revival work, and staying so short a time in any place, has been able to see so clearly the mistake he has been making. Most revivalists do not see it, or, if they do, utterly ignore it. Indeed, we have reason to believe that some of them delight in deranging church schedules, vaingloriously supposing they are getting the lumbering old coaches "out of the ruts."

It is a wonder, too, that pastors, seeing the damage effected by breaking up the regular work, have not protested and rebelled against it. We suppose they are afraid. We have seen pastors in mortal dread, apparently, of evangelists who had no authority, inherent or delegated. We call to mind a poor fellow, pastor in a large and important town, who, during the evangelist's sway, looked more like a hen-pecked husband at a big dining than like a man of God in charge of a congregation of Christians. He was a pitiful object. Pastors fear it will happen to them as it did to three or four at a certain town and place. The evangelist was in full control, granted him by common consent, a thing never contemplated in the adoption of present-day evangelism. This man, on Saturday night, after a week of strenuous work, announced the regular services in the different churches for the Sabbath, and advised the hearers to attend; and, turning to the pastors, he said: "I dare any of you to open the door of your church for the reception of members." And they did not dare.

Every man who has been an observer knows the demoralizing effect on a congregation and Sunday school, when for weeks at a time the regular appointments are "called in" during the protracted meeting season. We observed it and realized it many years ago when serving as preacher-in-charge of circuits. It was particularly damaging to churches that had regular service only once a month. Whether the custom is still kept up we do not know, but we do know that in towns where evangelists hold forth for a month, and all the churches abandon their schedules every Sunday and go to "the tabernacle" or the tent" or the "opera house" every night in the week and three times on Sunday, the loss overbalances the good. Not infrequently is the Sabbath a day well nigh wasted. Not the least damage is the loss of the pastor's hold on his church. We say nothing about the loss on his salary.

If the present method of evangelizing is continued, and it seems now to be generally accepted, we pray that Dr. Chapman's "new method" will be insisted on by all the pastors who unite in hiring an evangelist to do their work. It will accomplish good in more ways than one. It will save heartaches—heartaches that almost inevitably follow a month of work by a stranger—especially the work of a sensationalist who draws hideous pictures on big white paper, who tells funny things and sells his own song books.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The fortieth session of the North Mississippi Conference convened in Okolona, Dec. 1, 1909. The opening exercises were conducted by Bishop E. E. Hoss, who presided during the session. John R. Countiss was elected secretary, and W. L. Duren, V. C. Curtis and W. E. M. Brogan, assistants. Bishop Hoss' presidency was highly satisfactory from beginning to close, and up to the afternoon session of Saturday (this was written Saturday night) not a single correction of the Minutes was necessary—a thing we never saw in all our experience at Conference. It is well worthy of notice. So much for a good secretary.

The attendance was full. The weather was just such at the beginning of the week as to induce the brethren to go, and it continued pleasant until the close—save a little threat of rain on opening day. The hospitality of Okolona was abundant—people and preachers seemed to be pleased with each other, and everything moved along smoothly. We do not know that Okolona will want the Conference again, but we feel sure that the Conference would not object to coming back right soon.

The connectional men were not present in as large numbers as usual, but the connectional interests did not suffer. Dr. Lamar represented the Publishing House, and collected the accounts. He said he would "leave with a pretty clean book." That means the preachers paid up well. Rev. J. R. Stewart represented the Endowment Fund for Superannuates, and did it well. Dr. E. B. Chappell, the Sunday School Editor, captured the Conference. He is sound, and rings clear. Dr. R. G. Waterhouse came in too late to talk at the anniversary of the Board of Education, but Bishop Hoss was on hand, and gave us a strong talk which mightily pleased the brethren. Dr. Waterhouse occupied the closing hour of Saturday afternoon as the representative of the General Board of Education, an unfavorable time, as it was rather late and many members absent. Dr. A. P. Parker, of China, gave us a talk of an hour and ten minutes Saturday evening. It was well worth hearing. Besides these, Rev. Robert Selby, of the Mississippi Conference, represented the Seashore Divinity School, and preached one sermon which pleased and edified the brethren.

Reports from the various charges indicate that the year just closed was one of great prosperity, both in temporal and spiritual things. Thousands of souls were converted at our altars; and many hundreds united with the Church. The report of the increase in membership will be gratifying. Finances in all departments are ahead of anything ever reported. This is true, not only of the collections for which the preachers are responsible, but likewise of the salaries of the preachers for which the stewards are responsible, and of the collections of the Women's Home and Foreign Mission Societies. Evidently North Mississippi Methodism was never in a better condition.

One evidence of prosperity is seen in the number of recruits coming into the Conference. Fourteen were received, viz.: Thos. Mills, Nash Brooks, Charles T. Batton, E. H. Cunningham, J. E. Stephens, Anderson M. Bennett, C. W. Allen, Clinton A. Northington, Olin Ray, R. L. Collins, Armistead F. Moore, T. E. Gregory, and T. J. Halfacre. In addition to these, there came to us for admission five or six brethren from other churches, so that the class of the first year numbers about twenty. Somebody has been doing work among the young men the past year after the old style. We thank God and take courage. Six young men, after two years on trial, were received into full connection, viz.: Jas. C. McElroy, Jas. L. Nabors, Kenneth P. Foust, Thos. J. Hopper, Thos. E. Yancey and Edward B. Sharp. Bishop Hoss' address to the class was one of the best ever heard by the Conference, and we dare say made a lasting impression on their minds and hearts. If not, we should say they are hard to impress. Surely they feel the awful responsibilities of the ministry, and go out in the fear of God.

All the business of the Conference was transacted deliberately, and in as quiet a way as possible. There was always interest, but no undue excitement or debate; indeed, there was scarcely any debate except on the question of putting Methodists in the faculty of Vanderbilt University. On this, the Conference spoke in no uncertain terms, and we are happy to say that the debate was opened and led by young men who were former students in the University. These young men will be heard from later on.

The Conference, like similar bodies, the Tennessee, the Memphis, the North Alabama and others, is much interested in the settlement of the controversy concerning Vanderbilt University, and adopted the following paper presented by the Committee on Memorials to the General Conference:

"Whereas, there has been much and continued agitation throughout the Church in regard to the ownership and control of Vanderbilt University, and,

"Whereas, it is necessary to the peace of the Church and the welfare of the University that the question be settled, therefore, be it resolved

"First—That we respectfully memorialize the General Conference, to meet in May, 1910, to adopt such measures as shall put the ownership and control of Vanderbilt University forever at rest, and establish the claim of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to said institution.

"Second—That the decision of the commission appointed by the General Conference of 1906 to inquire into the relation of Vanderbilt University to the Church, be ratified as final.

"Third—That we request our delegates to the General Conference to use their influence in carrying out the provisions of this memorial."

Besides adopting the above memorial, the Conference spoke in no uncertain tones regarding the importance of making prominent the fact that Vanderbilt University is a Methodist Institution, and should be manned in all its departments by Methodist men. The fact was brought out that the majority of the faculty outside the Biblical Department, are members of other churches, or of no church. The Conference put itself on record as opposed to this seemingly settled policy of the Board of Trust.

As is always the case, great interest centered in the election of delegates to the General Conference. The balloting began at the Friday morning session and was concluded Saturday morning with the following result: Clerical: W. B. Murrah, T. W. Lewis, R. A. Meek, J. W. Boswell. Reserves: W. W. Woollard, B. P. Jaco. Lay: J. R. Bingham, J. A. Lowe, J. D. Barbee, G. L. Jones. Reserves: Parham Williams, J. H. Sherrard.

The Treasurer of the Board of Missions reported that for the year now closing, there was raised for foreign missions, $9,764, and for home missions, $6,854. Tupelo is the banner charge, having raised for home and foreign work, $1,920. In addition, the two Women's Boards, home and foreign, raised several thousand dollars—the figures we have not at hand.

Sunday was a great day for the Methodists of Okolona, and judging by the crowds that attended the services, others besides Methodists were interested. At nine o'clock, Rev. J. W. Honnoll conducted the love-feast. As early as was the hour, the house, a large one, was comfortably filled. Many persons took part in the exercises which were interesting and edifying. Before eleven o'clock, the house was packed—the multitude eager to hear Bishop Hoss. He fully measured up to the expectation of those who had heard him previously, and we dare say he went far beyond the expectation of those who had never heard him. The sermon was a great deliverance. He has few equals as a preacher—as an expounder of the Word he excels. His expositions of the Scriptures at the opening of the daily sessions were such as we hear only when he comes along. He makes our hearts burn within us when he opens to us the Word of God. In the afternoon, Dr. R. G. Waterhouse, of the Holston Conference, preached a fine sermon. Then followed the memorial service. Rev. G. W. Bachman read the memoir of Rev. Amos Kendall who had died during the year, and Rev. W. N. Duncan, the memoir of Mrs. Ramsey, widow of the late Rev. T. Y. Ramsey.

Dr. A. P. Parker, of China, preached at night. The Baptist, the Presbyterian, and Episcopal Churches were open to the Conference, and the respective pulpits were filled at both hours. We had the pleasure of hearing Rev. A. E. Clement in the evening at the Presbyterian Church, and heard good reports from brethren who occupied other pulpits.

The Conference at Okolona will be long remembered, and by nobody longer than this editor, who shared with Rev. W. M. Young, the hospitalities of the best home in the town—the home of Hon. H. L. Morrison and his estimable wife. Brother Young and the writer were indeed fortunate.

PERSONAL MENTION.

Rev. J. R. Roberson was the only man on the effective list who failed to reach Conference at Okolona, and he was kept away on acount of sickness, which, however, was not of a very serious nature.

Rev. J. A. Goad, of McCool, passed through the deep waters during the year. He was compelled to undergo a surgical operation. But he passed the ordeal safely, and is now in excellent health, and ready for another four year's work in some good charge. He has closed a four year's term at McCool, where he was much appreciated, the officials passing strong resolutions commending his efficiency and fidelity.

Rev. Jno. A. Randolph, Chaplain in the army member of the North Mississippi Conference, after an absence of six years, was with his brethren at Okolona, and seemed to enjoy the occasion very much. To use his own words, "it tasted mighty good to be with the brethren again." Brother Randolph is the only Chaplain in the army who has the rank of Major. This promotion came to him for "distinguished service." We all rejoice with him in his good fortune.

THE STORY OF CHEYENG CHOON SU.

On a certain day near the city of Wonsan a man came walking along the big road and asked for lodging at an inn. He was a young man of about medium height and of a slender and a wiry build and his clothing indicated a long journey and a short pocketbook. He gave his name as Chyeng Choon Su and said that he was on his way to Wonsan to collect some money that was owing to him. This account that he gave of his purpose in going to Wonsan was not true, for the truth about him was that he had made things so hot for him at his home by his profligate life that, though an honored member of the family because he was the oldest son of the oldest brother, yet his people could not endure to have him around any longer and had turned him out. He had then made his living by gambling and stealing and swindling, and in any way that he could to get his living out of those with whom he came in contact, except by decent, honest work.

This went on until men came to know him, and he found it necessary to leave that part of the country and go somewhere, where he was not known in order to continue in the way he had been following for his living. So, as he approached the city of Wonsan, seeking as it were a new world to conquer, he began to enquire for an inn-keeper who was an easy-going sort of a fellow, thinking that if he could find that kind of a man that he would have a better chance to take him in and thus get something out of him. So, having heard of the keeper of the inn above-mentioned as an easy-going sort of a fellow, he duly presented himself and asked for lodging.

After staying for several days he decided to go on into Wonsan and told the inn-keeper that he was going to collect money that was owing to him, that he would be back that way and that he would pay him on his way back. However, though the inn-keeper was an easy man, he was not that easy, and saying that if he did not get his money he could not carry on his business, he demanded payment at once. Choon Su did not have the money, so he gave the inn-keeper a little knife with a carved handle that he had, in payment for the wine and rice that he had received during his stay, and went on into Wonsan to see what he could find there.

Providence led him to an inn in the city whose proprietor was a Christian and a member of the Presbyterian Church, and there he obtained lodging.

He ordered wine, but the proprietor said that he had no wine. Choon Su looked at him in amazement, and said: What kind of an inn is this, that does not furnish wine to the guests? The proprietor answered, we are Christians, and, therefore, neither drink wine nor sell it. It was not long before the landlord got to talking to Choon Su about religion, and though he did not want to hear about it, yet he kept at him. Choon Su wanted to leave, but he could not, because he had no money to pay his bill. He also noted that the landlord was not only concerned in him, but that he talked with everybody that he got a chance to about religion, and that set him to thinking that there must be something in this thing that made a man so anxious to talk to everybody about it. His landlord was always after him to read some of his books, but noticing that the books were written in the Korean would be one banana apiece for each boy; now ten in the Korean Script were the most trashy kind of novels, he was not disposed to read them. However, as his landlord kept on insisting, he one day asked him if he had any books in the Chinese Script, and upon the landlord's answering yes, he said: "Well, if you will bring me one of them, I will read it." So the landlord went off at once and brought him a Chinese Bible. Choon Su took it, and beginning at Genesis he began to read. He says now, that after he had read the first five chapters, and since that time, he has never doubted that the Christian religion is true, and though at that time there was no change in his heart. Not long afterwards he got a place with Dr. Ross. He indulged in all sorts of evil tempers of jealousy, envy and hatred for the members of the church and for the missionaries. After being with Dr. Ross, his teacher, six months, the first meeting of our great revival started in Wonsan, and Choon Su was the second man to receive the great transformation. One day, at the end of the services, he arose to his feet and asked Dr. Hardie, who was then in charge, if he might say a few words, and receiving permission, he started to tell his story. He said that he had been realizing lately what an awful sinner he was; that he had been entertaining feelings of hatred and jealousy for the missionaries and for the members of the church; and that his heart had been full of the hardest kind of pride, so that when his kindred failed to do him the reverence that was due him according to Korean sustom, because of his being the oldest son of the oldest brother in the family, he would fly into a terrible rage. Also among other things, he said that before his first wife's death, she had been sick for about six months, and that during all that time he had done nothing for her to make anything easier for her, and that he had gone along in his own selfish way, just as if she had not been sick, leaving her entirely to the care of the women of the family, and that all the time he did not think but that he was doing the natural thing. Now, however, he was realizing as never before how awful brutal he had been. And so he went on making a clean breast of his sins, and said that he was confessing them all to God with true repentance, and then he launched into what Dr. Hardie says was one of the most powerful exhortations to righteousness that he had ever heard. From that time to this, Choon Su has been an altogether different man, and during all the five years that have elapsed since that time he has been steadily growing in grace and in the Christian life, till his beautiful example is a constant inspiration to the missionaries. The power of his preaching and living had been such that he was made a local preacher by our Bishop at our last annual meeting. All who know him acknowledge that he is one of the greatest powers in our Korean Church to-day.

The following are some interesting incidents in his life that show his character. Mr. Gerdine, with whom Choon Su is now working, as under-pastor of our recently new church in Cha-Kol, Seoul, and who knows him and his history as well, if not better, than any other among our missionaries, says of him: "He is of such a character that the Lord can use him to do things that manifest himself.

One day, about two years or so after his conversion, Choon Su was to preach, and entering into his pulpit he paused a moment and said that he had recently had an experience that had brought many recollections to his mind, and that he was going to talk about them that morning instead of preaching.

He said that he had a meeting with the inn-keeper, to whom he had given a little pocket-knife in payment for his board and lodging when on his way to Wonsan for the first time. He held up the little knife, which he had redeemed from the inn-keeper, and said this is my text for to-day. When he met the inn-keeper he said to him: Do you remember me? The man answered, no. Well, he said, I am the man who gave you a little knife two years ago as security for the debt that I had incurred by staying at your house when on my way to Wonsan at the first. He went on to say, I am that man, and yet I am not that man. That man asked you for wine; this man does not drink wine any more though he has money in his pocket to buy it with. That man lied to you about what he was going to Wonsan about—for this man does not lie any more. That man was trying to swindle you, and if there had been an opportunity to cut your throat and get your money without being found out he wouldn't have hesitated to do it. This man would not harm anybody now and no longer swindles and steals; so you see this is a very different man to the fellow who came to your inn here two years ago. Now what has wrought this great change? The religion of Jesus Christ. And so he went on and preached a sermon of great power out of what the Lord had done for him.

The following incident also illustrates this change in as marked a way as any; namely, his married life:

He had often been in the habit of coming to Mr. Gerdine to ask questions in regard to what he had been reading in the Bible; so, when one night he came into Mr. Gerdine's room without his Bible, Mr. Gerdine could not think what he wanted, especially as he hesitated and seemed in doubt as to how to begin what he wanted to say. Mr. Gerdine says that he guessed what was coming, because he looked just like a schoolboy in love who wanted to talk to somebody about it and yet did not know how to begin. Finally, he said, Do you know I did not think the Lord would give me another wife after the way I treated my first one? That was so bad that I felt that I did not deserve the benefits that come to a man by having a wife, and though I asked the Lord for one, I did not know whether he would give me one or not. Now, if he had just given me an average sort of woman to be my wife, I would have been so thankful that I would not know what to do; but to think that he has given me such a woman as my wife is! Why, she has religion and lots of it, and she has studied and knows the new learning, and she knows Chinese, and as he enumerated her various virtues his face beamed and his eyes shone and his joy rose in him so that he could hardly contain himself at all.

Another time when he was preaching, he said to the congregation: One of the chief sins of this nation is the way that they treat their wives. Now, he said, I love my wife, and before I left home we agreed together that while I was away from home every morning at seven and every evening at seven, we would read the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians and pray for each other; and do you know, said he, I just could not get along without the help it is to me to know that my wife is praying for me.

Another time, when Mr. Gerdine and Choon Su were out together and he was to come back to Songdo before Choon Su, Choon Su said to Mr. Gerdine, "Tell Lillian (his wife) that I am well and that the Lord is with me." The next day, it being Sunday, and the opportunity offering after church, Mr. Gerdine gave her her husband's message. When she heard it, she blushed with happiness and showed very plainly how she appreciated what to her was a marvelous thoughtfulness on the part of her husband; for the men in Korea are accustomed to ignoring their wives almost completely and treating them with the scantiest of respect and kindness. These are some of the things that show what the gospel will do for a people like the Koreans, and sometimes, when we missionaries get discouraged by the contrariness of things on the field, we are again invigorated and inspired and strengthened by the faith or prayer or life of some such faithful servant of God among the Koreans as Chung Choon Su.

LESSON FOR DEC. 12, 1909.

PAUL'S LAST WORDS.

II Tim. iv, 1-8 and 16-18.

Golden Text: "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain."—Phil. i, 21.

The last words of a dying friend make a deep impression on our lives. They linger in memory when other things have faded and gone, and all through the earthly pilgrimage they are a kindly admonition and a benediction. These last words of Paul, recorded in holy Scripture, were given in the true affection of a father to a son, and when they are read with spiritual direction they come from our Heavenly Father to his children, everywhere and in every age. Paul was now growing old, and the hardships and trials through which he had passed made him much more feeble than he otherwise would have been. He had been set at liberty from his first imprisonment at Rome, and had resumed his missionary labors, being accompanied by Timothy, who must receive full and complete instruction for the part of Paul's work that was to be left for him to take up and perform. After having gone to Spain and preached for about two years, the visits to the churches in Asia Minor were made hurriedly, for Paul was now nearing 70 years of age, and he felt that what he must now do, must be done in haste.

Timothy had been left in charge of the church at Ephesus, and Paul was again a prisoner in Rome. He had been arrested on the double charge: first, in conspiring with other Christians to set fire to the Roman capitol; and, second, in the propagation of an unlawful religion. His friends had all left him, with the exception of Luke. The treatment he now received was more severe than when he was a prisoner before. Then he was permitted to dwell in his own hired house, but now the whole condition of affairs had entirely changed in both public and private life. The Christians were being persecuted, and that in the most horrible manner. Almost indescribable was their suffering that preceded martyrdom.

Paul must have been informed of the intense feeling against his followers, for he had friends even among those that had authority to communicate with him; yet, amidst it all, he was unmoved as regards himself. He must have expected that soon he also would be placed among those sentenced for execution. His inmost calm is shown by the gentle and loving words he writes to Timothy, of things that engage his thoughts far more than anxiety for his personal safety. His composure is evidenced in every line, as he writes, "To Timothy, my dearly beloved son," his last message, not only to Timothy, but to us, and to all in every age, that love our Lord Jesus Christ. The letter is written to a young preacher, and in all times young preachers have made it a study as applicable to them and their work. Yet who is it that lives a godly life and does not preach? The Christian in humble life is also a preacher; he may never stand in a pulpit; yet he daily preaches to those with whom he comes in contact. So, then, every disciple of Jesus can take this kindly admonition to himself, and receive it as the last message of a loving friend that is about to leave this world for his home in heaven. How solemn are the words: "I charge thee, therefore, before God and the Lord Jesus Christ," reminding us of the judgment and the Judge, who shall come again to judge both the living and the dead; telling us to preach the Word, his Word in "whoso keepeth is the love of God perfected;" preach it as a lamp unto the feet and a light unto the path. Delay not to preach; be instant; wait not for a convenient season, for your convenience may oppose your listening or observing brethren. Let no sin pass unreproved or unrebuked. Be free from the fault that you reprove, lest your reproof have none effect. Can a man that loves God keep silent when he hears the name of God taken in vain? He should not, no matter who the offender be or the consequences that may follow. After the rebuke, then exhort, for there is love that prepares for penitence and pardon in exhortation. The time may be already come when the earnest counsel of a godly man will not be listened to.

Sound doctrine is not largely prevalent in the sermons that draw large congregations, and people, "turning away their ears from the truth," would much prefer entertainment than instruction. The time may be already here when a man becomes your enemy because you tell him the truth.

It is in the spirit of prophecy that the apostle pens his last words: "Is not the fulfillment upon us, even at the door?" Then let us prayerfully watch in all things, enduring every ill for Jesus and his work's sake.

We, all of us, can do the work of an evangelist; and it will be the best work, for it will be personal work—an evangelist working among working men, if you are a working man, or whatever you may be, working among your fellows. Your work does not wait for set service on the Lord's day, but every day and everywhere you can make the fullest "proof of thy ministry."

Now comes the best of the Apostle's last words: "For I am now ready!" Oh, that all may be able to say, we are now and always ready! Ready when it is the will of the Father. "I have fought a good fight." Oh, yes, glorious prisoner of the Lord, and our heart has been with thee even from that day on the road to Damascus, where thou didst make a full and complete surrender to "Jesus, whom thou persecutest," until this, the time of thy departure. Thou hast well finished thy course of gospel ministry; and the strength, for endurance, and the continuing zeal, was as it was; because "thou hast kept the faith." No earthly reward is thine. Earth cannot reward Christ's faithful servants; their reward is the crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give them. This crown was not for one, not for the few, but the meek and unselfish Paul hastens to assure that it is for all: "All them that love his appearing." Having learned to love him as the one that "bound up the broken heart," Paul loved Jesus as the one that promised, "I will never leave thee," that said, "I go to prepare a place for you * * * and I will come again and receive you unto myself." Then, after this, the poor, bound prisoner descends from the lofty theme, and, seeming to look around on the dungeon walls, he wails forth his loneliness: "But all men forsook me." Then the abiding Comforter moved in the words: "Notwithstanding the Lord stood with me and strengthened me."

Soon after this, Paul, the servant of Jesus Christ, was no more to live and move among men; but he ever lives where the gospel of Christ lives, and Jesus, the Master, commanding, and Paul, the servant, obeying, will still be the Christian's theme until "unto them that look for him shall Jesus appear the second time, without sin unto salvation." "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

The sickest man is not always in bed. The man who does not love his work as much as a hungry man enjoys his dinner, is sick.

The son of Frank and Mrs. Rhodes was taken from this world to heaven on Sept. 14, 1909. MELTON was only two years old. He had been with his father and mother just long enough to tangle his little fingers in their heart-strings. God tore them away, causing sorrow such as nothing can heal but the Father himself. His death caused sorrow, but not despair, for of such is the kingdom of heaven. He cannot come back to father and mother, but they can go to him. And in a few days they will join hands in the many mansions prepared for all who love and obey Him. J. F. McCLELLAN.

VANN LAYTON DANIEL, the two year-old son of Jessie and Mrs. Zilla Daniel, was freed from pain and carried on angel wings into the joys eternal on Nov. 13, 1909. Golden-headed Vann was the joy of his father, the almost idol of his mother, grandmother, aunts and many friends. His mission is completed. The heavenly Father needed him in heaven. His earthly body could not hold his heaven-prepared spirit. It has gone to him who gave it. In tears we sing "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," and, in submission, we realize he doeth all things well. J. F. McCLELLAN.

ALPHEUS V. LEWIS.

The death angel visited the home of Brother and Sister Lewis Sept. 30, 1909, and claimed for its victim the person of little Alpheus V. Lewis, he being 7 years, 1 month and 14 days old. Little Alpheus was a sweet, bright-faced, loving character, having been the idol of the home. But now he is gone from us; his place is vacant; we'll hear his little voice no more on earth; but we know he is a bright jewel in heaven, for God hath said, "suffer the children to come unto him, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Yes, we laid all that was mortal in the Frantoms Chapel Cemetery, to await the resurrection morn, when all that die in the Lord shall come forth to meet the Lord. So shall they ever be with him. P. BURKETT, P. C.

HOWARD CHAPEL ROBINSON, after a few hours' illness, was released by death Nov. 19, 1909. Chapel was nearly 15 years old. He was converted in 1908, and many said "Chapel was a good boy all his life." Chapel leaves a father, mother and several brothers and sisters to mourn his death. But we are glad to say they mourn not as those who have no hope. He was the youngest son of Brother and Sister Robinson. They naturally thought he would he their comfort in their old age. But God saw best to order otherwise. Only two of his brothers and none of his sisters knew of his illness until after he was dead. It was a great shock to them and to his many friends. Great sorrow fills the hearts of his father, mother, brothers and sisters. But they do not murmur nor complain beneath His chastening rod. They know behind this seeming frowning providence our Father hides a smiling face. And some day they will understand why the Father allows these heartaches. J. F. McCLELLAN.

Born Aug. 16, 1904. Departed this Life Oct. 20, 1909. This is the record of little MARY THOMPSON, daughter of Earl and Rosa Thompson, of Watson, Miss. This little one was permitted to shed sunshine into her home and joy into the hearts of her loved ones only five short summers. But what pleasure! What joy to those hearts!

"There is no dimming, no effacement there;
Each new pulsation keeps the record clear."

God loaned this little tot to her fond parents for awhile, but he wanted her to dwell with him in his heavenly home, that those who loved her so might follow on. How true it is, that "a little child shall lead them." May God's grace so abonnd that it will enable those who grieve to say "thy will be done" to him who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

A FRIEND.

MRS. B. F. JONES was born Sept. 1, 1874, and died Nov. 19, 1909. She was just a little more than 35 years of age, a short life, indeed. We laid her to rest in the Hernando Cemetery, to await the resurrection morn. She leaves behind to mourn her departure the husband and three children, father and mother, brother and sisters, and a host of admiring friends. Who of ns was better prepared to go than she? A sweet-spirited Christian woman, with a voice of unusual melody: a heart true and pure, she had no superior. The loved ones will miss her bodily presence, hut the fragrance of her pure life shall ever cheer them and call them on to meet her in a better world. She was an active worker in the Woman's Home Mission and Foreign Missionary Societies. She was the President of the Foreign Missionary Society, and the cause was very close to her heart. She has gone, but we shall meet her by-and-by. May God's richest blessings abide with the dear ones, to whom she was so near and dear. It was a gracious privilege to be her pastor for a few short months. W. D. WENDEL.

On June 12, 1909, it pleased God to remove from earth MRS. MARY KERSH. Sister Kersh was 88 years old. She was widely known as a true friend to her church, and to the cause of Christ generally. She was a member of the Shiloh Church, on the Shiloh charge. She was perhaps a member of that church as long, or longer, than any others who had their names on its register at any time. She was always among the first in support of its institutions. Her interest did not end with her church. But she was ever watchful for opportunities to do good anywhere. Before the Orphans' Home was moved to Jackson she was a liberal supporter to the amount of several hundred dollars. She also assisted in the education of one or more young men. She was a friend, indeed, to the preachers who have served the Shiloh Charge. Her son, John W. Kersh, is her worthy successor as a friend to the church and its preachers. It was not the privilege of the writer to know her very well, as she was an invalid for several years before being released by death. Rev. W. W. Morse was the last of her pastors that she knew to any satisfaction to herself, and it was much pleasure to the writer to have him conduct her funeral exercises. He would have written this obituary had it been possible. His continued serious illness since her death made it impossible.

J. F. McCLELLAN.

Mrs. SUSAN P. HODGDON, was born Jan. 22, 1827, near Fayette, Miss. When six weeks old she was brought to this county, and spent her long and useful life here, and was laid to rest Nov. 11, 1909, in old Liberty Cemetery, which her father, William Roberts, gave to the M. E. Church, South, of this place. Mrs. Hodgdon connected herself with this church while a girl, and lived a faithful, consistent member. She loved her Lord, and it was a great pleasure for her to do what she could for her church and his cause. As long as she was strong enough she delighted in caring for the sick and needy. Gentle, kind and loving, none knew her but to praise. Just a few days before her departure for that better land she asked a niece to take more money for her pastor. She was first married to Mr. Allen Street, Dec. 31, 1846. Two children were born to them, but died in childhood. Mr. Street was killed May 27, 1852, by a falling limb, while in his field with his negroes, leaving her with one little girl, who soon joined her father in the great beyond. She lived a widow a number of years, and on Aug. 15, 1877, she was married to Mr. Morrel Hodgdon, who preceded her to the grave, thirteen years. He died Sept. 2, 1896. Her two remaining sisters, Mrs. S. J. Dromgoole and Mrs. M. E. Hall, were with her at the close of life on this earth. They mourn not, for she was ready and waiting for the crossing, after having been allowed a stay here many years longer than man's alloted time.

By one who was taught to love her dearly before she could lisp "Aunt Sue."

BRAGGING AND PRAYING.

Luke xviii: 9-14.

1. True prayer is talking with God. Into it should enter praise, confession and petition. Men sometimes repeat words in the name of prayer that are really addressed to those in hearing. Such prayers do not find access to the Father's throne. Many men aver that they cannot pray in public. As a rule, the difficulty with such men, is that they forget that they are talking to God, and try to talk so that the ears of men will be pleased. A man who approaches the Lord in prayer should come with a full consciousness of the life he really lives and the character that he really bears. In the parable, which is the subject for the prayer meeting, two men are contrasted in their praying, and one commended and the other condemned.

2. The self satisfied man.

If the prayer of the Pharisee be analyzed closely it will be found that he was satisfied with himself. He was thankful that he was not as other men, nor even as the poor, miserable Publican standing afar off. He does not seek to be made better; he does not feel the need. Any man is in a dangerous condition who becomes thoroughly satisfied with himself. His eyes are blinded to his own faults and shortcomings. Most of the virtues claimed by the Pharisee would prove acceptable in any church member to-day, but the Lord, who searches the hearts, knows what really is in man.

3. The cry of need.

The Publican is conscious of his need. He feels that he is a sinner, and cries for mercy. When men realize sin in their lives, and also understand that the consequences of sin follow, certainly, then they desire mercy. He freely confesses to the fact of sin. He asks for mercy rather than claiming rights and privileges. He pleads where mercy can be found. When the penitent man pleads for mercy in the name of the Son of God, he shall not plead in vain. The mercy that dwells in the Father's heart has found expression in the gift of his Son, that men might freely approach the throne of grace and find help. The humble and the lowly shall not ask in vain. The man who is conscious of his lack shall find that there is abundance for the asking when the petition is sealed with Jesus' blood.

FIFTH STREET, MERIDIAN, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: The work at Fifth Street Church is closing in good condition for the Conference year. The church has received 174—forty-odd on profession of faith. Numerically it is now the largest Methodist church in Meridian. Our Sunday school has an enrollment of 670. It is the joy of the pastor's heart to see the church crowded with those studying God's Word. The success of our school is largely due our most efficient superintendent, J. B. Holland. He is the nearest ideal, in my knowledge.

Our Home Department is doing a most excellent work; from it we get members for the regular school and interested workers for the church. Let the church have a Home Department, and it will be able to use the consecrated ones as visitors, and by this do a work, especially among the women of the community, that is not usually done by the pastor because of conditions.

Our Woman's Home and Woman's Foreign Mission Societies are very active; have paid the parsonage debt and are supporting a Bible woman.

The improvements on the church have been modest. We put in partitional walls for the organized classes, choir recess, carpets, organ, etc. The church purposes to build a basement for the Sunday school and Epworth League soon. The year has been to the pastor most interesting, but few Sundays have passed that some one has not joined the church. We have been "with one accord in one place," and that has been the spirit of unity in the bond of peace. Oh, the joy, the peace that passeth understanding that comes to the church that has no schisms or divisions in it. Our financial report will be near $3500.

If the Church wills it, the pastor will return gladly for another year. The year to us has been in sentiment the one never-to-be-forgotten. God has given grace for the need, and even joy in his love, but the ascension of the immortal spirit of our only child on the 12th of February leaves a sorrow in the flesh that time cannot heal. God has given us peace in his service. We pray it ever so to be.

Now, Doctor, as this is the last communication to the Advocate while under your wise, efficient and honored administration, let me express to you my appreciation for your labors, and pray God's continued direction in your life-mission. Yours fraternally, CHAS. M. CHAPMAN.

CATARRH CANNOT BE CURED
with LOCAL APPLICATIONS, as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials free.

THE STUDENT VOLUNTEERS.

By Bishop E. R. Hendrix, President of National Council, Federation of Churches.

The Student Volunteer Movement is exactly what its name denotes. There is nothing stagnant about it. It is a movement deep and widespread, of trained minds and consecrated lives. It is a movement of volunteers, with a life enlistment, for service on the firing lines. In point of quality of those enlisted for life service as missionaries, picked men and women of our colleges who have studied the great questions of the world's evangelization, and of the duty of this generation to do its best to make known in all the world the essential truths of Christianity, there has never been anything equal to it.

It is not a great movement apart from the church, but within the church. All the great boards of missions are in great sympathy with it and 3000 accepted and sailed missionaries from the ranks of these volunteers have rewarded their faith. The assembled secretaries of these boards have just called for 1000 volunteers each year for the next twenty-five years, to be selected from those offering for service, subject to the required intellectual and physical tests. There is a sifting process which comes from such instruction as these volunteers are receiving during the years of their candidacy by the help of able addresses given by missionary specialists. This secures the leaders necessary for native Christians on the field, who will always make up the rank and file of the army of conquest.

The order-lines, sobriety, sanity and consecration which mark this great army of volunteers, under as able leaders as ever went to victory, give assurance of ultimate success, and go far toward removing some of those objections to missions which have hitherto obtained among many. We bid God-speed to the movement.

[The international conference of the Student Volunteers, will be held in Rochester, N. Y., Dec. 29, to Jan. 10.—Ed.]

How to Get Rid of Catarrh

A Simple, Safe, Reliable Way, and it Costs Nothing to Try.

Those who suffer from catarrh know its miseries. There is no need of this suffering. You can get rid of it by a simple, safe, inexpensive, home treatment discovered by Dr. Blosser, who, for over thirty-five years, has been treating catarrh successfully.

His treatment is unlike any other. It is not a spray, douche, salve, cream, or inhaler, but is a more direct and thorough treatment than any of these. It cleans out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe freely and sleep without that stopped-up feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It heals the diseased mucous membranes and arrests the foul discharge, so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting, and at the same time it does not poison the system and ruin the stomach, as internal medicines do.

If you want to test this treatment without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and he will send you by return mail enough of the medicine to satisfy you that it is all he claims for it as a remedy for catarrh, catarrhal headaches, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis, colds and all catarrhal complications. He will also send you free an illustrated booklet. Write him immediately.

TO YOUNG WOMEN

You may be laying up for yourselves much future suffering, by not treating your ailments promptly, (before they have a chance to become chronic), with that well-known female remedy, Wine of Cardui,—about which you have so often heard.

Look ahead, and plan for a healthy, happy life, by preventing female trouble from getting a foothold.

Try if that famous medicine, Cardui, which has helped so many others, will help you.

For young girls just entering into womanhood and young ladies whose life duties have not long begun, Cardui is often of vital importance, giving them strength for daily tasks.

Read what Mrs. Mary Hudson, of Eastman, Miss., says about her young sister: "While staying with me, and going to school, my young sister was in terrible misery. I got her to take a few doses of Cardui and it helped her at once.

"I have taken Cardui myself and believe I would have been under the clay, if it had not been for that wonderful medicine.

"Now I am in better health than in three years."

Try Cardui.

THE C. S. BELL COMPANY, HILLSBORO, O.

POPLARVILLE, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: That was a mighty gale that swept over our town in September. Brother Dan Kelley was with us, and I did not wonder that he was nervous when the parsonage shook. But, had he been here on the night of Nov. 23, and witnessed the storm that came, leaving debris (?) in its track, he, no doubt, would have made loud exclamations.

Well, I was dumbfounded; had not words to express what my heart felt. I did say "It is an ill wind that blows nobody good." I am better now. I am convalescent, and, while I was so greatly shocked, I believe I could stand another storm like it. Our Methodist people were in it. Some Presbyterians and some Baptists were also. Our dear, fatherly Brother Mitchell (the Baptist pastor) looked as proud as a fine Thanksgiving turkey as he walked bravely into the parsonage, followed by all the others, and deposited a great many packages on our dining table.

I once heard of a preacher who was "pounded," and when he examined his parcels nearly every one contained laundry soap. Well, that is good and useful, but on this occasion we found everything that goes to make a fine Thanksgiving dinner — cake, turkey, cranberries, and many other nice things. The turkey had a card tied to its neck with a white ribbon. It looked so "dressed up," that I exclaimed: "It is a temperance turkey, for it is wearing the white ribbon." On opening the card, we read: "From Katherine Warren Talley" (Mr. and Mrs. Talley's new baby, and their first). I said, God bless the little darling, and the parents, too, for wanting to train their little one in Christian giving.

It looked like everybody had a finger in the pie. A great many came to the parsonage, and many more names were on packages. I am happy over these expressions of love. I feel sure that the Christ spirit prompted the act. I am so thankful for the many friends I have here and in other places. I may not be able to do anything for many of them, but I can pray for them; I can love them, and I will. I am sure I express the sentiment of all when I pray:

"Lord, help me to live from day to day
In such a self-forgetful way
That, even when I kneel to pray,
My prayer shall be for others."

Respectfully,
MRS. M. H. MOORE.

LOUISIANA METHODIST ORPHANAGE.

Through the kindly interest of that friend of humanity, Mr. Thos. V. Ellzey, all the railroads of the State have consented to "deadhead" all articles that may be sent by freight to our Orphanage during the Christmas holidays. We hope the Sunday School Superintendents, Pastors, and all friends of our Orphanage will take advantage of this splendid opportunity of helping our institution, and send in all they can. This will afford all our people a rare opportunity to help in a very substantial way.

We can use everything in the shape of groceries, can goods and feedstuff, syrup, sugar, lard, meat, flour, meal, rice, grits; in fact, anything with which to feed the children will be of great help to us. Corn, hay and grain of any kind will be acceptable, for we now have a mule and several cows to feed, and we have but little feed for this purpose.

We have been so liberally supplied of late with second-hand clothes that we do not need anything in that direction at present, and to send things of that kind will be a waste.

We will need but few toys, but let your Christmas gifts be of a useful, substantial nature.

We feel sure that our people are coming more and more to realize the real Christmas spirit. That it is more appropriate to give to the needy than to receive gifts, or bestow them on those who do not need. Let all who can, make a gift in money. On Jan. 1 we will owe a note for $900 at the bank, and we must raise the money to meet this note. What a splendid Christmas gift from the Methodists to their Orphanage, if enough money is given to raise this debt.

Send all packages, boxes and bundles to Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, R. W. Vaughan, Ruston, La. Send all communications about packages and make all remittances to Rob't W. Vaughan, Ruston, La. Sincerely,

ROB'T W. VAUGHAN.

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property-holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property holders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther, and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically no outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co., for a detailed explanation.

THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE OF 1816.

Through the thoughtfulness and kindness of Dr. H. M. DuBose, there now lies before me and to be placed in the archives of our Historical Association, a copy of the Minutes of the Mississippi Conference, which was held at the home of William Foster on Pine Ridge, near Natchez, beginning Oct. 10, 1816. The document consists of one sheet of ordinary foolscap paper, and written on only one side of the sheet. However, written across the second page is "Returns of the Nachez Conference, 1817." It is addressed to "Bishop Wm. McKendree, Franklin, W. Tenn." No envelope enclosed the precious manuscript, but after the manner of that day it was enfolded within itself and fastened with sealing wax. The postmark, which is easily read, is in large stamped letters, WASH: M. T., Oct. 19. In the right hand, upper corner, is in bold hand "25," which indicates the postage charged to transmit. But the interior is yet more interesting and curious than the exterior. Believing the paper will be of interest to the readers of the ADVOCATE, I give the proceedings of the body verbatim:

"Mississippi Annual Conference for the year, 1817."

1. Who are admitted on trial? Ans. None.

2. Who remain on trial? Ans. Alexander Flemming.

3. Who are admitted into full connection? Ans. Elijah Gentry.

4. Who are the Deacons? Ans. John Lane, John Menefee, Thomas Owens, Peter James, Elijah Gentry.

5. Who have been elected and ordained Elders this year? Ans. Thomas Nixon.

7. Who have located this year? Ans. Samuel Sellers.

8. Who are the supernumeraries? Ans. None.

9. Who are the superannuated and worn out preachers? Ans. James Dixon.

10. Were all the preachers' characters examined before the Conference? Ans. Yes, one by one.

11. What number are in societies?

Washataw, Ashley Hewett.

13. Where and when shall the next Conference be held?

Ans. At Midway, Wilkinson County, Mississippi Territory, November 7th, 1817.

No name appears as secretary of this body, but Jones' History says that John Menefee occupied this place.

While the temptation is upon me to make lengthy comment as to territory covered, number of membership and ministerial supply, as compared with conditions to-day, I must not mar the paper.

If your readers are desirous to learn more of this Conference, they are referred to Chapter xix in First Volume of Jones' History of Methodism in Mississippi, and to an editorial in recent issue of the Epworth Era. Especially for the brethren of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences.

GUESTS, OR GUESSERS?

We actually "talked" last night. We were at a little party, and neither pencil nor paper appeared during the entire evening. It was a welcome relief, and we came home rested, rather than tired out.

In my first realization that our hostess had thrown us upon our own responsibility, I was curious to see what would happen. It had been a long time since I had seen thirty people trusted to converse naturally.

How often have I composed imbecile poetry with a luckless partner; sorted out Shakespeare from Proverbs; been through questionings galore as to my knowledge of geography, history, botany, and anything else I have forgotten! I have guessed at "portraits," "book-titles," "music terms," "hidden artists," "kitchen utensils," "United States Presidents," and antiqated conundrums.

The moment a smiling hostess appeared with pencils I would feel the wheels buzz around in my head as my mental machinery responded to its mechanical task. It is a depressing spectacle to see two intelligent adults wandering about a room trying to recall from sliced magazine pictures the advertisements which they would rather forget. We deprecate the insipidity of card-parties, but are the guessing games, when carried to excess, any less insipid? The card-players at least know what they are trying to do, while we wander about with forced hilarity and carefully simulate enjoyment, suppressing our real thoughts.

It may be true that we cannot converse in these days, and it is little wonder, after a few years of training in this patent party device. We feel ourselves a part of a "prearranged harmony," our only function being to find our place in that "harmony." All sense of originality is lost, and we are a group of victims to be hurried through a given program by our well-meaning entertainers. Have you not seen substantial men bored and made miserable by some rhyme-making device or hidden quotation? One man said, as we were trying to fill in the blanks of an exciting narrative with the names of all the poets of Christendom, "This sort of thing is pretty severe on men like us."

Few of us as hostesses have been guiltless of the cut-and-dried program. I confess to having wasted hours searching for something new in the way of mild mental gymnastics. Such kindergarten exercises have their place in entertaining very young people still at the giggling stage, but let us not weary our grown-up friends with these inane programs.

Last night we took ourselves calmly, and made no attempt to work up an artificial enthusiasm over things which bored us. We came to a sense both of freedom and of responsibility as guests, and tried to give our best to one another. Our hostess may have had a plan, but it at no time became apparent. When we found we were to be trusted, and not enticed into any "guessing game," we blossomed out amazingly as conversationalists. If there was method, it was the method of suggestion, rather than of program.

Here, a group admired some charming Dutch title about a fireplace; another listened to the history of a quaint carving which dated back to the early French days in Canada; a staid councillor showed his gallantry by bravely and gravely discussing winter hats with the two ladies near him; two or three globe-trotters exchanged experiences as they looked over some foreign photographs; several matrons discussed the ethics of children's parties, and of allowing their boys to play marbles "for keeps;" in one corner some Canadians and Americans talked over the tariff question; and, of course, the last book each had read came in for due discussion. If conversation be a somewhat forgotten art, it has lost none of its appeal when rediscovered. Last night our privilege was not abused, for business and neuralgia and domestics were not once, in my hearing, brought to the fore.

I recall the confession of a charming old lady: "My dear, I do not care much for these 'teas.' I like the old-fashioned parties best, where men and women meet as men and women, and the conversation is more stimulating." I felt the significance of that remark as we were coming home, and my husband said: "Isn't Madam Blank a charming woman?" "Of course she is!" I answered enthusiastically. "Is that a new discovery?" "Yes," he replied, "I've seen her often, but it was the first time I ever had an opportunity to talk with her."

Opportunity for conversation and real acquaintance would go far to restore our self-respect, cultivate originality, and establish our equilibrium as guests in these times of fads and forced amusements.—Mary Newell Yontz, in Congregationalist.

Glances at the World.

A regular "press-clipping bureau," with a full corps of employes, is maintained in the Pope's palace at Rome. The purpose is to keep the Pope as thoroughly informed as possible in regard to everything throughout the world, pertaining to the affairs of the Roman Catholic Church. The old gentleman has not time to glance over all the papers, much less to read them, so, men are employed to "clip" the newspapers. These clippings are turned over to the Pope's Secretary of State, who classifies them, as well as sifts them, so that the Pope sees only the most important matters. The clippings are from French, German, Spanish and English newspapers, requiring men acquainted with these languages to translate them into the Pope's native tongue. "The bishops of every Roman Catholic diocese are also said to forward clippings from papers published within their jurisdiction, which are regarded as likely to interest the Pope." All this mass of newspaper material is pasted up in volumes, bound separately, according to subject matter, and carefully indexed. It therefore goes without saying, that everything affecting the Roman Catholic Church in the United States, for or against, finds its way to the eyes of the Pope. This is in keeping with another piece of information, viz.: that every daily paper of any importance in the United States, has on its editorial staff, a Roman Catholic. We do not know that this is true, but we have often heard it, and never have heard it denied. If it is true, everybody must know its purpose. Rome must be protected.

Much was said soon after Governor Sanders, of Louisiana, was inducted into office concerning the change of text-books in the public schools. This thing occurred four years before, and when it occurred again, the impression was made that politics had something to do with it. Of this we express no opinion. But suspicion has not been allayed, nor has the anger of the people quieted down. Two years or thereabout, have passed, and the State School Board has made public no reason why the change was ordered—a change that has cost the people of Louisiana more than $500,000. If any man has been pleased by the change, he has not made the fact known. If any man has been able to give a reason why the change was made, he has been remarkably silent. But expressions of disapproval have filled the air from one end of the State to the other. The State School Board, though authorized by the law, is appointed by the Governor, and is responsible to him alone, and we take it for granted that the action of the Board was entirely acceptable to him, as he has not censured the Board for its action. This is another illustration of the evil of putting so much power into the hands of the Governor—the power to appoint Boards responsible only to him. Judging by the tone of the State papers, and some of our city dailies, the people are thoroughly aroused, and will not again submit to wholesale changes of school books every four years. If nobody else profits by these changes, the school-book publishers do—it is a wind-fall to them. It can scarcely be true that school-books run out of date every four years, and if not, there is no justification for changing them so often—always at the expense of the people, the majority of whom are unable to bear it.

It would be unjust doubtless to class all purely scientific men as heartless, yet now and then one comes before the public with such startling propositions—all in the interest of human betterment, as to write himself down—if not heartless, at least as anti-humanitarian. Dr. Osler, who would chloroform all men over sixty years of age, is one. Now comes another who advocates the killing of all feeble-minded persons. In caring for these unfortunate ones, he tells the public that the world's substance, that might be better used, is wasted for the wants of these unfortunate people. "We are wasting millions on the erection of expensive buildings in the most salubrious neighborhoods, on the maintenance of an enormous official staff and on providing good food to help live those who have not and never will have one gleam of intelligence. This is called humanity. Medical science has made such strides that it is possible to submit these idiots to to painless death and release them from the purgatory of non-intelligence." It is said that the proposition, made to a public council, "created a sensation." Of course, but we dare say the council never gave it a moment's serious consideration. Common sense and humanity, to say nothing of religion, still abound.

* * *

A woman of fine attainments who sees much of public ilfe, and who knows much, advises her sisters against going into politics. Her recent utterances, made in London, were called forth by the conduct of the "militant suffragettes" who have committed misdemeanors and gone to prison in order to attract attention to their cause. This eminent lady expresses profound sympathy "with all women who work, chiefly with the brave and patient heroines among the poorer classes." These, she says, "are too divinely laborious to look about for rights other than they possess." Next she sympathizes "with women in arts and professions, if they are really in earnest about their work and are not mere dabblers. She "admires, irrespective of sex, who clasp the cross to gain the crown." "But I have no sympathy whatever with woman in politics. There she is utterly out of her sphere, and I am wholly with the 'brute' man who, seeing her rushing into such a tumultuous vortex, cries: 'Stay at home, and mind the baby.' For politics are no longer dignified; they have become vulgar. And it is better to stay at home and rear one life to possible good issues than mix in a fray of contradictory propositions concerning the lives of millions, especially as those millions generally take their own way in the end. If each woman honestly devoted herself to the proper bringing up and education of her children, her training so administered would work all the reforms she needs in the social laws concerning her sex."

* * *

Dr. Cook, the first finder of the North Pole, has had a "hard time" ever since it was announced that he had reached the place. Commander Peary, who also announced that he had been there, was the first to assail Dr. Cook and deny his story. Then one or two men gave out that Dr. Cook made a false statement when he declared several years ago that he had climbed "to the summit of Mount McKinley." This confirmed his enemies in their doubts concerning his North Pole exploration. About ten days ago Dr. Cook's records of the expedition reached the Copenhagen University, where they were to be examined and passed upon by men of the highest scientific attainments. Since that time two men have come forward and made affidavit to the effect that they were "employed by Dr. Cook to fake up a lot of astronomic and mathematical data to prove that he had reached the pole." But these men, like those who swore against him in the Mount McKinley affair, are self-confessed swindlers, testifying that for money they palmed off falsehoods on the public. What sort of witnesses are they? If they lied in the one case, the presumption is, they lied in the other case. Nobody doubts that Commander Peary reached the Pole. If the Copenhagen scientists sustain Dr. Cook's claims, nobody will have ground to doubt that he got there, too—and a year in advance of Commodore Peary. Their records in both cases constitute the evidence, and the matter will be settled, so far as the records are concerned, if the Copenhagen University sustains Dr. Cook's claims. Aside from the records, Dr. Cook's witnesses are as good as Mr. Peary's, viz. his own word, and the testimony of the two Eskimos who went with him. Against these Mr. Peary can put only his own word and the testimony of his negro servant. If Dr. Cook did not reach the North Pole, history will be compelled to assign to him the place so long held by Barnum, the "humbug of the age."

THE TIME LIMIT.

For nearly ten years the Methodist Episcopal Church has been working without a time limit to its pastorate. How it works may be seen from analysis of the appointments announced by Bishop Goodsell at the recent session of the Illinois Conference at Mattoon, Illinois. This is a strong conference in which 306 appointments were made. Of the number 4 are beginning their fifth year.

13 are beginning their fourth year.
38 are beginning their third year.
78 are beginning their second year.
173 are beginning their first year.

Of the four who are entering upon their fifth year, two are district superintendents. So, out of over three hundred preachers, but two pastors will this year reach the time limit which obtained in the M. E. Church before the time rule was abolished. While no pastoral term in that large Conference is any longer than it would have been under the law as it stood ten years ago, it is very probable that many pastoral terms have been shortened by the change. A letter reporting the Conference session to the Illinois State Register, and evidently written by a member of the Conference, states that a dozen men declared, after the appointments were made, that they would not go to the places assigned them. This correspondent believes that a return to the three years' rule, which prevailed many years before the five years' rule was adopted, would be an improvement on the present law.

In New England another possibility is disturbing some who favored the removal of the time limit in 1890, and have since opposed all efforts to restore it. J. L. Bartholomew, of New Bedford, Mass., writing in the Christian Advocate, of New York (issue of September 9, 1909), fears that the ideal in view in the removal of the time limit—every appointment made on the basis of fitness, without regard to time—is in danger of being substituted by another ideal—that every man should remain in his pastorate as long as possible. He says: "What will result if our ideal becomes 'As long pastorates as possible?' Two things at least. First, the loss of our historic ideal. The question will not be, 'Where can this preacher best serve the cause of Christ?' but can he stay where he is another year? This will mean, in many cases, a crippled year for both church and pastor. Second, when a man moves, unless by an un-Methodistic invitation to a larger field, his moving will be construed as a reflection on him, and every man who is moving will be under suspicion of having been a failure in his last charge. Men will, therefore, remain until voted out by the quarterly conference. In that respect we shall be like the position of preachers under a congregational polity, and move only when invited [illegible]. Our Conference changes will then be [illegible] the free act of brilliant men going from one field to [illegible], and then [illegible] the forced act of discouraged men going to fields which must look upon them with some degree of [illegible]."

Some years ago the youngest of our [illegible] held the Missouri Conference. A pastor who was amiable and competent in his charge, in speaking of the approaching Conference session, said to his people: "We are getting along fairly well. Our Bishop is young, [illegible] he will do nothing rash."

We commend his wisdom to the consideration of the younger men in our ministry who are chafing at the time limit. Might it not be well to watch for a little longer time the operations of the unlimited pastorate in the M. E. Church before we venture into these choppy and uncertain seas.

The writer is in the fourth year of his present pastorate and the fortieth of his ministry. He has been moved by the time limit, both as pastor and presiding elder, and has in both offices succeeded men who were moved by that limit. In sixteen years' experience as a presiding elder he has studied the problem very carefully and feels pretty well grounded in the conviction that a time limit is essential to an efficient itinerant system. If our system is worn out, let us abandon it and go to the free-for-all plan of our Baptist and Congregational brethren.

A man sixty years of age might be crowded out by younger men in such a struggle for a place, but he owns a little land and knows how to work. —Rev. C. H. Bridges, in St. Louis Christian Advocate.

CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION.

Constitutional prohibition is the only logical way of now enforcing the written laws bearing on the subject of prohibiting the sale of liquor in territory adjacent to the large cities that expect to do a shipping business. The whisky men who run out of a place ahead of the storm of an enraged public sentiment, will flood the local option communities with the mail order list and the advertisements in dirty sheet newspapers until the cause of temperance will be greatly affected. Local optional law has now upon it the ear-mark of politics. The conditions of the bill for constitutional prohibition will have all the sympathy that the local option and legislative enactment had, and even more, for the history of the past has added to our store of wisdom in this matter. I have been for my lifetime opposed to a constitutional amendment. But when all the brewers' interest, the liquor league, the saloonists, and the united enemies of any kind of temperance legislation arrayed themselves against it, I knew one thing for certain—that what they wanted was not good for the country, and the best place to aid humanity was on the "other side."

As long as the elections represented the untrammeled will of the people and there were no segregation of the local option state, it was wise to leave the matter in the hands of local optionists. But when the matured sentiment of the informed rural yeomanry in the State began to vote reform above the heads of city sentiment the [illegible] interest was prophet enough to see the handwriting on the wall, and that the only hope was a separation or segregation of the county or State into districts, so that the city would be able to control the local option vote. This was successful for the whisky interest, though for some time it seemed the proper thing for the temperance, as through it local option voted out certain counties that were "wet." Then the mistake became evident. It was seen that certain counties which had a controlling city in it became an "arsenal" for the whisky forces and a kind of a "dispensary" for the county supplies. To offset this apparent defeat, the temperance people in some States voted legislative prohibition. This has given impetus to the moral standing of the cause. But since the same things that held good for the county as compared with the adjoining county, the one being flooded with liquor from the other, so it is with the prohibition State. It is flooded with the "moral contraband" stuff that its neighbor-State protects, and have the right to give it under the "Interstate commerce law" assumption. The Federal Government seems to be in sympathy with the liquor business only as to the revenue from it, and if this is true, it is only a matter of time when Congress can no more tolerate such a position than could it bear "The States' Rights of Secession" act. No force or power on earth has the right to declare legal a thing or business that the SOVEREIGN STATE has declared illegal, provided it does not violate the Constitution of the United States.

Let the States enact constitutional amendments, as this will crystallize the temperance force and keep the matter out of politics and the many evils incident thereto. The defeat of the Alabama election is in no sense a test, except in the way the liquor forces will use all ignorance, prejudice, politics and mistakes, combined with party differences, administration and anti-administration interests to "pull off" what they want.

A glance at the above programme will convince any one interested in such matters that the approaching Mid-Winter Institute will be the very best ever held at the Methodist Training School. Many of the speakers are men of more than national reputation; some are authors of books that have wielded a wide influence, some are recognized leaders in forward movements of the day, and all are able to bring expert knowledge to the discussion of the themes assigned them.

The Institute this winter will bring before the Church information of first importance on vital subjects, and will propound best methods for the solution of difficult problems. The inspiration growing out of such addresses, if all plans are successful, will reach every church in the connection and quicken Christian workers to more intelligent activity in every part of the Church.

With full assurance that the programme is worth all the labor and time spent in preparing it, and with perfect confidence that every man who attends will take home with him a large benefit, we urge pastors and Christian workers to attend the Institute. The dates are Dec. 30th to Jan. 6th, 1910. The expenses—fees and board in the school for the eight days—are $13, and the place is the Methodist Training School, 422 Sixth Ave., North Nashville, Tenn.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The ninety-sixth session of the Mississippi Conference convened in the Methodist Church at Brookhaven, Wednesday, Dec. 8, 1909. The opening exercises were conducted by Bishop Hoss, who presided during the session, giving satisfaction to all.

The morning devotional exercises conducted by the Bishop were uplifting and inspiring. A. F. Watkins was elected secretary, with C. F. Emery and R. Selby assistants, and J. W. Campbell, E. W. Lipscomb and G. S. Harmon, statistical secretaries.

The Conference greatly enjoyed the visits of several of the connectional men, and their addresses were very helpful. Rev. A. E. Clement, of the Galloway Memorial Hospital, represented that institution, and the Conference passed a resolution asking the preachers to take a collection for this hospital in their pastorates.

Rev. A. P. Parker, of the China Mission, was with us several days; and gave an inspiring address on Friday night, at the anniversary of the Conference Board of Missions. Rev. J. R. Stewart represented the Superannuate Endowment Fund; Brother I. G. Campbell, the Publishing House interests, and Dr. J. D. Hammond, D.D., the Educational work. Brother Bachman was on hand with the usual supply of good books. The session of the Conference was a delightful one. The good people of Brookhaven entertained royally; and the weather was for the most part, crisp and clear.

One of the most delightful events in the history of the Conference was the delightful dinner given to the members of the Conference, clerical and lay, by Dr. I. W. Cooper and Mr. B. E. Brister at the college. The menu was elaborate and the service beautiful. The after-dinner speeches and toasts were splendid. The young ladies of the college served, and anticipated every guest's wishes and needs.

W. G. Roberts and C. N. Guice were re-admitted. J. L. Smith, Geo. G. Yeager, J. F. Campbell, W. W. Nelson, W. H. Young, B. F. Crook and H. F. Tolle were admitted on trial. A. B. Barrie and Sampley were admitted from the Methodist Protestant Church, in elder's orders.

The following were received into full connection: M. R. Jones, C. H. Herring, C. T. Noble, J. A. McBryde, R. T. Pickett J. W. Chisholm, J. L. Neill and W. E. Dickens.

The delegates to the General Conference were elected Saturday—Clerical: H. M. DuBose, I. W. Cooper, H. W. Featherstun, and A. F. Watkins. Lay: R. W. Millsaps, L. P. Brown, A. G. Norrell, and W. W. Ellis. Alternates: J. C. Cavett, and Jno. A. McLeod.

Sunday dawned cold, rainy and otherwise disagreeable, but the services previously announced were held, beginning in the Methodist Church at 9 a. m., with the annual lovefeast conducted by the venerable John A. B. Jones. At 11 o'clock the house was packed to its utmost capacity to hear Bishop Hoss. He gave his congregation a sermon seldom equaled by any man of to-day. If Bishop Hoss is greater in one department than another, it is in the pulpit when he discusses the great themes of the gospel. The sermon was followed by the ordination of deacons and elders. The following were ordained deacons: C. T. Noble, J. A. McBryde, R. T. Pickett, J. W. Chisholm, J. L. Neill, W. E. Dickens, B. F. Crook, and S. A. Ferguson. The two last-named are in the local ranks. Elders ordained: J. C. Chambers, E. J. Coker, J. H. Grice, W. W. Graves and E. W. Lipscomb.

In the afternoon memorial services were held in honor of members who had died during the year: H. D. Howell, J. W. Chambers, D. P. Bradford and C. A. Powell. Rev. J. M. Weems presided. In the evening a service in memory of Bishop Galloway was held. Dr. H. M. DuBose delivered the address. It was a matter of great regret that Mrs. Galloway, who had been specially invited to be present, could not attend. Services at other Protestant Churches were held—members of the Conference filling the various pulpits.

We make this last note just before the close of the session: The Conference has been a memorable one, and the preachers will all go to their charges determined, by the help of God, to do their best.

The following clerical delegates to the General Conference were elected: F. N. Parker, N. E.

Joyner and Paul M. Brown. Alternates, J. M. Henry and R. H. Wynn.

The following lay delegates were elected: H. H. White, W. L. Weber and R. R. Reid. Alternates, T. V. Ellzey, R. T. McClendon.

Dr. J. W. Reed, a missionary to Korea from this Conference, was in attendance upon the session. He is at home on a furlough, and is spending the time with his father and mother at Gibsland, La.

In representing the Epworth League, Dr. F. S. Parker, the assistant editor of the Epworth Era, stated that its present problem was to restore it to its rightful task as a young people's organization. The Senior Leagues have become very largely bodies of matured people. To attain the end desired, the age limit in the Junior League has been raised to 16 years.

Rev. W. W. Graham, of the Texas Conference, was a very acceptable visitor to the Conference. His heart was moved, and he was constrained to add his tribute to the many others when the name of Bishop Ward was remembered in the memorial service.

The next session of the Annual Conference will be held at Homer.

The entertainment in Alexandria was delightful, and Rev. H. R. Singleton and his good wife, and his official board, did everything possible for the comfort of the delegates. One especially delightful feature was the noon-hour lunches served by the ladies in the Sunday-school room, in which all the delegates met in pleasant social intercourse and where many a tale was rehearsed of the year's trials and triumphs, and many humorous stories were exchanged, and some of them put out at interest, to return eventually with much gain.

A hearty indorsement was given to the interdenominational Laymen's Movement and its plans. A great laymen's conference of our church has been planned for at Dallas, Tex., Feb. 19-22. To this the following lay delegates and alternates were elected: Alexandria District—T. W. Holloman, J. A. Williams, W. D. Wadley, H. G. Goodwin, J. B. Butler. Baton Rouge District—J. R. Abels, R. R. Reid, Reames, Hatch Benton, W. W. Babington, B. E. Eskridge. Lafayette District—A. P. Holt, C. N. Crandall, A. M. Mayo, J. J. Foster, H. N. Pharr, Crow Girard. New Orleans District—J. A. MERIDIAN DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

[illegible]

The Conference opened Friday evening, Nov. 5, with Mrs. Hand, our district secretary, in the chair. After the usual addresses of welcome and response, we had a most interesting Bible reading conducted by Mrs. Barton.

Brother Weems, the pastor of the church, did all he could to make the meeting a success. Saturday morning was spent in hearing reports from the auxiliaries. Every society in the district was represented, and some of the reports were very fine. Our district was asked to raise $50 for the deficit on Miss Martin's expenses; the amount was raised to a dollar, for which we all felt so thankful.

We had three children present, delegates from the the Grand people's and Juvenile societies of Central Church, Meridian.

"Our Study Circle" was discussed at some length, and we feel sure that other Auxiliaries will take up the course right away. How to make our monthly meetings more interesting was discussed, and it was decided that Prayer was the key-note to the success of any organization and our personal contact and interest in the women was of utmost importance.

Saturday afternoon we were all interested in a discussion on our Literature as our tools, and how to use them; unless we take the Missionary Advocate and our church paper and inform ourselves, we cannot work intelligently. Dr. Weems said our literature had been a great help to the preachers in their work.

The discussion on Prayer was very helpful, and where our money comes from and where it goes was of interest to us all.

Saturday evening a chart of the heathen world was shown, and interesting papers on Mexico, Brazil, China, Korea and Cuba were read. The large audience showed intense interest from the very beginning.

Sunday morning Dr. Weems gave us a very fine sermon. His text was feeding the five thousand on five loaves and two fishes. He was so filled with the Holy Spirit he could not help impart it to others and it was good to be there.

Sunday afternoon Mrs. La Prade's talk to the children was enjoyed just as much by the grown people, and at the close she organized a society of twenty members.

We felt very happy over the results of the meeting. Dr. Weems said it was the best district meeting he had ever attended. Every number on the programme was carried out. The meeting closed Sunday night with a very able address by our district secretary, Mrs. Hand.

A LETTER FROM KOREA.

The following letter is from Hallie Buie, our youngest representative, who sailed for Korea early in September. The joyous tone of the letter will be grateful to all lovers of the work, and the thought of her will add a fervor to our prayers and be an incentive to more earnest determination on our part to "hold our end of the rope."

BESSIE W. LIPSCOMB.

Winsau, Korea, Oct. 16, 1909.

We had a delightful voyage. The sea was calm most of the time, but even when it was rough [illegible] was [illegible] The first [illegible] after that [illegible] I almost [illegible] was in fact [illegible] So different [illegible] was all grand [illegible] Castle [illegible] the [illegible] thousand [illegible] we [illegible] we found several [illegible] other passengers.

We arrived at Yokohama [illegible] were to stop two days there [illegible] for one day. Though we [illegible] exterior of the imperial palace [illegible] got some idea of their beauty. [illegible] we arrived at Kobe [illegible] in port until [illegible] day more with the [illegible] we were [illegible] Kobe and other things [illegible]

Miss Edwards [illegible] our boat, which was to [illegible] so Mrs. [illegible] of the [illegible] with [illegible] Kyoto, and there we spent a busy day seeing [illegible] wonderful temples of Japan. Miss [illegible] the Misses Bonnell and [illegible] were ever so kind to us and tried to make us have a good time. We enjoyed seeing Japan, but were glad to start to Korea.

Mr. Collyer was returning to Korea from Japan, so he was with us to Fusan. When we got on the boat at Fusan we thought we were the only Americans on board, but soon we found there was a foreign gentleman [illegible] Mr. Waters coming [illegible] tion at Wonsan.

Our welcome to Wonsan [illegible] indeed. All of the members of the [illegible] Mission were at the wharf [illegible] them were the native pastor [illegible] church members and [illegible] sweetest sight of all was [illegible] school. An avenue of [illegible] white gate at the end [illegible] the street about fifty [illegible] tered this avenue we met the [illegible] meet us in a body. The Chinese [illegible] er was leading the line and the [illegible] was [illegible] the rear. They all seemed very [illegible] new ladies were coming to [illegible] in Korea. Our hearts were filled with gratitude to our Heavenly Father for the privilege [illegible] of working in such a place [illegible] to be able to speak the language [illegible] we can begin [illegible] work.

Miss Myers gave quite a [illegible] the new ladies yesterday. It was nice to meet all of the foreigners in Wonsan. You should have seen the little Korean girls serving refreshments. The did it beautifully and were so attractive in their white shirt waists and blue skirts and their hair in long black braids down their backs. [illegible] Mrs. Hitch had us to 6 o'clock dinner one evening [illegible] see we are not altogether out of [illegible] if we are in Korea.

I am to begin teaching an English class next [illegible] and shall have a few music pupils. I am [illegible] in love with the home life and school. [illegible] to know that the ladies of the Mississippi Conference are interested in me. I need [illegible] their prayers especially now." HALLIE BUIE.

CHRISTMAS PRESENT SUGGESTION.

The reason for making a Christmas present of The Youth's Companion is that it is the best gift [illegible]—Since it not only provides a year's profitable enjoyment for the one who receives it, but for every one in the recipient's family, from the youngest to the oldest. Whether there are five or fifteen in the household, each [illegible] share in The Companion. [illegible] how [illegible] other present can that be said? Another [illegible] reason is that the one who makes the present receives from the publishers a special copy [illegible] The Youth's Companion's "Venetion" Calendar for 1910. That is, two Calendars go with [illegible] gift subscription—one to the giver, one [illegible] the subscriber.

[illegible] new volume of The Companion for 1910 [illegible] like a treasure-chest packed from cover [illegible] with all manner of things useful and pleasurable. If you cannot find anyone who is [illegible] a subscriber to The Companion, the only [illegible] in the circumstances is to [illegible] yourself. [illegible] do not wait to be [illegible] Christmas time.

SELF-MASTERY.

The changing of the year is like the turning of the tide from ebb toward flood. The life can go from ebb to a lower ebb, or it may go up toward [illegible] and a higher flood. The highest [illegible] in a human life is self-mastery.

Self-mastery is the tender [illegible] of the heart toward God and all men; the deep, bright glow [illegible] heart fires regardless of the dampening [illegible] rains of outer circumstances; the quiet [illegible] stillness of spirit even when winds blow [illegible] beat fiercely; the patient enduring [illegible] without [illegible] of misunderstandings [illegible] all that hurts because of them; the gracious [illegible] strength to the needs of others; the [illegible] wholesomely good; the forgetting of one's self in the absorbing thought of [illegible] and of men; the full unflagging meeting of [illegible] from time to time; and still more [illegible] the word "self-mastery" itself.

Self-mastery means holding one's self and one's powers steady to their true uses; not lack [illegible] deficiency; nor overuse, prodigality; nor [illegible] the inappropriate, the improper; nor [illegible] the injurious; but nature's full, true use, [illegible] repression, but control; full expression through control.

Self-mastery is possible through Jesus. He perfectly embodied it when down here. He will [illegible] over again in each one whose door swings [illegible] for him. Every door he enters has upon it two stains, a black and a red—the black of sin, the red of his lifeblood. But the black cannot be seen when he comes in. It was covered by the red from the palm of his hand as he entered.—Sunday School Times.

HIGHER HEROISM.

"It is such a quiet, uneventful life I live, and nothing ever seems to come of it."

There was no one to hear the tearfully-spoken words, and the brave soul, who had been so long battling with the common duties of life, looked out upon the autumn sunshine and prayed for courage to continue. "If only I could do something heroic," she said, "something worthy to make me remembered, but my tasks are such common, ordinary ones that they are taken as a matter of course, and no one even notes them."

"No one! O murmuring soul, hush; is not the place you fill God's appointed place for you; and does he not note every struggle and battle of yours? Is not his "well done" worth more than the applause of the world? O, indeed, tired heart, the highest and hardest heroism is to live well in the quiet routine of life, to fill a little space bravely and worthily because it is the place allotted, and God willed it so.

The little duties that come every day, the little occasions, cheerfully met and faithfully performed, the low position accepted unmurmuringly, a smile for the joys of others, when our own hope seems bare, and our heart is aching, requires a heroism such as God's children alone can know.—Sara V. Du Bois, in The Watchman.

THE PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS.

The stately phrases of the Declaration of Independence declare to every man the right to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." But no charter of republic or decree of king can guarantee to any man the finding of happiness. That is quite another matter. The chase is open; but the thing itself may evade our pursuit. At the end of all our endeavors, the goal may be as far distant as ever.

Happiness is a great good of life, which is arrived at most often not when we consciously pursue it, but when we become in a measure indifferent to it. It is produced as a by-product, rather than as the main object of endeavor. You remember that day when you were going to have a good time at any cost. You laid all your plans for happiness. The conditions seemed favorable, but somehow the result was disappointing. At the end of the day it was voted half a failure. The ingredients were all in the pudding, but you did not relish it.

There was that other day for which you cherished no pleasant anticipations. You dreaded its duties and looked forward only to its close. But, wonder of wonders, when nightfall came, you discovered you were really happy. What vacation, a picnic, friends and spending money had not been able to accomplish had been found in the pathway of simple and prosaic duty.

It is the testimony of most men and women that they are most likely to be happy when they think least about happiness. Compare Solomon, who had ransacked the world for a new sensation, yet complained that life was vanity and vexation of spirit, with Paul, a poverty-stricken, persecuted man, singing, nevertheless, a psalm of praise at his journey's end.—Forward.

A NEW GAME.

"There's nothing new to play at all," said Grace.

"No; and I am tired of digging in the sand," said Helen.

Mamma smiled into the childrens' faces. "Then it is time for my board party," she said.

"A board party!" echoed the twins.

"Yes; we shall have it this afternoon, but you must ask no questions, only do what I ask. That will be part of the pleasure to come. Each one get a board just her length and a nice piece of rope. That will be all until after luncheon," and mamma began reading her book again.

Grace and Helen went slowly back of the hotel to find their boards.

"What could mamma mean?" asked Grace, aged eight. Of course Helen was eight, too. They had been at the seashore two long months, and were now tiring of most of their sports.

"Let's get our boards ready, anyway," said Helen.

At 2 o'clock the carriage came to the door, and mamma said to the twins: "Come, it is time to go." The two boards and the two small coils of rope were put under the seat, and mamma said to the driver: "The same house as yesterday," and the carriage rolled away.

"It can't be floating on the breakers, because we are going away from the ocean," whispered Grace to Helen.

"That's so," said Helen. Mamma told bright little stories on the way. One mile was passed. Two miles. Then the horse stopped before a little cottage which was nearly hidden among tall trees. A woman met them at the door.

"Come right in. Rose was looking for you."

But inside the room the twins stopped suddenly and looked up at their mother, for there on the floor was a board about the size of theirs—but, laying on it, and strapped to it, was a beautiful child of eight years, with long golden hair and big blue eyes. She was looking up wistfully at the two strong children.

"I have brought you some playmates, Rose," said Mrs. Carter, gaily. "Now we shall have a board party. Come, Grace and Helen, get on your boards," and playfully she bound them in the same manner as Rose, the arms being left free. "First shall be a game of ball," said Mrs. Carter. The boards were placed some distance apart, and the ball started between.

Soon the children were all laughing merrily, reaching out with their arms to get the ball. Later, a box was placed on the floor near the three boards. In it were Grace and Helen's best dolls and a beautiful new one for Rose. The time passed quickly and happily, till a basket was brought out filled with good things to eat. A white cloth was spread between the boards, which were closer together now, and on it were put all the dainty things from the basket. How hungry they all were. And how happy was patient little Rose.

"It's the best party I ever had," she said hugging her new doll close. Looking up into her mother's eyes she was surprised to find them full of tears.

At last the twins were loosened from their boards, and they and their mamma said good-by to the inmates of the little home, and the party was over.

Not quite, in results, at least. On the way home, with an arm around each of her precious girls, mamma told them of the accident two years before which had injured Rose's back. How she had had to lie on that board for over a year, because her parents were too poor to buy her the jacket which would make her back straight again. Also, she told a little of the father, who was not—well, not good and kind like theirs.

Grace and Helen were very quiet for a while. Then they leaned over and whispered together. At last Helen said:

"Mamma, we do not need that new cart and pony papa promised to get us when we get home. Do you think he will use the money to buy a jacket for Rose, if we ask him?"

"Yes, darling," said mamma quietly; "I believe he would, if you both really wish him to do it."

And the twins, looking up happily, saw glistening tears in the eyes they loved so well.—Herald and Presbyter.

Gethsemane and Calvary bind the hearts of men to Christ more than the sunny days of popularity about the Sea of Galilee. They who are to conquer the hearts of men must suffer much. As Rothe puts it, men are God's commoners, but sufferers his nobles.—Alfred Tennyson.

SHALL WE STILL PROTEST AGAINST ROMANISM?

Every one the least bit acquainted with church history knows that about four hundred years ago there was put forth strenuous protests against the errors and superstitions of Romanism on the part of a few evangelical-minded Christians, chief of whom was Martin Luther. It is known, too, that the outcome of their protests is the widespread Christianity of to-day, divided though it is into many different denominations. We know that some of our Baptist brethren deny that they are Protestants, and that they are in anywise the children of Protestantism, claiming as they do to have existed prior to the Roman Catholic Church. Granting their contention, which though we must say is not clearly established, it is nevertheless true that had not the shackels of Rome been broken and thrown off, the Baptists of to-day would not be the world-power they are. Whether they will or no, the evangelical world will not cease to class them in the ranks of Protestantism, and among the foremost. They are pronounced foes of Romanism.

The fight against Rome was long and tedious, and in many instances the occasion of bloodshed. How many lives were sacrificed before the dominion of the Pope was overthrown, at least sufficiently to give Protestants religious liberty, eternity alone will reveal. But the fight was won, and to-day we live in a purer religious atmosphere. True, Rome is to-day what she has ever been. Her boast is that she never changes. If so, her feelings towards the Protestant heretics are now just what they were when the Pope held universal sway, temporal and spiritual. She is not violent in her opposition. Indeed, in all civilized lands, where Protestantism has any great strength, Rome is quiet, and does her work in her own zealous, energetic and persistent way.

Because all this is true of Rome many are of the opinion that Rome's attitude towards Protestantism has changed, and that there is now no longer any necessity for evangelical Christians to maintain their protests against the Roman Catholic Church. One of our own strong men has taken the position and argued that several of our Articles of Religion, written as protests against Rome, now that Rome is no longer aggressive, or a menace to Protestantism, are out of date and should be retired to honorable superannuation.

It is true the Roman Catholics in the United States show no disposition to persecute; at the same time all Protestants are held by them to be heretics, and under the anathema of the Church. They make no compromise, nor have any affiliation whatever with heretics. They are as intolerant as they were four hundred years ago, because [illegible] disposition to persecute [illegible] that they are not [illegible] a menace to Protestant institutions. In our judgment they are more of a menace than they were a hundred years ago. Several things convince us of this. 1. They are the deadly enemies of our public school system, and are constantly demanding a share of public school money to build up their own church schools. 2. They have the ear of the public and a hold on the Federal administration that other church has, and that no other church tries to secure. 3. This is adding to its membership in this country a half-million or more every year of the lowest and most ignorant classes of Europe, classes which are bound, unless brought under the benign influences of our Christian civilization, to be a hindrance rather than a help in a few years. 4. They cherish the same doctrines and superstitions that are cherished in Italy, Spain, Catholic Ireland, and Catholic France. They believe in the infallibility of the Pope, and his universal sovereignty, spiritual and temporal. One must be blind who cannot see in this doctrine a menace to democratic government. They pray to the Virgin Mary, and at times invoke the aid of saints. They are constantly beatifying some mortal—adding to the long list of Pope-made saints. Only a few days since in the good city of New Orleans, ceremonies incident to the elevation to sainthood were conducted—among other things there was an exposure of "relics" of the good man "for veneration." And "holy water," supposed to possess virtue because blessed by the priest, is kept in the households of the faithful, the supply being renewed every Easter season.

These things call for protest—not for violence or personal denunciation of Roman Catholic adherents, but for protests in the spirit of the Master and for the sake of truth. Let these things go on unrebuked by an evangelical clergy, in due time the masses would be ready to say, "The Roman Catholics are as good as any." Already the sons and daughters of millionaires—especially the daughters—are seeing divinity in the church and perfect loveliness in the services of Rome. And shall we keep silent and let Rome do her work? In those errors of a purely religious and superstitious character we must, as Christians, be as gentle as possible, but firm and unyielding. In those that touch the life of the republic, as in the matter of public schools, and touching the government, we must be not only uncompromising, but if necessary, aggressive. Rome must be thwarted in her efforts to control this country.

Protests against Rome are still live and active things. Let us keep them so.

DISREGARD OF CHURCH VOWS.

No vows are more sacred or binding than the vows men take when they unite with the Church. None perhaps are so slightly regarded on the part of a large proportion of those who assume them. Not a few, we have personally known, utterly disregard them from the very day when before God and the congregation they promised to keep them. If men disregarded their oaths as officers of the law, or merely as citizens, they would stand guilty of perjury and contempt. What else than this can it be when professed Christians wilfully violate their solemn obligations?

The specific vows assumed are not numerous, but they embrace everything required of men as the disciples of Christ. Indeed the larger number of the vows are those which the individual made when he gave himself to God and received pardon. He only ratifies these vows before the Church when he seeks its fellowship, promising publicly to obediently keep God's holy will and commandments, and walk in the same all the days of his life. The only additional promise is to be subject to the discipline of the Church, attend upon its ordinances, and support its institutions. All these requirements are reasonable. And these things, Mr. Wesley said, "The Spirit writes on truly awakened hearts." Why are these vows so lightly esteemed by many members of the Church? There are several reasons worthy of note. 1. There are no doubt many "stony-ground hearers"—persons who are easily impressed, and who readily accept almost any kind of proposition in times of religious interest, but, having no root in themselves, soon give way to adverse influences and go back to the world, or, as Jesus says, "in time of temptation fall away." 2. It is charitable to say that many persons do not fully comprehend the binding nature of a vow. They take it, expecting to keep it if convenient and agreeable at the time when action is called for. Or, it may be they find it more than they supposed was intended. They do not know that courage is required in the Christian life, or that nothing except providential hindrances must be allowed to stand in the way of performing their duties. 3. As to young Christians, it is probable they are largely influenced by the conduct of the older ones. It is natural that they should. Fidelity in all things can hardly be expected of them when so many members of long standing—among them leading officials—set the example of indifference and disobedience. We have known old members to absent themselves from the public worship for years. We have known stewards to neglect all public duties for months at a time. Could the young people be expected to do better? No wonder hundreds of children, members of the Church, attend Sunday School, but show perfect contempt for the public worship, and the sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

4. We are persuaded that receiving members into the Church in violation of the Discipline, hurriedly and without due solemnity, has much to do with the after indifference of the candidates. The Discipline requires the preacher-in-charge to "inquire into the spiritual condition" of those who offer themselves for membership; to see that they "give satisfactory assurance of their desire to flee from the wrath to come, and to be saved from their sins, also of the genuineness of their faith, and willingness to keep the rules of the Church; to instruct them in those rules, and in the baptismal and Church vows." Only after the preacher has examined candidates on all these points, and is satisfied (he cannot be satisfied without an examination), shall he "bring them before the congregation, and receive them according to the prescribed form." This is not always done. We have known preachers to call for candidates at the close of a long service in warm weather, and then and there receive them into full fellowship and sometimes baptize them. Under such circumstances the ceremony is greatly hurried, and accompanied with very little solemnity. There was no time for examination or instruction, and the candidates were not impressed with the vast significance of the vows which were administered. Vows lightly administered are lightly taken. It goes without saying that much good nursing is necessary to make faithful and fruitful Christians of such members.

Of that large class of intelligent and successful business men and leading women, not a few, who forswear themselves by failing to perform unto the Lord their vows, we know not what to say, save, they know their duty and do it not. They assume a fearful responsibility, and will have a fearful account to give at the judgment seat of Christ. They have a name to live, but are dead, and shall be destroyed.

PERSONALS.

Besides Rev. J. R. Roberson, among the effective preachers of the North Mississippi Conference, whom we noted as absent from the session, Rev. Eugene Johnson, one of the faithful, was also absent. He was missed by the brethren.

Being pressed for time, we requested Rev. C. N. Guice to give us a "write-up" of the Mississippi Conference session, just closed at Brookhaven. How well the work was done our readers can readily see. We thank Brother Guice for his kindness.

A good brother, who pays up and renews for another year, tells us that the ADVOCATE is good and that he "cannot do without it," but recommends printing a "condensed market report of live stock, produce, etc." We turn the suggestion over to our successor, who, we hope, will give it favorable consideration. We thank our brother for his kind words.

Obituaries, memoirs, etc., never go into the waste basket except when they come to us without a name attached. If a writer does not want the name to appear, a personal note to that effect will suffice, and the article will be printed. We have on hand an obituary of a faithful soul, but neither name nor note accompanies it. We do not know who is responsible for it.

The Quarterly Conference of Franklinton, and the Board of Stewards of Amite, both of the Louisiana Conference, have sent us resolutions expressive of love and confidence in their pastors, Rev. W. R. Harvell and Rev. L. C. Wilson, respectively. These brethren have closed, each a term of four years' service and are deserving of all praise. In both instances the complimentary resolutions include the devoted wives, who, like the husbands, rendered good and useful service. We are glad they were not overlooked.

We thank our brother, Rev. A. H. Williams, of Mayhew, Miss., for his contribution in regard to Blue Mountain. He corrects some mistakes into which the editor had fallen in giving all credit to Rev. J. H. Bass for the work done in that college town. Brother Bass did noble work, but others were there before him. Brother Williams himself had a hand in laying the foundation at Blue Mountain, and deserves credit for his work. May all the Christians at Blue Mountain, Baptists and Methodists, grow stronger and stronger, and better.

One of the faithful at Olive Branch, Miss., writing to us concerning the removal of the late pastor, Rev. K. M. Foust, gives expression to a noble feeling. The writer says: "Brother Foust and his family have won a place in our hearts that will always be theirs; however, we shall prepare another place in our hearts for our next pastor. We already love him for his work's sake." Loyalty to the church and love for the preacher are two essential things among Episcopal Methodists. Brother Foust did a fine work at Olive Branch, and will long be remembered.

Bishop Hoss mightily pleased the brethren of the two Mississippi Conferences. They will not soon forget his thrilling sermons, his illuminating exposition of Bible lessons, or his affable manner of conducting the business. He is a ceaseless, if not tireless worker. The amount of labor he performs, in correspondence and writing for the press, besides that coming upon him daily, "the care of the churches," would break down any ordinary man. How he bears the strain, we do not understand. May the good Lord continue to give him the necessary grace and strength.

It was rumored some weeks before Conference that Rev. J. E. Wray who went from New Orleans to Houston, Texas, would return to the South Georgia Conference, and so it has turned out. His appointment is Mulberry Street Church, Macon, one of the old and famous churches served in the past by our ablest preachers.

Brother Wray was in Houston only one year, but that was long enough to establish his reputation as a great and growing preacher. We do not know his superior among the men of his age. We hope he may have a happy and successful pastorate at "Old Mulberry."

In answer to a complaint in the presence of Bishop Hendrix of preachers leaving our church for other communions, the Bishop replied: "I have a vest-pocket full of applications of preachers from other churches to join us," or words to that effect. We are in no danger of being crippled—not seriously, at least. At the recent session of the North Mississippi Conference six or seven good men came to us from other denominations, and three or four were received by the Mississippi Conference at Brookhaven. Methodism is not so barren that she cannot spare a member now and then. Of course, we regret their going—we mean the going of some of them.

Kentwood, La., is to have an up-to-date hotel in a few days. The Hotel Patterson will be opened on Jan. 1, 1910. Mr. G. H. Patterson went from New Orleans to Kentwood several years ago, with his family, and opened a small hotel which proved popular and did a good business. The demand on the part of the traveling public grew so rapidly that Mr. Patterson secured the backing of Dr. J. H. Ellis, and plans were set on foot to remodel the old building, and, when finished, the new hostelry will contain twenty-three guest-rooms. Miss Fannie B. Patterson, sister of the manager of Hotel Patterson, will be remembered by Methodists in New Orleans, where she took a prominent part in church work, she and her mother having their membership many years at Carrollton Avenue Church.

THE HANDBOOK.

The Southern Methodist Handbook for 1910, by Dr. T. N. Ivey, Raleigh, N. C., will be issued early in January. It will show the development of our church for the past ten years. It will also contain a "General Conference Department," which will be of special value, and other new features will appear. Those who have seen the Handbook in the past will know how to estimate the worth of the coming volume. The cost is 25 cents.

AN ESSAY WORTH READING.

We have read with great interest and profit a pamphlet on "The Altruistic Quality of the Lawyer," by Geo. J. Leftwich, of Aberdeen, Miss. It was read by the author before the Mississippi State Bar Association held at West Point last May. It has made us think better of lawyers as a class, and we feel free to say that if any of our readers who have no acquaintance with lawyers except such as are shysters, and those who encourage litigation, and have formed an opinion of all lawyers based on their knowledge of the few they have seen, had the privilege of reading this essay, they would be enlightened. One striking feature of this essay is not often seen or heard in essays before an association of men whose business is supposed to be purely secular: It is the recognition of our Lord Jesus Christ as "the Advocate of all men with the Father," and the true Model for all lawyers to imitate.

We thank the author for a copy of this instructive essay.

A GREAT SORROW.

Just as we closed our work on the ADVOCATE for this week, we received word from Rev. J. H. Holder, of Booneville, Miss., that the family of our dear friend and brother, Rev. B. P. Jaco, had been overwhelmed with sorrow. The second son, John, while rowing in a boat on Coldwater River, with another youth, was drowned, the boat capsizing and throwing him into the water. The son "was bright, industrious and capable, a boy of great promise." Brother Holder wrote before the body was recovered. He will write again later. Will all the brethren unite in prayer, that Brother Jaco and family may be sustained in their great sorrow?

NOTICE.

The attention of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference is hereby called to an omission in the minutes of the Conference held in Greenwood, Miss., in June. The name of Mrs. J. E. Thomas, Superintendent of the Young People's Department, was omitted from the list of Conference officers. She was elected to this office, and has been doing most acceptable service in that capacity. The name of Mrs. J. M. Wyatt, Vice President, was also omitted.

MRS. T. M. CLARK,
Corresponding Secretary.

WANTED—A woman of culture and refinement and a member of the M. E. Church, desires a position as companion for an elderly lady or for an afflicted boy or girl. Will exchange references. Address, L. W., in care of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

AMERICAN METHODIST HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

The organization of the Methodists in America as a Church at the Christmas Conference of 1784 has been blessed of God with such far-reaching influence in the redemption of millions of individuals, in the ethical development of our national life and in strengthening aggressive Christianity throughout the world, that the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth anniversary of this event should not be permitted to pass unobserved.

The American Methodist Historical Society, representing various branches of Methodism, having discussed the appropriate manner of commemorating this occasion, has arranged for a public meeting to be held on Thursday evening, Dec. 30, inst., in the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Baltimore—the lineal descendant of "The Lovely Lane Meeting House"—at which representatives from different families of Methodism will discuss the spirit, the achievements and the obligations of American Methodism. The society further appointed a committee to arrange for the general commemoration of this great historic event by Methodism at large. Therefore, we the undersigned committee, in behalf of the American Methodist Historical Society:

1. Invite all historical societies, all preachers' meetings and all social unions of every branch of American Methodism to arrange for similar union meetings at such centers as may be most convenient, to celebrate the completion by American Methodism of the eighth of a millenium of organized activity.

2. We most earnestly request every pastor in every branch of American Methodism to preach or cause to be preached a sermon, or to deliver or cause to be delivered, an address to his people, as near Christmas, 1909, as may be practicable (preferably the Sunday before or the second Sunday after), in which shall be discussed some appropriate theme, such as the spirit, the achievements, or the obligations of American Methodism.

3. We most urgently request, that in harmony with the universal custom of early Methodism, every Methodist congregation shall be brought together at 10 o'clock p. m., Dec. 31, inst., for a Watch Night Meeting, which shall be made a season of special prayer and personal consecration to God as a fitting preparation for the deeper spiritual life and the more earnest work to which the Great Head of the Church is calling his followers.

If the 5,750,000 communicants in the various branches of Methodism in America would observe this service with their congregations, so as far as practicable, and in the privacy of their own rooms, where they cannot meet with their congregation, there would result a most notable deepening of the spiritual life of the church and a hastening of the Kingdom of Christ upon earth.

JOHN F. GOUCHER, Chairman.
E. T. TAGG, Secretary.

CHURCH EXTENSION IN NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

Dear ADVOCATE: Permit me to call attention to the forward movement for Church Extension. Our Board resolved to reach each church for Church Extension this year. I want the Presiding Elders whose names appear below to [illegible] the pastors the number of church [illegible] charges and have a map sent to the pastor of each one. Literature will be sent to [illegible] and a campaign for larger things [illegible].

We had at our last session twenty-eight applications amounting to $[illegible] and only $[illegible] to supply the needs. Brother presiding elders and pastors, let us go beyond the assessment this Conference year.

The following are the District [illegible]: Aberdeen, D. W. Babb; Columbus, T. H. [illegible]; Corinth, G. L. Jones; Durant, [illegible]; Greenville, W. S. Lagrone; [illegible]; Sardis, V. C. Curtis; Winona, W. [illegible].

Let us make this year the best in our history.

T. W. LEWIS, [illegible]

MINISTERIAL RELIEF ASSOCIATION OF THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

We have reorganized the Association with [illegible] members. I write to urge all those brethren who have not paid the Mortuary Fee to send the $[illegible] to Brother Park at once. If any [illegible] members desire to become honorary members of the Association, let them send One Dollar to Brother Park. We would be glad to have every member of the Conference join the Association.

T. W. LEWIS, [illegible]

Dec. 11, 1909.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE ENDOWMENT FUND.

Having been again appointed Commissioner of Education for Millsaps College, I am anxious to bring up a full report. About $10,000 will be due by the end of this month. Dear friends, please remit to me as soon as possible. We must raise this amount by May, 1910, or lose a conditional gift made to the College.

T. W. LEWIS.

RESOLUTIONS ON THE DEATH OF REV. C. A. POWELL.

On Thursday, Dec. 2, 1909, Rev. C. A. Powell, the pastor of the Methodist Church of Newton, Miss., died at his home in that place. The Newton Methodist Sunday School offers the following resolutions of respect:

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God to take from us, our beloved pastor and leader, Rev. C. A. Powell, who for three years has been a most earnest and faithful worker in our Sunday School, and whose zeal won for him the love and confidence of all our members; whose high standard of living has exerted a lasting influence over us, and whose daily example of a life spent in service for God and his fellow-man is worthy of our emulation; therefore, be it resolved,

First—That the Sunday School has suffered an irreparable loss in the death of Brother Powell.

Second—That we mourn his loss to the church and community, yet we bow in submission to the Divine will.

Third—That we testify to our appreciation of his love and loyalty, and extend to the family our deepest sympathy in this, their sad bereavement.

Fourth—That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the Minutes of the Sunday School and a copy sent to the family, also to the New Orleans Christian Advocate and the Newton [illegible] papers.

Respectfully submitted,

Mrs. [illegible],
Miss [illegible],
[illegible] Powell.

MINISTERIAL RELIEF [illegible]

The Ministerial Relief Association of the North Mississippi Conference was reorganized at the [illegible] session of the Conference. It was agreed that [illegible] assessment [illegible]. Let all the preachers who have joined send their [illegible] and their [illegible] send me the Mortuary [illegible] participate in the benefits [illegible] the first assessment [illegible].

Any layman [illegible] $[illegible] in the death of a member [illegible] will send for the dollar [illegible] honorary [illegible] without participating in the benefits. These [illegible] grants [illegible]. Every layman [illegible] pay one dollar [illegible] the death of a preacher and thus help this [illegible]. Let [illegible] laymen [illegible] right away.

On Thursday, Nov. 18, 1909, the spirit of sweet little NELDA CLARK took its flight from the home of its parents, Mr. and Mrs. O. A. Clark, of Sumrall, Miss. The little one, of but three summers, bore her severe sufferings without a murmur. The Father, who loves the little ones, has called this beautiful child up where she may ever behold his face. If the sad hearts, that are grieved by their loss, could push aside the gates, and understand the Father's purposes for this little angel as they would then be seen, the bitterness of the grief would pass away. But we cannot see to-day, and must wait. "God's plans, like lillies pure and white unfold; we must not tear the close shut leaves apart; time will reveal the calyxes of gold." Two more little hands are extended across the golden threshold, beckoning the father's and mother's hearts to the city of God. At the loss of such a babe, each recurring turn of memory brings the tears unbidden to the eyes; but the Master, who, of old, wept with those that wept, is touched with the feeling of your sorrow to-day, and with healing hand would sooth your hearts, even while he holds your lamb in his bosom, and carries it away from all storms into the fold above.—Extracts from a tribute by Mrs. R. F. Witt.

It is a serious loss to any community and church when one dies whose high attainments are such that those who touch that life are made better by it. We are brought to realize this in the death of Mrs. C. A. BOYD who passed to her reward in the 59th year of her life, May 18, 1909. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, while young. Her life was replete with those Christian acts that endeared her to all of her associates.—the life of Christian fortitude and zeal till the last. She served as principal of the Summit High School for fifteen years, and first assistant for thirteen years, holding on to her life's work to near the close of her life. She was the daughter of Judge John Lamkin; was born in Holmesville, Miss.; in early life moved to Summit, and afterwards married to Capt. A. A. Boyd. She leaves three brothers, three step-children, a number of other relatives and a host of friends to mourn her departure. A Christian soldier has been laid to rest; a life of faithfulness ended. God grant that the bereaved ones may meet her in glory. Amen. Her pastor,

J. T. ABNEY.

Summit, Miss.

A TRIBUTE.

Mrs. ANN ELIZABETH HUMPHREYS, daughter of John and Elizabeth Turner, was born Sept. 27, 1823, and died Nov. 11, 1909. She and her honored husband were among the old settlers of Marshall County, having come hither from the State of Alabama in the year 1836, though they were not joined in matrimony until a little later period. Her husband preceded her to the grave, dying in 1897, aged 82 years, while she attained to even greater longevity, being eighty-seven at her death. Ten children were born to this patriarchal couple, all of whom lived to maturity, and nearly all whom survive as parents of large families—three generations of her immediate descendants being represented at the funeral. Beautiful in person until long past the meridian of life; lovely in character at every stage of her long pilgrimage; and distinguished above all for patience and meek behavior, as became her profession, she was a wonder unto many, an example to all. Though subjected to many and great sorrows during her life, she was sweetly oblivious to them, or appeared so to her intimates; and though temptation, which loves a shining mark, must have done its utmost, there was no suggestion of stain on her garments as she went to join the "shining ones." Of all the great things her great Lord could do for her in the world she chose sainthood as her portion, and is so far above human praise, that the writer of these lines, who remembers her from infancy, and who is now approaching old age, must content himself with the statement that he never knew a better woman or friend. Under the shadow of the autumn oaks on the cemetery hill-side, at Red Banks, hundreds of relatives and friends gathered to her obsequies, weeping and piling her grave with floral offerings—fair and sweet. But how cold seemed our farewells to the warmth of benediction wafted back upon us from those grave depths. Like the disciples at Olivet, we had come quite unconsciously to the borders of the heavenly world and were under its transfiguring spell. Young men and maidens, fathers and mothers in Israel, and little children joined with us at the close of the all-inadequate service, in singing a sweet song of farewell, and all felt that it was "good to be there."

J. M. BEARD.

IN MEMORIAM.

On the morning of August the 18th, 1909, just as the bright rays of the rising sun were shedding abroad their most glorious beams and turning all the dewdrops into glittering diamonds, the spirit of JIMMIE LIDDLE took its flight from this world of sin and sorrow to its home in that bright beyond where suffering and sorrow are unknown. Though his illness was short, his suffering was intense and could be only partially alleviated by medical aid and the most devoted attention. Jimmie was always good, kind, and cheerful; was a member of the M. E. Church, and his bright face is missed at church and in the social circle; but most of all is he missed in the family where his gentle, joyous disposition was like a bright ray of sunshine banishing clouds of despondency and dispensing joy and gladness to all around him. We know he is sadly missed by parents, grandparents, little sisters and brothers whom it was his delight to love and serve. 'Tis indeed a comfort to his loved ones to know there is nothing but goodness and kindness to be remembered of him who was taken away in the happiest, sunniest hour of life. To the sorrowing loved ones we would say, "Weep not, as those who have no hope," for beyond this vale of tears, there is a life of immortal bliss, and Jimmie has only gone before; soon the intervening distance will be bridged, and again in the newness of life, you will again meet with him who on earth you loved so well. The parting is indeed hard, but the joy of meeting him again in the bright beyond, where pain and death never enter is compensation for our present loss.

We miss you, Jimmie, dear Jimmie,
But over the river's deep gloom
We know it is Junetide forever,
And fadeless and fair is its bloom.

We miss you, Jimmie, dear Jimmie,
But death will not linger too long;
He'll call us at last o'er the river
To dwell with the sanctified throng.

And miss you Jimmie, dear Jimmie,
No more in that beautiful place,
But dwell in your presence forever
And share in your heavenly grace.

A FRIEND.

LEGEND OF THE MIGNONETTE.

Once upon a time there lived a king and queen who had a daughter who was the most beautiful princess ever seen. But she was so amiable and good that people forgot how beautiful she was and only spoke of her goodness. She had long golden curls, but when the maid combed them and got the fine hair tangled, the princess never cried or got cross. At the table she never spilled her soup, and used her napkin and knife and fork properly. When the king and queen had to go on long trips, the princess did not cry or pout to go with them. She was so lovely and good that the queen of the fairies heard of her and determined to reward her. So she went to the palace and entered the presence of the princess.

"I have come to tell you," said the fairy, "that I have heard of your beauty and goodness and have come to reward you. Here are three wishes. Choose which you want and it is yours always. First, you may be a bird, to fly from one end of the earth to the other with no one to say nay or to interfere. Second, you may be a butterfly with no care in the world—only to be gay and happy and beautiful and to charm those who wait to be happy during a summer day. Third, you may be a flower whose sweet perfume will cheer those who are unhappy, to soothe them when they are sick and will be a cheerful companion always."

Then the princess said: "If I were a bird I might fly too far from my home and friends and forget to return, so I will not be a bird. If I were a butterfly, I might think more of my pleasure and ease than of my duty and my beauty might cause me to be vain. So I will be the flower, to help and comfort those who may be in need."

Then the fairy queen waved her wand and the princess became the flower Mignonette.—Selected.

NOT HER FAULT.

It is a very backward child that does not know how to lay the blame on somebody else's shoulders. Little Katharine, of whom the New York Tribune has a story, does not belong in that class.

Her grandmother had gone downstairs for a few minutes, leaving Katharine sailing some tin ducks with a magnet in a bowl of water. Pretty soon her grandfather looked up from his book. The little girl had succeeded in drenching herself from head to foot.

"Why, why!" he exclaimed, in dismay, "what will grandma say now?"

"Oh," said the little girl, instantly, "she will scold you for letting me do [illegible]

MAYHEW, MISS.

Dear Dr. Boswell: The "little gem" of a church at Blue Mountain, Corinth District, is all right, and a compliment to the general situation, but the Methodist people were somewhat at Blue Mountain before Brother J. H. Bass appeared upon the scene. (I refer to J. H. Bass, now pastor at Ripley and Blue Mountain.)

A good company of pure blooded Methodists of that place held their membership at New Hope Church, four miles away, of which I was pastor last year in connection with Ripley. "Ripley and New Hope" was my charge. I called at Blue Mountain by invitation of the college men there (the Lowrys), B. G. Lowry being president, and also to do my duty as pastor to the part of my flock living at Blue Mountain.

The Lowrys who own the college (it is private property), tendered to me, without my asking, the use of the fine $12,000 Baptist Church, which I occupied more than once while at Ripley, at night, in the week, and met a fine audience each time, a part of which was well-nigh the entire body of the college people, including President Lowry.

Those college men, while real Baptists, wished a Methodist Church at Blue Mountain, and proposed to help build it, and no doubt did help, and the Methodists of that "Berg" (for the town is small), were clamorous for a new church and regular work from the Ripley pastor, whoever he might be. They had been with Ripley at one time, but the arrangement did not perpetuate.

I assured the Lowrys and Baptists of our great appreciation of their favors and of their purpose to help build (for they have big influence there), but stated privately to the Lowrys that a big Church, like the Methodist, could not afford to plant in Blue Mountain at Baptist expense, and would not do so: but was pleased greatly to have their neighborly support, such as we would give under like conditions to them.

Presiding Elder Jaco called with me also at Blue Mountain to shake hands and to look over the situation, and as pastor in touch with the situation, I stood solidly with the presiding elder for a big curcuit in that beat, and also a Ripley and Blue Mountain Charge when he spoke to me of it. I requested though, to be released myself after a big year and much property improvement following ground-breaking and revivals (no evangelist, however.) Thirty young ladies of the college are true Methodists, and two of the best teachers, and the college Sunday School, by arrangement of the Lowrys, had a Methodist department with Methodist literature and Methodist teachers. All this spontaneous, and well-nigh without pastor and no regular Methodist preaching, so that things were quite "cut and dried" for Methodist work before Brother Bass came upon the ground.

He has done well and I hope in a way to make the case secure and to perpetuate, but as to the "missionary ground," it was a most inviting kind where even the supposed antagonism (?) was readily a supporter and helper in the plan, and some credit is due, I am sure, to Rev. Ben P. Jaco, and to the Lowry Brothers and college people, as well as to Brother J. H. Bass. Bass is a right good fish, but he had right good water to swim in that time, even if some of it was from the friendly side of largely a Baptist mountain, and that Bass did not launch himself at the head of the stream quite, but struck floating water at once.

MISS. HARVEST CONSECRATION MEETING.

Matt. 9:36-38; [illegible]

1. The whitening harvest fields. When the Master was on the earth he looked out upon the fields white unto the harvest. [illegible] harvest fields are growing whiter. The opportunities for reaping [illegible] are better than they ever were before. The doors are opened, the gates of the great fields are off the hinges, the seed from former harvests [illegible] promises a greater yield than ever before if only the laborers may be found.

2. The Lord of the harvest [illegible] us the responsibility for the number of laborers.

It seems strange as we read it that we must pray for laborers. Why does he not send without our asking? Have we really thought that matured men and women should go to work in the waiting fields, and that [illegible] consecrated young men and maidens be trained for the task? Nay, have we [illegible] with the Lord of the harvest [illegible] through them out? It seems as if the Lord needs not only willing hands [illegible] but yearning hearts that share with him in the [illegible] for the salvation of men. As Leaguers we should make it our business not only to hold as many services, but to let God use us as the instrumentalities for training and thrusting out workers.

3. For you who hear the cry of the Church and the call of the Spirit of God, the Lord stands waiting. When Saul of Tarsus cried, "What wilt thou have me to do?" the Lord answered, "Arise, and go into Damascus, and it shall be told thee of all things that are appointed thee to do." When you ask for your service from your heart, you shall not ask in vain. It may not be what you seek, nor where you would plan, for the King knows best. He did not promise glory to Paul, and he may give you the glory of sharing in his sufferings. But if you answer the Master's call and go into the harvest fields when he appoints you, some day you will have your sheaves to show. You will rejoice with your Lord in the great harvest home.

BERRYVILLE, ARK.

Dear Dr. Boswell: We had a very pleasant session of our Annual Conference, and I was sent nearly across the Conference up here to Berryville Station, the County seat of Carroll County. This I think is the prettiest town I have seen in Arkansas. About 2000 inhabitants, and delightfully located up here in the Ozarks.

We have a large stone church, just being completed, and a good membership, I think, to back it.

We found our parsonage all furnished and ready to go to house-keeping when we got here, and we are nicely and comfortably fixed.

I am sorry you are to leave the Advocate. We always like to read in print from those we have met and know personally, and then, your articles and editorship were always wise and edifying, and for the best interests of the Church. An Atlanta Physician Is Curing Catarrh by a Simple Home Remedy and will mail a Trial Treatment Free.

Those who have long doubted whether there really is a successful remedy for catarrh will be glad to learn that Dr. Blosser, of Atlanta, Ga., has discovered a method whereby catarrh can be eradicated to the very last symptom.

He will send a free sample by mail to any man or woman suffering with catarrh, bronchitis, asthma, catarrbal deafness, chronic colds, stopped-up feeling in nose and throat, difficult breathing, or any of the many symptoms of catarrh.

Dr. Blosser's Remedy is radically different from all others, being simple, harmless, inexpensive and requiring no instrument or apparatus of any kind.

If you wish a demonstration of what this remarkable remedy will do, send your name and address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 204 Walton street, Atlanta, Ga., and you will receive by return mail a free package and an illustrated booklet. Write before you forget it.

A "SQUARE DEAL"

It is often argued that women do not have an equal chance with men, for enjoyment and usefulness, because women suffer so much from pain and weakness. In a general sense, it is true that women bear more physical pain than men. However, the belief that women must suffer regularly, on account of ailments and weakness peculiar to their sex, has been successfully contradicted by the relief so many women have obtained by the use of Cardui, that great remedy for suffering women.

During the past fifty years, many thousands of women have written us, telling of the immediate relief and permanent benefit they have received from Cardui. These letters cover a great many forms of womanly illness. Mrs. M. E. Allred of Hartford, Wash., writes: "Ever since I was 16 years old, I have suffered from female troubles. I had headache, backache and other troubles, every month. Some two years ago, I began to use Cardui, and since then I have had no backache, my other troubles have stopped; I don't need any medicine, and I am well."

What Cardui has done for Mrs. Allred and other women, it surely can do for you. Try it at once. Give yourself a "square deal." You will never regret it. Sold everywhere.

LESSON FOR DECEMBER 19, 1909

REVIEW.

Acts, Chap. 21 to Chapt. 28, also Paul's Epistles.

Golden Text: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith."—II Tim. iv:7.

"Lives of great men all remind us, We can make our lives sublime."

The life of Jesus Christ, our Lord, stands pre-eminently above all others as an example to follow, creating in the human heart a love partaking of the divine; inciting a worship due to none other than the Son of God; setting forth a spiritual attainment, even when surrounded by forces that bind us to the worldly and practical.

The lives of the apostles give to man that encouragement that is needed in the effort against an evil tendency that is his by nature, that in ceasing to do evil, he may learn to do well.

In reviewing the lessons of the quarter, we have a review of that part of the life of Paul which is most valuable to the Christian, in his endeavor to grow in grace, and to overcome difficulties that must needs beset his pathway; "for all that will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution." Then let us look at the character of this godly man as it is shown by events in the Scripture narrative. After having given himself completely to the service of the Master and being assured of acceptance and protection, he went in full obedience, without the shadow of fear. He was warned more than once, and he knew, that a visit to Jerusalem would be to him most disastrous; he was not only willing to face danger, but also ready to die if by that means he could but serve the Lord Christ. His perfect trust drove all fear away and left him a calmness that was even majestic. His friends of the Church were unable to assist or protect him, and after he had been beaten by his enemies, his own countrymen, he was fearless when he turned toward the mob that clamored for his life, and speaking from the stairs of the palace, told them of how he had seen the Lord Jesus and how he had turned from being his enemy to be his faithful servant, while he knew that he would be preserved from death, his faith assuring him, yet his prudence and good sense prompted him to use the services of his nephew as if it was ordered of the Lord that he should. When he faced his enemies before Ceasar's judgment seat, Felix being judge, Paul never once forgot his native suavity, showing a knowledge of legal ethics that Tertullus, the hired orator, would have done well to have taken note. Even in his defense he followed the teaching of Jesus, "I say unto you that ye resist not evil," for he brought no countercharge. He could have resorted to all the technical practices of a shrewd lawyer, for he had made the law a study. He invariably used such opportunities to set forth some doctrinal point in his religion, giving evidence that his mission as a gospel preacher was his first thought and consideration; he even made use of such references as a point of contention among his opponents, thus dividing their strength, and establishing his own position through the breach thus created.

Paul was a gentleman by birth and education, and when this refined culture was sweetened by the doctrines of the meek and lowly Nazarene, he was a model worthy to be followed by all who seek a cultivated demeanor.

Jesus was his guide and counselor, appearing at his side when all earthly means of escape seemed cut off; or when he came with some command, he was "not disobedient to the heavenly vision." He was trained as a commander of men, but he knew better how to obey after he had learned the lesson of charity, love and compassion. He knew no fear, for his confidence in God's promise was absolute; and when the Levantine storm came down in all its fury, and seemed endless in duration, he stood up in the ship, before passengers, soldiers and sailors, and told how he had been, that same fearful night, with the angel of God that had been sent to assure him of the lives of himself and all that were in the ship. When they all escaped to the unknown island, it was Paul, the prisoner, that was of first consideration, even before the captain of the vessel, or the centurian commanding the soldiers. Paul had the secret of drawing men to him. That same secret can be learned again in this day and time. It is the visible outward appearance of "God that worketh in you, both to will and to do of his good pleasure."

Paul longed for the companionship of men, he was glad when Luke or Timothy, or other loved friends came to him. He loved his countrymen always, and by them he was most unfeelingly treated. He loved Jerusalem, and with anguish of spirit he knew that her gates were closed to him. His life was full of suffering; a suffering that became a joy, because it was endured for the sake of the name of Jesus. He was sound in doctrine—knowing just when to conform to the ceremonial law with a Timothy, or to refrain therefrom with a Titus. He was an advocate of peace; he pleaded for it among persons, he prayed for it in the church; and he contended for it among nations. He knew what was justice, yet to the poor, guilty sinner he joyed to tell of justification by faith. He could tell best of God's mercy, for it had been so lavishly bestowed upon him. He was faithful from that first day on the road to Damascus to that last day when he gave up his life, a martyr to the faith.

Death will not bar us; we can follow Paul through the gates of pearl, for as he lived for others, others can follow where he ever pointed, even to where there is laid up a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give at that day, not only to Paul, but all them, also, that love his appearing.

The Government prints a book in which is enumerated all the officers and servants, big and little, employed in its service. The new edition, revised and up-to-date, will soon be off the press. It gives the number of such servants for 1909 at 370,665, an increase of 63,924 during the last two years. There are 28,947 of these persons employed in Washington City alone, and they are paid $31,541,225 annually. That is an average of nearly $1,100. If that average holds for the whole 370,665, our readers by doing some figuring can form an idea what it costs to pay the hands who carry on the work of the Government. And bearing in mind that the cost of paying the men and women is but one item of expense, there being many others—one of which is the cost of the navy—five battleships costing more than the whole of the pay-roll, it can be seen that "Uncle Sam" has a huge job on his hands. But this is not all. The office holders are continually increasing. Plans are on foot, and being advocated, which, if adopted, will add as many to the pay-roll as is on it at this time—and probably more. Retrenchment is what is needed. We have no idea but that half the under clerks could be dispensed with without hurt to the service. Many of them we dare say do little else, so far as the Government is concerned, than draw their monthly pay. We say this on the strength of the statement often made to the effect that "many Government offices are mere sinecures," held by persons through the mere grace of some friend higher up.

If the State officers of Alabama are not on guard, we wonder where the officers of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals are. It may be that the Society has no existence in Alabama. It may be also that the civil officers are paid not to see some things that are going on. We refer to the annual chicken fights now in progress in Montgomery. According to dispatches sent all over the country, the "cocking main" is an institution of some note in our sister State, and the yearly function, which always embraces a week, opened on Monday, Dec. 13, and was in full operation at the time of writing this "glance." The press agent was careful to say that the matter was kept secret until opening day—for fear of the law or public sentiment—we suppose. But reports of doings in the main were made as soon as convenient after opening day. "More than one thousand birds"—game roosters, from all sections of the country had been shipped to the city, and the fighting was sufficient to satisfy the most ardent lovers of the sport. The result of only one contest was sent out. In that case the victorious bird flopped his wings and crowed over his fallen foe, which he left in the main "with both wings broken and one broken leg." When we read the disgusting details, we involuntarily said: "No wonder Constitutional prohibition was defeated in Alabama. Men who can engage in or encourage such cruelty can be counted on to do anything that requires defiance of morals or civilization. Really, we thought cocking mains had been abolished everywhere except in Jefferson Parish, Louisiana, just across the river from New Orleans, a point which Satan has not yet consented to relinquish.

The newly-appointed minister to the United States from China, while in San Francisco, attended a social function of some kind, in company with his wife and two daughters. Judging by the printed account of the affair, it was what is ordinarily called "a ball"—a fashionable dance. The minister was so shocked at the manner in which the women were dressed that, with his wife and daughters, he abruptly left the scene, and expressed himself in no uncertain words. He had come in contact with a strange form of society, which, to him, was worse than barbarous." He had been laboring under the impression that America was a civilized country. The American ball undeceived him. The dress of the women was not described in the press dispatch. We suppose it was the "regulation costume," about which we have but little knowledge—none at all, in fact, concerning dress for fashionable balls. It must have been something far beyond the ordinary to so far disgust a "heathen Chinee" as to cause him indignantly to refuse the sight to the eyes of his wife and innocent daughters. To us it seems that if fashionable ball dress is shocking to a well-bred and educated Chinaman, it should likewise be shocking to an American gentleman. But such is not the case; on the contrary, he would be outraged should a single woman so far defy society etiquette as to appear at such a function clothed in the dress of decent private life. So much the worse for etiquette. Who is to blame for such a mode of dressing? Nobody. It is just custom. Then it is time for the good and pure women of the land to outlaw the custom. Will they do it? That is another question.

We imagine the scientists and college professors will make slow progress in their efforts to get all the people to marry according to "scientific principles only." We believe it will be practically impossible. The matter was considered recently at the annual meeting of the "American Breeders' Association," an association which we have understood existed for the purpose of improving live stock—horses, cattle, hogs, etc.—but which, it seems, has broadened into an association for the improvement of our common humanity. The association appointed a committee composed of "college professors and scientists" to take the case of human stock into consideration, which committee, after due deliberation, reported the necessity for the improvement of the human race, and that it could be done only "along the lines of scientific principles"—by the education of the public at first, and then by legislation. It recommended that all persons, men and women desiring to marry should each submit to physical, mental and moral examination," and, "producing clean records," may marry. The ultimate aim, these scientists say, is to bring about "better matings," weed out unfit traits, and thus eliminate hospitals, insane asylums and homes for the blind. All that sounds well. But let them educate and then legislate, they may in comparatively few instances bring about ideal mating, while the unfit, according to their standards, would effect illegal matings, which would result in "race suicide," or a vastly disproportionate number of illegitimate children. In either case disaster would follow. It would be easy enough to secure judges competent to determine physical and mental soundness, but judges of "moral soundness," competent and satisfactory, would not be easily secured, unless the term "moral" should signify no more than it does in some states that require all of its liquor sellers to be men of "good moral character." With a standard that low there would be no trouble, but it would be practically useless.

One of the strange things of life is the indifference of some parents towards their children. In not a few instances it amounts to criminal neglect and carelessness. It is almost inconceivable that a mother should offer to put her son where he would associate with none but criminals, and be treated like a criminal. Yet this very thing has been reported. In one of the States of the Union a woman who had planned a somewhat lengthened visit, but, being encumbered by the care of a 14-year-old son, who, no doubt, she had allowed to grow up without the proper training, and, of course, was disobedient, applied to the civil authority to keep the boy in jail until her return. The police judge before whom the case came had more heart and better judgment than the mother, and declined the request. In doing so, he said: "I do not believe this is a bad boy. To send him to jail would harden him. I believe this boy's future is of more importance than his mother's vacation." We hear now and then of the meeting of a "Mothers' Congress." The request of this mother, who would make her son languish in jail while she was taking a pleasure trip, suggests that a "Mothers' Congress" is altogether a timely thing—provided it takes cognizance of the delinquencies of mothers, as well as of the best method of improving and developing their good qualities. Mothers should bear in mind that in failing to give their children moral training, which includes exacting of them due obedience to authority, they are allowing them to go in the way that leads to the jail. Some public man said not long since that one of the things mostly needed to-day was the exercise of parental authority. He uttered a solemn truth.

A SONG OF CHRISTMAS.

O heart of mine, from the store in me
Of memories that you hold,
Sing me a song that is sweet and strong
Of the Christmas days of old!
Sing of the eager heart and eye
As the season of joy drew near,
And we marked the lessening days go by
When the sun rose late in the winter sky,
With never a backward thought or sigh
For the waning year!

Sing of the morn when our Lord was born,
As it came in the days of youth,
When the bells rang sweet down the village street
Their tidings of joy and truth!
Sing of the drifted fields of white,
Of the crisp and buoyant air;
Of the country roads packed hard and white,
Of the loaded sleighs and the faces bright,
Of the rosy girls and the laughter light,
And the greetings fair!

Sing of the hall where we gathered all,
With never a vacant place;
Father and mother and sister and brother,
And each with a smiling face!
Sing of the thankful hearts sincere
For the board so nobly laid;
Of the boundless cheer of the garnered year,
Of the ample roasts and the homemade cheer,
Of the stingless jest and the laughter clear,
And the joy we made!

Sing of the night and the rare delight,
Of the dance and the romping game!
Of the moment's fleet, and the twinkling feet
In the light of the pine-log's flame!
Sing of the memories now as keen
As the poignant sense of love;
Of the berried boughs and the evergreen,
The last cup round and the parting scene,
Of the last guest gone, with the miles between,
And the stars above!

—Gordon Rogers, in St. Louis Advocate.

A CHRISTMAS AT THE SCARRITT BIBLE AND TRAINING SCHOOL.

Should you ask me which has been the happiest and most helpful Christmas I have ever spent, I would say: "Last Christmas at the Scarritt Bible and Training School." Moreover, there came to me then a deeper realization of the true meaning of Christmas, which will ever abide and make all the Christmases in the years to come more sweet, more sacred.

School closed at noon on the twenty-fourth, and from this on the Christmas spirit reigned supreme. How busy and how happy everybody was! The little gifts to the home folk were to be prepared and sent, and the dolls for the little ones of the Institutional Church were waiting to be dressed. It was pleasant then [illegible] getting [illegible] the dainty clothes, and as each [illegible] garment was finished we thought of the darkened [illegible] home [illegible] bring the Christmas message [illegible] to have this small part in giving service.

Next there were the baskets to be filled. Many generous-hearted people had contributed to these supplies, fruit, candy and everything to make a good dinner. Ours was the privilege of fixing and carrying the baskets, and a blessed privilege it was.

Then, because we had contributed to the happiness of others, we turned to our own [illegible] with glad and thankful hearts.

This was our first Christmas at the Training School, and we were full of delightful expectancy, for much had we heard of the sweetness of the day spent there, and to all of our questions the seniors would only say, "Wait and see."

At last the day dawned. In the early morning we were awakened by the sweet strains of music. It was a Christmas carol sung by our Seniors. As we listened we could not but think that it was the song of the angels continued down the ages, and the joyful calm of Christmastide filled all our hearts. The strains died away, but the sense of God's exceeding love remained. Then came the opening of Christmas packages, and again we realized the preciousness of human love and its sweet expressions.

At the sounding of the gong all the household assembled in the chapel and were led in a deeply spiritual service by Miss Gibson. [illegible] sacred. How precious and how sweetly solemn the hour when we heard again the story that never grows old, when the glory of the Star of Bethlehem softened our hearts, and we consecrated our lives anew to the King of all the world. With glad voices we united in the hymn "Joy to the World!" as we passed to the dining room. And there new surprises awaited us.

After breakfast each one did as she pleased. We had a happy time together, looking at each other's gifts and visiting from room to room. Before dinner each member of the household dressed in white, and all were assembled in the hall downstairs when the gong rang. There were a number of guests, missionaries at home on vacation, Bishop Hendrix and his wife and a few others. We passed to the dining room, and what a beautiful sight it was! Friends from far and near had contributed gifts large and small, that the day might be more happy for those who had given their lives to the Master's service. But I cannot tell you of all the good things we had, nor of all the merry things that were said and done.

After dinner I suppose nearly every one wrote a letter home and spent a quiet hour with Him whom we serve. At the Vesper hour we again gathered in the chapel, where Christmas messages from the absent ones were heard, and those who had taken baskets to the [illegible] told of the joy given and received. Again our hearts were lifted up to Him whose day it was.

When, at last, the day was over, we closed our sleepy eyes with souls full of a deep quiet and peace, with renewed faith and trust in God, a deeper spiritual purpose and a great love for Him who gives so abundantly.

Thus are holidays spent at the Training School. Combining the joys of earthly comforts with the joy of divine and human love; the blessedness of ministering to others with the blessed [illegible] realized [illegible] strengthened [illegible] more eager [illegible] message to those that wait in darkness.

May ever a joyous Christmas be ours.

OUR BAPTIST BRETHREN.

BY REV. W. T. WOODWARD.

For a man to be a Baptist, I have no objection; but, because he is a Baptist, why should he unchurch everybody else and enthrone himself as chief over all God's kingdom? It is presumed that the Baptist Chronicle, published at Alexandria, La., is the spokesman for the Baptists of all Louisiana. That paper declares the Baptist Church to be the only "true church" of Christ. But the editor always takes care not to give any Scripture, nor a historical reference to prove his position.

The Baptists claim that, because they find some of the principles practiced by them in the New Testament, therefore the Baptist Church is the real, simon-pure church of Christ, and all others are imposters. Now, the facts in the case are these: The Baptist Church came into existence just like all other denominations, viz.: because one or more persons decided upon a form of doctrine and polity, and said: "We are the only ones that have the keys of the kingdom, and whomsoever we baptize on earth is free in heaven; and whomsoever we fail to immerse on earth will be bound in heaven. All other baptisms are fraudulent but ours. It matters not by whom, nor by what mode, it is no good. First—No other church has the authority, not having come down from Roger Williams, Ezekiel Holloman and John Smith (in this particular case lay baptism has never been denied). Second—No other mode but immersion is Scriptural (right here they make a boast that all scholars of all denominations say that the Greek word baptizo means to immerse, and immerse only. Every man, woman and child that knows anything about Greek knows that that is false from start to finish. It means wash, and has other meanings not necessary to mention here).

They claim to be Scriptural in all their doctrine and polity—absolutely no mistake about it. Please give me one passage of Scripture, clear-cut, showing that someone was baptized by immersion? There should be no quibbling about it. I want one passage that teaches close communion, that nobody but Baptists can take; one passage showing that members of the church voted on taking another person into the church; one passage showing that they sit in judgment and determine whether another shall be baptized or not.

Where do they find the Scripture for them to meet and hear a brother preach a trial (or sample) sermon, and then cast votes to see how many are in favor of his becoming pastor of said church?

I want the Scripture for these practices before I accept them as such. If they want to teach and practice the above things, all right; but do not get up and tell a crowd of uninformed people that "all we do and say is according to Scripture."

The claim of antiquity for a church organization or system weighs not one atom with an enlightened mind. For a religious body to boast such a claim is a symptom of weakness, if not corruption. I regard a man, so narrow and bigoted, a dangerous leader. To prevent uninformed people from being duped by such nonsense is a duty. We Methodists have, in some cases, refrained from preaching doctrines of the Methodist Church for fear we would hurt some brother's feelings; consequently, a large number of our people think we have no Scripture for our positions, and scores of people are out of the churches that ought to be in our church, and would be there if we would preach the doctrines.

Now, I made the statement above, that the Baptist Church denomination started just like others. That it is modern, no one can successfully dispute. There is absolutely no foundation for either the Campbellite or Baptist assertions as to the setting up of the church. There is not a denomination of Christians in all the world that, as such, can trace a succession to within 600 years of the birth of Christ.

The Church of Christ is the sum of true believers of all denominations; yet I am glad to be able to say truly that Methodism, in the light of the twentieth century, is found to be "the survival of the fittest."

Haynesville, La.

CHURCH EXTENSION REPORT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Your board is embarrassed by ever increasing demands for aid, while our resources are still limited. During this session of our Conference we have had 28 applications for donations, amounting to $5330. We have raised for Church Extension this year $4285.50 (increase $186), hence we have only $2142.75 at our disposal to meet the urgent needs of our cause. This serious situation calls for the most liberal and loyal support of our people, and yet it is a situation for which we should not be ungrateful. Whenever we cease to build we cease to grow. It is a cause for profound gratitude that we are building better and more suitable houses of worship, and your board felicitates itself upon the fact that our great church is planting itself so thoroughly in the centers of population. But we need more money. The urgent demands of the field, especially in the Delta, where our Methodism has long been in the lead, must be met.

1. The General Board.

The annual report shows an increase of $27,624.56 over the receipts of last year. But when we remember that in Oklahoma, Texas, New Mexico, Arizona and other parts of our great and widely extended Zion, we need five times as much money as we have at our disposal. We must not be content with past achievements, but must go forward.

At the last session of the General Board, held in the city of Memphis, Rev. George S. Sexton, of the Texas Conference, was elected Assistant Secretary, with special reference to the proposed Washington City Church. We hereby pledge ourselves as far as we can to co-operate with him in this work. Our church must erect a creditable house of worship in the Capital City of the nation.

2. Loan Fund Day.

In view of the increasing demands for loans, the General Board has arranged for the observance of a Loan Fund Day. The presiding elders and preachers in charge are hereby reminded that the second Sunday in April, or as near thereto as practicable, is set apart for this purpose. Let sermons or addresses be delivered on that occasion and give our people an opportunity to contribute.

3. Birthday Offerings.

We call attention to the action of the General Board and the Sunday School Board respecting Birthday Offerings in the Sunday Schools. After this Conference year the fund raised in this way is to institute a Sunday School Loan Fund. Will not our preachers and superintendents get the jars and give the children a chance?

4. Colored Methodist Episcopal Church.

In order to meet an urgent call for help from our colored brethren, our General Board agreed to ask the Church for $15,000 this year. Our part of this amount is $434. After a careful and full consideration of the matter, your board is free to say that we heartily agree with the resolution of the General Board that we should make a voluntary contribution for their relief, and we request the presiding elders and preachers in charge to present this call to our people wherever practicable that the amount may be secured.

5. District Organizations.

We are pleased to know that four of the presiding elders' districts maintain district organizations. We urge the other four to do so next year. We also request the treasurers of these district organizations to furnish the Conference Treasurer with an annual statement of his work.

6. Recommendation.

Your attention is invited to the following resolution adopted by the General Board:

"Resolved, That the Bishops and presiding elders be requested to emphasize in district and annual conferences the very urgent need of large contributions to the cause of Church Extension in view of the rapid growth of our country, and the responsibilities of our church on this account."

We, therefore, ask the Conference to adopt three resolutions, to-wit:

1. That at least one hour be given to Church Extension at the district conferences.

2. That our people who receive aid from this board be most earnestly requested to insure their houses of worship against fire and storm.

3. That our preachers be warned against the danger of causing building committees to contract large debts, with the promise that this board will come to their relief.

Assessments for 1910: Aberdeen, $743; Columbus, $730; Corinth, $625; Durant, $700; Greenville, $743; Oxford, $720; Sardis, $736; Winona, $743. Total, $5,740.

The Woman's Home Mission Society reports having raised $4,480 during the past year for their work. They have paid the following amounts to parsonages: Iuka Circuit, $100; Greenwood Springs, $50; Brownfield, $75; Mantachie, $75; Kosciusko Circuit, $150; Leland, $200. Total, $650.

J. R. Bingham and W. C. Lester were elected delegates to the next meeting of Conference representatives, and J. T. Murrah and D. W. Babb alternates. Respectfully submitted, T. W. Lewis, President.

THE VANDERBILT-PEABODY AFFAIR

BY BISHOP E. E. HOSS.

The following communication was written by Bishop Hoss for the Christian Advocate, Nashville, but the editor of that journal declined to give it a place. It was then given to the [illegible] Banner. We offer no apology for printing it in the New Orleans Christian Advocate.—J. W. B.

The Nashville Banner of the 15th ult. contains a communication from the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees of the George Peabody College for Teachers which is entitled to a careful consideration by the general public. Sympathizing as I do most profoundly with all great educational movements I was very happy when the announcement was made that the trustees of the Peabody fund would place at least $1,000,000 in Nashville, and I seized the first opportunity to congratulate Gov. Porter on the success of his great and noble efforts to secure that end. But some of the later developments have given me fears.

The Executive Committee of the Teachers' College—so it seems to me—are traveling outside of their appropriate sphere when they undertake to define the relation of Vanderbilt University to the Methodist Church. That relation is one with which they have nothing whatever to do. I desire, further, and most earnestly, to deny that it is such as they affirm it to be. In one respect they certainly hit the truth in the center. Vanderbilt University is not "narrowly sectarian." For the matter of that, the same thing may be said of all the institutions of the Methodist Church. I very much doubt whether, in the hundreds of schools under her care, any single young man has ever been made to feel uncomfortable on account of his peculiar religious beliefs. My own room-mate at Emory and Henry College, Virginia, was an Irish Roman Catholic, the late Mr. John Condon, of Knoxville, and I am sure that he would have borne a glad and generous testimony to the breadth and kindness of the atmosphere by which we were surrounded. Nevertheless, there was never a question raised as to whether it was, in all respects, a Methodist school.

The charter of Vanderbilt University, as well as the history behind the charter, shows exactly what it is. This charter does not use the dubious phrase "under the general auspices of the Methodist Church," nor anything like it. On the contrary, in perfectly definite terms, it designates the trustees as "representatives" of certain Annual Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, by which conferences they had been severally named. Nor does it, even by implication, make them "self-perpetuating." The only rational view is that all the trustees in succession have precisely the same functions as the first ones had, and are to be reappointed in precisely the same way. Furthermore, the charter expressly limits the power of the trustees by naming the Bishops of the church as "supervisors." It was to a corporation thus created and thus limited that Commodore Vanderbilt gave his great donation.

These facts cannot be denied by any one that is able to read plain English. To get rid of them, however, an unsuccessful effort was made four years ago to repudiate the existing charter, as largely "superfluous" or "unconstitutional," and to take out a new one that would make the trustees an independent, self-governing and self-perpetuating corporation. This action on the part of a majority of the trustees led to the appointment by the General Conference of 1906 of a commission of five able and reputable Methodist lawyers, who decided against the contention of the trustees; that the existing charter of the University is constitutional and valid in all its parts; that the University belongs to the Methodist Church, and that the Board has no legal power of self-perpetuation [illegible] the General Conference [illegible] the rights of the Annual Conferences [illegible] fill the vacancies; and that the Bishops [illegible] are [illegible] [illegible] to the [illegible] of the [illegible].

The readiness with which the Executive Committee of the Teachers' College [illegible] The Vanderbilt Board of Trustees, though failing to say in any [illegible] that they accept the report of the commission and [illegible] themselves bound by it—and [illegible] have forever quieted the apprehensions of the Church—were at least not [illegible] Being themselves Methodists, they [illegible] go that far. It may as well be understood [illegible] as later that any attempt to nullify in fact the finding of the commission means a lawsuit, leading up to the Supreme Court of the United States. The principles involved are of such vital importance that they will never be surrendered until all the resources of defense have been completely exhausted.

In an interview published in the Banner some weeks ago, Chancellor Kirkland denied categorically that any option had been given to anybody on any part of the Vanderbilt campus. I called attention, at the time, to the fact that he was careful not to deny that promises had been made and that negotiations were pending looking to such an option. One of his friends, speaking before the Committee of Methodists at the Tennessee Conference in October, and [illegible] believing that he was telling the truth, answered me by saying: "I am [illegible] that there has been no such negotiations nor promises." It turns out, in spite of this sincere affirmation, that my surmise was correct, for the Peabody Executive Committee give official information as follows: "Vanderbilt University is located in the best resident section of the city of Nashville and is in direct line of its present growth. Chancellor Kirkland offers to sell, subject to the approval of his trustees, the highest and most desirable portion of Vanderbilt campus for the use of the Teachers' College, on terms to be agreed on."

These gentlemen also declare, in words which cannot be misunderstood, that in the proposed plan of "co-operation"—Dr. Winton's "affiliation" is repudiated—the two institutions will ultimately lose their outstanding identity, and become merely "the basis on which to build a great university." They further add that "an institution of learning"—mark the singular number—"will at last be planted in the South born to rank with our noblest in the North—Yale, Columbia, Hopkins, or Chicago—indeed, a veritable Harvard for the South, the apex and crown of our whole educational system, a far-shining beacon of light," etc. How is it possible to get this one "great university," this "far-shining beacon of light," this "apex of our whole educational system," out of the plan under consideration, except by the actual merger and cancellation of both Vanderbilt and Peabody College University, we are not told. When "the Harvard of the South" comes, where will Vanderbilt be? And where will Peabody be? The University that is still a castle in the air can never be either one of the existing institutions, for that would be a merger, and manifestly unfair to the other. It must, then, be a sort of tertium quid—a third somewhat. The Executive Committee, made up as it is, of shrewd and upright gentlemen, still does not seem to perceive the inconsistency of its own positions. It scouts the suggestion of "merger" or "affiliation," and yet frankly admits that the two institutions "will serve as a basis on which to build a great university." If that is their function—and I have no doubt that the case has been stated fairly and correctly—then they cannot [illegible] and also [illegible] sight [illegible] if there is any magical process by which they can be made to accomplish such an end without being [illegible] I should really like to know what it is. But I will have to be shown.

[illegible] oft-repeated proclamation [illegible] the press that any opposition on the part of the Methodist Church to [illegible] its rights for the purpose of this ambitious scheme [illegible] ecclesiastical narrowness, I should like to ask why it is that no other Church is [illegible] expected to subject itself to [illegible] The only answer to this question, so far as I can see, is that the [illegible] of Methodism has raised a general belief that it will give up any advantage rather than engage in a contention. A recent writer in The American has actually proposed that a committee of intelligent gentlemen from Nashville should be appointed to enlighten the approaching General Conference on the whole subject. The humor of such a proposal is positively delicious, and all the more so for being apparently unconscious. In the past the chief [illegible] of the Methodists has been able to attend [illegible] will be so to the end of the chapter, though it can never fail to be touched by the offer of outside assistance.

There would be just as much propriety in denouncing the wealthy citizens of Nashville for not putting up $2,700,000 of their own money to advance the interests of Peabody as in denouncing the Methodist Church for declining to take the same step. The rights of the Church are as sacred in the eyes of God and man as are those of individual citizens. Beyond the limit of these rights the Methodist Church at any rate does not desire to go one hair's breadth; but, inside of them, as in duty bound, she will fight till the day before the Greek kalends. Suppose that the community of Nashville should rise up and say to its rich men: "You have, it is true, a pretty defensible historical title to your wealth, but the present generation has a right to say for itself how all wealth shall be used; and we require you to put up $2,700,000 for this or that enterprise." How would they take it? A policy that impairs or weakens the legitimate property rights of the Church will lead on by inevitable steps to the assailing of all tenures.

A short summary of the general work in the Woman's Home Mission Society, 1908-1909, marks its advance as a moving force in the work of the Church. The whole Society is now represented by 86,000 members—an increase of 14,000 during the year. For all purposes, something over $400,000 has been raised—an advance of nearly $20,000 over any previous record.

20,000 subscribers to Our Homes show an increase of 4,000 over the year before. From the net proceeds of this paper, the editor, Miss Helm, was enabled to place $2,000 in the general treasury at the recent Board Meeting in Savannah, Ga.

Donations to parsonages from the Board and Conference societies reached the sum of $26,251; the largest appropriation in one year by nearly $6,000. The value of supplies sent to our preachers, mission schools, orphanages, storm-sufferers etc., were estimated at $35,000: $10,000 over the record of any past year.

Since 1903, 55 deaconnesses have been consecrated and 46 are now serving in the various fields of the work. 13 schools, 63 teachers and 1,600 students represent the educational force of the year. To meet the larger demands—as the work grows—10,000 Home Mission women are pledged to tithing; laying aside one-tenth or more of their incomes for this purpose. Our Gulfcoast work, enterprised jointly by the General Board of Missions, Board of Church Extension, and the Woman's Board of Home Missions is now carried on in three important centers—Galveston, Gulfport and New Orleans. Of the work in New Orleans, under the able superintendence of Rev. N. E. Joyner, a recent letter makes the following statement:

"We have every reason to rejoice in our work at St. Mark's; 109 present at our services on Sunday evening; 67 in the sewing school, and 17 enrolled in the cooking class. One minister writes: 'It has grown beyond our most sanguine expectations; the Lord has set before us an open door and no man can shut it; the great immediate need is more room—a new or larger building.'"

The advance of Home Missions in the Louisiana Conference from December, 1908, to December, 1909, is seen by the following figures:

New auxiliaries organized, 25; total, including Brigades, 96; total members, 2,230, an increase of 415; Life Members, 23; number added to Baby Roll, 62; number pledged to tithing, 141; number subscribers to Our Homes, 580; number of boxes sent off and reported to Superintendent of Supplies, 28; papers and leaflets distributed, 4,519; auxiliaries observing Week of Prayer, 38; visits to sick and strangers, 7,779; visits to corrective and benevolent institutions, 779; cottage prayer meetings held, 242; number of garments distributed, 4,400; number of needy assisted, 422; number of City Mission Boards, 1; number of city missionaries, 3; number of deaconesses, 6; appropriations to parsonages, $700; money sent to Conference Treasurer, $2,282.51; money raised for local work, $11,136.60; cash and supplies to orphanage, $608.

A mission center on the river front, enterprised by Rayne Memorial Church, New Orleans, is doing good work and we have already spoken of the great forward movement represented by St. Mark's Hall in Esplanade Street. To Mrs. Carre, president of the Board of City Missions and her faithful co-laborers, much appreciation is due for faithful service and untiring effort to advance this much-needed missionary movement in New Orleans.

The promise of Jesus: "Lo, I am with you alway," is being literally fulfilled in the work of the Woman's Home Mission Society; and as we bring to you at the close of another year, this statement of the year's work, our hearts are filled with gratitude that we have been permitted even in a small degree to share in this advancement of our Lord's kingdom. As the work grows, greater and increasing needs present themselves, we ask our pastors and brethren to help us to go forward by their counsel, co-operation and prayers. MRS. E. R. KENNEDY.

PRICE OF THE ADVOCATE AFTER JAN. 1, 1910.

For one year	$1.50
(Commission to agents 15 cents for each subscription.)
Six months	.75
To preachers	1.00
To widows of preachers	1.00

In order to help our friends circulate the Advocate, and to bring the paper within reach of our subscribers at the very lowest possible price, we have granted the privilage of a rate of $1.25 in clubs of five or more. Although we continue a club rate as a privilege, yet where our agents desire it, they may retain ten cents commission on each subscription, to cover expense of remitting, etc.

ORPHANS' HOME DAY.

The Mississippi Conference, by a unanimous rising vote, adopted the first Sunday in February as the day upon which the whole Conference would represent the needs of the Orphanage, and take collections for the new building. We need $15,000 more than we have in cash and subscriptions. Five friends of the Home, have promised $17,000 of the $35,000 which we need to do this work. Cannot the two Conferences of our State raise this $15,000? I think we can. How much would that be for each church? About $15 for each church, or 15 cents for each member.

The new dormitory and the school building are both very much needed. In our present condition we are unable to take more children, or to properly care for those we have. We are losing, as a church, in not being able to care for our own children and have them brought up in our faith and doctrine. Others are doing our work for us. Had you thought of that, brother?

Christ gave himself as a gift to us, Christmas morning; can we make a gift to the homeless children of our two Conferences this glad Christmas morning, by giving them a home? We ask every one who reads this, to make the Orphanage a Christmas present for the building fund.

Many of the North Mississippi Conference brethren and the good women of the W. H. M. Society have promised to put forth special effort to raise this needed money. We wish every one who will, to co-operate with us.

Publish the news far and wide, that the first Sunday in February, 1910, must bring to the Orphanage the $15,000. W. M. WILLIAMS.

Whatever you wish, that you are; for such is the force of will joined to the Divine that whatever we wish to be, seriously and with a true intention, we become. No one ardently wishes to be patient, modest, or liberal, who does not become what he wishes.—Samuel Smiles.

CHRISTMAS FOR THE ORPHANS.

Mr. Ellzey writes me that "The Pacific Express Company has promised to donate express on all packages not to exceed one hundred pounds up to the 31st of December. The Southern Express Company not to exceed fifty pounds. The Wells Fargo and the American Express Companies have not limited, but, of course, these companies do not expect our friends to ship anything that could go by freight."

With this liberal offer those of our people who desire to help the Orphanage have a fine chance to do so under the most favorable advantages. What you send can come by freight or express free. Please instruct the Agent that what you ship is for the Orphanage, and have all shipments addressed to the Orphanage, care Rob't. W. Vaughan, superintendent, Ruston.

We wish all our friends a happy and joyous Christmas. Sincerely,

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

Our Commissioner of Education, the Rev. T. W. Lewis, makes an earnest appeal in behalf of our Endowment Fund. Will the subscribers to this fund suffer a word of exhortation? This matter is of the very first importance just now. We have in unpaid subscriptions, twenty thousand dollars. If we can collect fifteen thousand by the first of May, it will add thirty thousand to our endowment. Let subscribers take heed. We must expand the scope of our work if we are to meet the urgent demands of a growing institution.

Brother Lewis, with noble devotion to the interests of the college, is serving us without salary. Let everybody help him.

SHE GOT THE DOLLAR.

Marjorie, aged nine, had not been having very satisfactory reports from school. Her father finally said: "Marjorie, for the first hundred you get I'll give you a dollar."

Time went on, and the reward could not be claimed. One day the child was taken violently ill. Her mother sent for the doctor. When he had gone, Marjorie said: "Mamma, am I very ill?"

"No dear; your temperature is a little over a hundred, but the doctor thinks you will be all right in a day or so."

Smiles broke through Marjorie's tears.

"Now, mamma, I can have my dollar. Papa said he would give it to me if I could get a hundred in anything."—Selected.

MINISTERIAL SUPPORT

[illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible] are [illegible] preachers [illegible] have entered upon the work of the new Conference year. Many of them will be in new fields [illegible] own choosing, and among comparative strangers—where they have gone in faith, expecting the good people to whom they are to minister in spiritual things would give them substantial material support.

Under congregational government the pastor and his people fix the salary before he accepts a call, but under our itinerant plan the preacher goes in faith and accepts what the people choose to pay, generally without a murmur, even if the support is meagre.

This submissive spirit of the preacher is sometimes taken advantage of by parsimonious stewards, who are willing for the parsonage household to suffer hardship, thus easing their own consciences with the idea that if poverty tendeth to humility, they "are workers together with God." We believe however that every steward who has read in a prayerful spirit the 8th chapter of Paul's second letter to the Corinthians has seen the beauty of the grace of liberality and believes that the laborer is worthy of his hire, and that the service of a consecrated minister is the most valuable that can be rendered to any community.

Our civilization rests upon the power of the church, and the strength of the church is in its ministry, and the ministry is strongest and most capable as it is freed from anxiety concerning food and raiment.

As the stewards meet to fix the salary of the pastor, let them remember the golden rule and make liberal allowance for his support. If printers, firemen, carpenters and bricklayers are worth three or four dollars a day, surely the man of God who is to minister in holy things, should have at least equal support. The man who is to minister from the pulpit, pray by your firesides, instruct the children, and say the last words over the sainted dead, fills a place and is entitled to a support for which no amount of salary can compensate. Be good to the preacher, be gentle in manner, sympathetic in spirit, earnest in prayer and generous in gifts. Let the officials to a man unite to co-operate with him in all his plans to promote the work and to save the people, and by this unity of effort the powers of darkness will be conquered and Zion will prosper.

The preacher who can keep his horse and buggy in order, wear passably decent clothes, feed his wife and little ones and keep out of debt on $400 a year and go to Conference merry-hearted and thankful, is a true hero and a financier of the highest type. The greatest opportunity for the layman and this Conference is to arouse the brethren to a full sense of the obligation to pay the preacher a living salary, and we make bold to say that there is not a charge in the Conference that could not increase the salaries from 50 to 100 per cent if stewards will first assess themselves liberally and then start with determination and system to raise the balance.

A congregation of two hundred members with limited means paying an average of five cents per member, weekly, will raise $10 a week, which is equivalent to $520 a year, and there is hardly a boy or girl in our church who could not raise 5c a week for the preacher and be made better in character by thus systematically and regularly meeting this claim. Of course, many could pay more, and should. Let the church officials start out with system and then work the system and in a few years the people will be trained in the habit of paying and the problem of church finance will be solved.

Let our stewards prayerfully enter upon the task and continue in it in the fear of God and the results for good will be surprising to preacher and the people, too.—North Carolina Christian Advocate.

SOME CONVICTIONS OF A PRESIDING ELDER.

[illegible] the purpose of this article to answer [illegible] subject [illegible] anything new [illegible] serving his [illegible] presiding elder [illegible] in my mother [illegible] have been at work [illegible] in their [illegible] overcome an evil with silence, though it may sometimes be the better way. There are some in the presiding eldership who are [illegible] these, and some whose fault is not [illegible] being there. [illegible] place is indispensable as any in our system. I have never known a man who filled the office efficiently two years [illegible] thought afterwards that he would be [illegible] more than two years at a time [illegible] presiding in the cabinet. [illegible] to my mind unthinkable for a man to hold that place and carry a grudge against another and be [illegible] in the end, and the man against whom a presiding elder holds a grudge need not lose any sleep. In a cabinet of Southern Methodist preachers the man carrying a grudge will feel the edge of his own weapon. I am saying what I know to be true, notwithstanding contrary opinions. Of course, I know a Bishop with his cabinet may make mistakes, but sure as I live they are mistakes of the head and not of the heart.

I do not believe that a cabinet ever assembled in the history of our church for a week when the Spirit failed to reveal itself. Some of my brethren know what is meant when I speak of those still moments when God speaks to hearts carrying burdens too heavy for mortals alone.

I am going to just whisper something now. It looks to me that if it had not been for our itinerant system that some of us would never have gotten anywhere. I feel in my soul to-day that the humblest place in that part of our Lord's vineyard that we cultivate is good enough for any of us. How some husbandmen do make vines grow on rocky soil! Do the weeds grow sometimes where long-cultivated fields and rich soil have been luxuriant? Even under systems of tyranny there is more in a man than a whole mob with evil designs. As a young man starting in on his fourth year, I want to declare myself in love with all our system and every man in it. I believe in the way we take people into the church. I believe a Bishop should be elected for life, if he can live through it. I believe in the presiding eldership and the whole itinerant system. I believe in the time limit. I believe that God made the color-line and that it is not his will to change it. I believe a true Southern Methodist will go where he is sent and not whine. I suppose as long as one does that he has the right to speak on the subject.

I believe the man who does not believe our doctrines ought to go somewhere else. I believe when the judgment day comes that John Wesley will still be the leader of the mightiest host the sun ever shone upon.

THE BAPTISM OF CHILDREN.

The writer hereof was for forty years a Baptist and twenty years a member of the Baptist Church, and hence opposed to infant baptism; but upon investigation of the doctrine of the Methodist Church as compared with the Baptist, and referring the matter to the Scriptures, he found himself essentially a Methodist.

Looking now upon the question of infant baptism from the viewpoint of parental duty to the child and obedience and reverence to God, there is not another Methodist perhaps in the whole land who is more fully persuaded that it has the sanction and benediction of heaven, and should be esteemed as a holy, God-given privilege and duty.

In God's covenant with Abraham (which was fulfilled in Christ) he ordained that the child should be brought into this covenant by the parent. There was no such thing as waiting for the child to become of age to act for itself or consent. What a glorious privilege! The promises and expectations of God rest upon and follow the parent and child as they walk in his covenant keeping his commandment.

When Moses was to lead the people out of Egypt, he said to Pharaoh by the word of the Lord: "We will go to serve the Lord with our young and with our old, with our sons and daughters." Hence we see that babes were included. Notice Pharaoh, representing the devil, said: "Not so, only the grown folks may go." Let the little ones be left in Pharaoh's (the devil's) territory. Just the way things go now, when we fail to enter into covenant with God and carry our children with us (Ex. 10:9-11).

And when they crossed the Red Sea they crossed [illegible] and were all baptized (I Cor. 10:1, 2)—infants and grown folks—because the babes were carried along by the parents, were baptized by pouring (Ps. 77:15-17). Be it understood we cannot have our child baptized into covenant with God, we must enter into covenant and carry the child.

The child was carried under the blood of the covenant of redemption from Egyptian bondage into the house the night of the Passover in Egypt, and ate of the Passover and ever after ate of the Passover with the parent as long as the parent kept covenant with God, and would now be entitled to the Lord's Supper were the parent walking in covenant with God.

The parent stands in the stead of God to the child, and is responsible to act, speak or answer for the child, and always did until the Corbanites arose and instituted the "Corban" rule, thereby making the commandment of God of none effect. See Mark 7:11.

We see now the spirit of old Corban busy forbidding children to be brought to Christ in covenant for blessings. See Mark 10:13-16.

Dear mother or father, read the first three chapters of I Samuel and see what the Lord did for Hannah and consider your privilege in such matters with the Lord, and note what came to Eli and his sons on account of his neglect of duty to his children.

Note also II Tim. 1:5 and II Tim. 3:14, 15. The Lord God, everywhere he enjoined his covenant upon his people he enjoined the carrying and teaching children his covenant.

And as to the matter of baptizing, you will notice the preacher performs it all anyway, the grown person and the child alike; the grown-up person [illegible] the hands of the preacher just as much as the child in every case of baptism, whether by immersion or affusion. The father and mother are authorized and commanded by the Lord to act and answer for the child. Whenever our church returns as a body to the custom of entering into covenant with God and carrying the children into covenant too, there will be no lack of godly men for every office in the church.—R. F. Watson, in Arkansas Methodist.

The Home Circle.

WHEN WOMAN IS QUEEN.

The wise, pure, human, loving, reverent, womanly woman, gifted in all arts necessary to church loyalty and home fidelity, is a queen. When she looks up she sees nothing between her own unselfish, kindly and gentle soul and the throne of God. Social standards, the result of custom and tradition, may not be altered in a day, nor may they be altered by authority. They may be modified through influences entering into the personal life giving a new value to old standards. Elihu Burritt, the learned blacksmith, turned an anvil into a block of gold, and a hammer into a scepter of power.

Every woman who becomes an expert in domestic service and retains the charm and delicacy of her womanhood, her fine taste and appreciation of literature, becomes a radical and advancing reformer, a woman of the new age, who loses none of the modesty and sweetness of the noblest womanhood of the past. She may serve or direct those who serve; she loses nothing of the glorious kinship to the Christ.

Such an institution as this gives new honor to lowly and lofty, honors cottage and mansion, opens honorable employment to thousands, transforms drudgery into delight, contributes to the charm of the home, puts woman at her best as sister, daughter and mother.

The domestic key-note in a woman's life, to which her real self is attuned, is so much better than when she lives the flippant life of a butterfly in society; though it is not always woman's fault that the standard of her life in society circles is as it is.

There are women of the true stamp, of high ideals, noble aspirations, genuine culture and true unselfishness. They work partly through necessity, partly through philanthropic motives, partly from choice. They never spare themselves. They delight in their work; it is honorable, useful; it honors them, it sets an example; homes are made by it; society is benefited by it.

And here comes along a young man, son of a senator or some other leader of men, and, finding a fair girl in his social circle, is charmed by her beauty and intelligence; but his countenance falls when he finds that she spends hours in her father's kitchen, that she performs household tasks, that she looks upon this as honorable service.

I see him a little later in gay, but idle chatter, with a vivacious, simpering girl, half-dressed, and much bejeweled, and as intelligent as a milliner's "dummy." What does young Algernon care for brains, energy, tact, or household skill and enthusiasm?

The true life is lived by him or her who daily asks: How can I serve somebody, somehow, somewhere?—Bishop Vincent, in Christian Advocate (New York).

PA HELPS JOHN TO RUN AWAY.

BY A BUSINESS MAN.

I had an experience when I was a boy. It was a favorite threat of mine that I'd run away. If I was sent on an errand I didn't like, I'd mutter that I was going to run away; if I was kept in the house for missing my lessons at school, I'd whimper that I was going to run away; if I got my ears boxed for mischief, I'd cry that I was going to run away. Then, maybe, I'd make a dash for my cap and my mother would send me up to the garret without my shoes till I got cooled off, or else she'd lock me up in the tool shed with an ax and a small mountain of logs to split into kindling. We lived in the country, you see.

But at last my father got tired of hearing the threat. I tell you he was a smart man, my father. No licking for him and no counter threats. He had a game of his own. He just waited until he got me committed beyond retreat. I forget what mischief it grew out of, or whether it was just my natural boy's resistance to something I was told to do. Whatever it was, I know I ended up the dispute with the flat-footed announcement, "I'm goin' to leave home an' look out for myself; I'm goin' now. So there!" "Oh, very well, John," said my father, as grave as an owl. "I'm sorry; but if your mind's made up, it can't be helped. We may as well part friends. Come over and see mother;" and with that he took me by the hand as kind and gentle as a patriarch in the Bible, and began walking me over toward the house. I forgot to mention that the fuss was in the barn.

Now you can imagine how my heart rose up in my throat in that short walk over to the house. I had been more or less consciously bluffing, and here I was, it seemed up against the real thing.

About this time we reached the kitchen door, and the old man drew me in. I can see the picture right now before my eyes—my mother with her big blue gingham apron, stirring apples with a wooden spoon in a big copper kettle on the shining stove. Ann Maria, the hired girl, was peeling the potatoes for the men's dinner. My baby brother was sitting in his swing-chair near the door and making grabs at the black cat's tail as it rubbed to and fro against a chair-leg just out of his reach. Oh, it was so peaceful and home-like, and the pungent smell of those apples just went to my gizzard.

Then, says pa, as grave as an old judge, but just as kind and sweet as honey: "Ma," says he, "John has concluded it's best for him to leave home. He's going out into the world to make his fortune, and he's come over to tell you good-by."

"Well, ma," says my father, "I guess we'd best do something to give him a start in life. Just let Ann Maria stir the apples, and you go and make him up a little bundle. He'll want a clean shirt and a pair of socks or two and a couple of handkerchiefs—and bring him his good shoes. And say, ma, you bring me down a dollar bill out of the bureau drawer."

Ma started off as cheerful as could be, and my father turned to me where I stood, frozen with horror, and putting on the fine society air that he usually kept for the dominie and the doctor, he waved me to a chair, politely urging me as if I were already a stranger in the house, with "Sit down, John. Take the rocking chair and rest yourself. You'll need it. Maybe you'll have a long way to go to-day."

He slipped out of the room a few minutes, and then he came back with a loaf and the heel of a Sabbath joint of beef and some butter, and he began cutting the bread and spreading the butter and slicing the beef and making nice, juicy sandwiches with great industry. I looked on with a sick sort of wonder, too crushed even to cry, when ma came hustling back, a choice selection from my wardrobe over her arm and my Testament in her hand. This was an awful stroke. It was so like saying, "He may need them, poor boy!"

"I'm making a few sandwiches for John," said my father, kind o' pathetic like. "He may need them, poor boy," and he heaved a sigh.

This tapped the spring of my soul. I gave a sob that must have sounded like a hiccough and tears began to stream down my face.

But my father was unrelenting. He tied the sandwiches up in a napkin and made a bundle of the clothes with the Testament in the middle, and then he ambled up to me with the bundle in one hand and a nice, crisp dollar bill in the other, holding them with:

"Well, here you are, son John. Maybe this'll give you a fair start in life, and as you must go, why, it's time to be starting now. It's getting on in the morning, and, no doubt, you've a long way to travel before night. So kiss your mother, and—"

But I didn't wait to hear any more. I made a dash for my mother and fell on my knees before her to bury my face in her apron—I was only about 11 or 12, you see—and with sobs and wails and floods of tears I begged her, "Don't send me away! Oh, don't let him send me away! I'll chop the wood and tend baby, and you'll have no trouble with me any more. Only don't send me away from you and pa."

They had some trouble quieting me, and I guess there were almost as many tears on my mother's cheeks as on my own by the time the incident was ended.

Ann Maria was sniveling over the stove, but my father held his ground, grave, but kind. He inaugurated a long parley, in the course of which I promised over and over again that never more would I threaten to run away.

Well, neither did I. If the dangerous words ever came to the tips of my tongue a glance at my father's face, or my mother's, was enough to make me swallow them.—North American.

The way of escape is never by retreat, but by going through to the bitter end in faith and obedience. God has no pleasure in those who weaken and draw back. They lose the grace that is supplied and they fail to gain the victory that is the rich reward of faithful struggles.—Exchange.

HIS NAME SHALL BE CALLED WONDERFUL.

Isaiah, speaking of the coming Messiah, said: "His name shall be called Wonderful." When he came, Isaiah's prophecy was fully justified. Jesus was wonderful.

1. He was wonderful in his birth. It was not by natural generation, but miraculous. God was his Father, the virgin Mary his mother. The announcement to Mary that she should be the mother of the Messiah, "the Son of the Highest," was not only a surprise, but to her a contradiction of all the knowledge she had of human life, and when she earnestly inquired, "How can these things be?" the angel answered: "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God. * * * For with God nothing shall be impossible. And Mary said, Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it unto me according to thy word." The event thus foretold was accomplished in a wonderful way. Summoned by an unexpected decree of Caesar Augustus that "all the world should be taxed," Joseph and Mary hurriedly went to Bethlehem, because they were of the "house and lineage of David." While there, Jesus was born—in a stable, "wrapped in swaddling clothes, and laid in a manger, because there was no room for them in the inn." This was the fulfillment of prophecy, and as lowly as was the birth, it attracted "wise men," who came to do him honor, and likewise of angels who joyfully joined with one accord in singing: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

2. Jesus was wonderful in his life. We know nothing of his infancy. The record is silent concerning him until his twelfth year, when, by reason of circumstances, he made his way into the temple at Jerusalem, and in the midst of the doctors, where none but mature and wise men were wont to assemble. To these august men he not only listened, but asked questions, and such was his wisdom that all who heard "were astonished at his understanding and answers." The record of this wonderful interview closes by saying: "And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." From this time we hear no more of him until he began to be about thirty years of age, when, after baptism by John, and the public approval of the Father, who said, "This is my beloved Son, hear him," he entered [illegible] his great mission. In this mission he first [illegible] the principles of his govern- [illegible] amply illustrate and [illegible] of the gospel [illegible] that he spake as [illegible] such works as [illegible] He healed [illegible] devils and [illegible] This wonderful [illegible] his Father [illegible] became poor [illegible] The foxes [illegible] hath not where to lay his head. [illegible] in his death. He [illegible] death was [illegible] shameful. He was condemned as a malefactor, notwithstanding the trial judge "found no fault in him," and crucified like a common thief, and thieves were his companions in the last hour. His sufferings, like the sufferings of all men, were excruciating. [illegible] we dare believe that by virtue of his exquisite refinement and purity of his life his sufferings were more keenly felt than mortal had ever before experienced. It is a waste of time to inquire why such was the case—why the Father, who loved him so tenderly, allowed him to be so cruelly treated. The day will reveal it. Then it will be known, if it is not known now, that whatever happened to Christ, however shameful or painful, happened by [illegible] decree, and in accordance with the plans and purposes of God, formed before the world began, to bring about the salvation of the human race. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Whether many was worth the cost was God's question, not ours. Whoever died like Jesus? "Socrates," it is said, "died like a philosopher, but Jesus Christ like a God."

4. Jesus was wonderful in his resurrection. The grave could not hold him. He burst the bars of death, and came forth a living conqueror. And with him came life and immortality to men. "Because I live," said Jesus, "ye shall live also." As Christ died and rose from the dead, so shall men die, and those who die in the Lord shall have a part in the first resurrection. Glorious hope!

We celebrate the birth of our blessed Lord this happy season. Let us remember that he asks us not only to praise him, but to work for him, and extend his gospel to the ends of the earth. Amen.

OUR ORPHANAGES.

Southern Methodists identified with this Advocate have two Orphanages, one at Ruston, belonging to the Louisiana Conference, the other at Jackson, Miss., belonging to the two Conferences in that State. Both are doing Christlike work, and both need help at this very moment. The Louisiana is the more needy by reason of the fact that it has just begun its work in an unfinished building. The one at Jackson is embarrassed, though more than ten years old, by reason of the fact there is not room enough to accommodate the ever-increasing number of orphans who apply for admission.

No nobler charity appeals to our people. The cry of the orphan is always going up to our Heavenly Father. He hears. All who help these little ones are answering God's demand, and cooperating with him. Heretofore our people have generously responded to every call. And the calls continue to come. It could not be otherwise. What the people contribute is not invested or put out at interest. Save what is spent in real estate, building, etc., it is really a sinking fund. It is consumed in feeding and clothing the children. It requires a great deal of money and means to feed and clothe from one hundred to one hundred and thirty children. It goes without saying, therefore, that as the orphanages are not endowed, the churches must continue to contribute to their support. Do not let that fact be forgotten.

Let every Methodist in Louisiana and Mississippi remember the orphans on Christmas day. Brethren and sisters, one and all, lay aside the value of your Christmas dinner and send the amount to your little orphans. We hope Brother Vaughan at Ruston and Brother Williams at Jackson will hear from hundreds of you during Christmas week.

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY.

Several Annual Conferences, beginning with the Tennessee, have passed resolutions asking the General Conference to definitely determine the relation of Vanderbilt University to the Church, and thereby set at rest the question now agitating our people, who fear that a plan is on foot to wrest the University from the Church's control. The plan, or purpose, it is believed, is inspired by the idea in the minds of some that the Church does not own the institution. An attempt has been made to allay fear by saying the excitement is "all a hubbub"—a "tempest in a teapot." There is, indeed, a tempest, not in a teapot, but in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The tempest should be speedily stilled.

The agitation began as far back as four years, and at the General Conference of 1906 a commission composed of three lawyers of the highest standing was appointed to investigate and settle the contention. They went fully into the matter—not only of the relation of the Church, but also that of the Bishops to the University. The report of the commission was made about one year ago. It sustained every contention of those who held that the Church owned the University. The report held also that the relation of the Bishops to the University was that of "Visitor," which means that they are far more than mere onlookers or advisers.

The report of the commission was not satisfactory to Dr. Kirkland, the Chancellor of the University, but, judging from his subsequent action, he could see no way to escape its conclusions except through the aid of the State. Accordingly, he framed, or caused to be framed, a bill, and vigorously advocated it before the Legislature, which bill, had it passed, would have so far enlarged the power of the Board of Trust as to allow the University's funds to be used in a direction never intended by the donors nor the Church. And the control of the University would have so far been wrested from the Church as to allow the faculty of the institution, excepting perhaps the theological faculty, to be put on the Carnegie pension fund. And this "give-away bill," as it is called, was endorsed by Dr. G. B. Winton, editor of the Christian Advocate (Nashville).

If the facts are as here related, it is not at all strange that Methodists, who have so long thought Vanderbilt University to be the property of the Church, should be agitated. They would be criminally indifferent were they not. But Dr. Winton, of Nashville, and Dr. Anderson, of Arkansas, have said there is no ground for so much excitement. What Dr. Kirkland thinks has not been made public. Why, then, we may ask, have the Conferences, a full half-dozen or more, passed resolutions expressive of their fears, and memorialized the General Conference to set the matter at rest? Are these Conferences utterly ignorant, or are they misled by ambitious and designing men? It is not reasonable that whole Conferences should be stampeded by a jack-o'-lantern. The Conferences are not ignorant, nor are they tools in the hands of schemers. They see danger, and the longer the day of settlement is postponed the more reason they have to fear.

In this connection we note this: that while Methodists fear there is a purpose to alienate the University from the church and secularize it, men of other churches, and of no church, have expressed the fear that the contemplated Peabody Training School, which some of the Peabody trustees hoped to locate on the Vanderbilt campus, would be dominated by Vanderbilt University. This fear—or the excitement occasioned by it—was so strong as to cause the Davidson County Court to order the payment of the money voted by the county held up until the matter could be settled. Did the county court take fright at "a tempest in a teapot?"

All suspicion and all fear of danger can be allayed by Dr. Kirkland. He can give assurance, and restore confidence in less than a dozen words. If he cannot, or will not, then the Board of Trust should at once do so. Nothing short of assurance of complete church ownership and control will satisfy those who, as Dr. Winton and others intimate, are needlessly excited over this matter.

Church ownership assured, something else should follow. The General Conference, which has original jurisdiction, should require the Bishops of the Church to exercise their authority as visitors; and, in doing so, they should not only inquire into the character and qualifications of every man nominated for a professorship, but into his church relations, and allow no man to occupy a place in the faculty who does not acknowledge that the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, owns the University, and of right should control it. We go further, and say, No man should be allowed a place on the Board of Trust who is not a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

The Church is intensely stirred on this subject, and does not intend to surrender either her ownership or control of Vanderbilt University. Nothing short of the strong arm of the law can wrest it from her hands.

PERSONAL.

Dr. Jno. T. Sawyer has been on the sick list ever since adjournment of Conference—came home with a case of Lagrippe, and is still abed. We hope the disease will soon yield to treatment.

Brother B. B. Cleneay, of Maurepas, La., made a pleasant call at the ADVOCATE office this week. He expressed his appreciation at the sound doctrine embodied in the ADVOCATE editorials, for which we thank him.

Rev. J. W. McGee, chaplain of the Mississippi State Penitentiary, while in the city last week took occasion to visit the ADVOCATE. The editor was not in the office, but he was greeted by others of the ADVOCATE, who are always glad to see their friends.

Rev. J. A. B. Jones, senior member of the Mississippi Conference, and on the "roll-of-honor," writes us that on the 14th of this month he entered "the sanitarium in Brookhaven for treatment." The nature of his affliction he does not state. We trust it is nothing serious.

We thank Rev. R. W. Tucker, presiding elder of the Ruston District, for kind words, as we leave the ADVOCATE. During four years past we have enjoyed the friendship of Brother Tucker. When on the Baton Rouge District, he was often in our home, and always a welcome guest.

Rev. W. G. Harbin has been taking a rest from his evangelistic labors. He has spent some weeks at his home in Haynesville, La., but in a short time he will be in the field again for another year of revival work. His mail all goes to Haynesville, La.

While at the Mississippi Conference we missed the familiar face of our friend and co-laborer, Rev. R. T. Nolen. We feared something was the matter. A note from him, in connection with a subscription as usual, informs us that he was sick and unable to attend. On Dec. 10, the date of his letter, he was still abed, and unable to sit up, but improving—"hoped to be up in a day or two."

Rev. H. P. Lewis, of the Mississippi Conference, after active service, extending over fifty-two years, at his own request, retired to the ranks of the superannuates. The remainder of his days will be spent in Jackson, Miss., with his children who love him devotedly. May his last days be his happiest and best. Brother Lewis has seen much hard service, his record is one of faithfulness and heroism. He has fought well, and deserves well at the hands of the Church.

Rev. E. L. Whiddon, of the Mississippi Conference, and Miss Mary Ratcliff, of Brookhaven, were married Tuesday evening, Dec. 15, 1909, by Rev. H. M. Ellis. We wish the happy pair all the blessings that fall to this life. After visiting a few days with friends, they will go to Walnut Grove, to which place Brother Whiddon has just been appointed. The bride will get a taste of the itinerancy at the very beginning of her entrance into the ranks, as they will make a trip across the country of about one hundred miles in a private conveyance.

We clip from the Crystal Springs Meteor: "Dr. I. W. Cooper preached his farewell sermon last Sunday. During his short incumbency of the Methodist pulpit he delivered many fine sermons which were appreciated and appropriated by those who heard them. The Meteor voices the wishes of all Methodists when it extends Dr. Cooper thanks for his coming to the relief of the church and serving it with such ability without cost. His self-sacrifice is thoroughly understood and appreciated and is always and ever shown in his devotion to Methodism."

Rev. R. P. Neblett, writing from Columbus, Miss., Dec. 20, says: "Rev. A. P. Leech, one of the honored superannuates of our Conference, who resides in Columbus, has been sick since his return from the Conference, at Okolona. He seems to have taken a deep-seated cold, and is now suffering much from indigestion. Though suffering very much, he appreciates the visits of his pastor and talks about the work of the church as if he expected to live a hundred years. He sends cheerful greetings to all the brethren. Let him not be forgotten at a throne of grace."

We have been informed that Rev. A. C. Holder has closed a successful year as pastor at Leesville, La., reporting 101 new members, everything in full, with $114 excess on foreign missions and over $4,000 for all purposes. He received 220 members at Shreveport last year, and in four of the years he has labored as pastor-evangelist has seen over 2500 conversions. Notwithstanding he received a salary of $1,500 with other emoluments, making over $2,000 and the Bishop was anxious to place him at an important station, he was located at his own request to devote his time to revival work. Correspondents will address Brother Holder at Shreveport, La.

A Virginia Conference correspondent, writing to the North Carolina Christian Advocate, after naming the delegation to the General Conference, clerical and lay, says of the laymen: "This is a strong delegation of excellent men, well distributed over the State, and will make things go, since they represent a mixture of money, dry goods, law, tobacco and gas." And the Conference passed the following resolution (whether before or after the election is not stated): "Resolved, That the Virginia Conference petition the Legislature, at its next session, to enact a law prohibiting men talking themselves and other people to death." "It went through with a vim."

The Pantagraph, of Iuka, Miss., has nothing but the highest praise for Rev. O. L. Savage, who has served Iuka faithfully for the past two years, and now goes to Guntown. It says: "He is a Christian gentleman of the highest type, scholarly, refined in every sentiment, and faithful to the duties of his charge. We think a large majority of his flock had become warmly attached to the brother, and regret that his duties call him elsewhere. The church here has increased its membership one-third during the two years of his pastorate. We commend him and his family to the best hospitality and brotherly affection of the people of Guntown." A good member of his church, who sent us the clipping, tells us that the loss to Iuka is gain to others.

On learning that Rev. W. H. Saunders would leave Gloster, (Miss.) for another field, the Record of that place, thus expressed itself: "Our citizens in general, and the members of the Methodist Church, are expressing regrets that the Annual Conference of the Methodist Church has seen fit to send Rev. W. H. Saunders who has served our people so acceptably for two years, to other fields. He and family will ever have the best wishes of friends here." The Tri-County News, of the same place, said: "We are indeed sorry and disappointed that Brother Saunders will leave us, but he tells us that Rev. W. H. Huntley, one of the best preachers in the Conference has been put in his place. He is well educated; has a natural grace of manner and speech, and withal a most pleasant and affable gentleman. The Gloster people will be greatly pleased. Brother Saunders goes to Vicksburg, Washington Street." Thus the outgoing and the incoming pastor has the good will of the community.

GOD BLESS YOU ALL.

I have tried to preach several times from the text: "Let brotherly love continue" and saw each time a wealth of truth most helpful, but since our immeasurable sorrow by the tragic death of our dear son, John Ritchey, we have had a fuller exposition of this Scripture in the constant stream of love and sympathy poured into our hearts by many, many sweet, comforting letters received by the hundred from this and other States. What a strength you have afforded me. I love you, every one, and may God bless you all, and let brotherly love continue.

Very gratefully,

BEN P. AND MRS. N. B. JACO.

THE PREACHER AND HIS NEW CHARGE.

Advice is cheap, and there are few who have not an abundance of this commodity on the market. However, this is a time for the people and their pastors to listen to the wise ones who always have something to say. Last week the Advocate indulged in some animadversions as to how the people should receive the new pastor as well as the old one. Now we shall venture to even up by giving the pastors their portion in due season.

First of all, a pastor should go to his charge in a cheerful spirit. If one finds that he cannot go thus, it would be better for all that he decline to go at all. Going thus is an admission that one is pleased. A man, however, should be able to exercise such mastery over self as to maintain a cheerful spirit, even though the prospects are not pleasing. One who cannot command and maintain the grace of cheerfulness among those to whom he is sent is a rather poor exponent of the gospel he has come to preach. Besides, the preacher should not forget that whatever mistake may have been made or whatever just grievance he may have, the people to whom he goes are in no sense to blame for it. They are innocent of being in any sense a party to a scheme to afflict him.

To go there in a cheerful spirit is to find at once a way into the hearts of the people and to inspire in them the purpose to do all possible to make the ministry of the man a great success. Look forward with hope if you would have the best success. He who allows the line of his vision to fall lower than the horizon will find himself walking uncertainly. So far as the mere matter of financial support is concerned, the financial tables of last year are a very poor criterion by which to judge any charge. There is no place where there is not an almost boundless reserve and nothing will so effectually solve the vexatious problem of support as taking hold of the work and continuing in it with a cheerful, hopeful spirit. In this matter one can effectually test the words of the Lord, "He that will save his life shall lose it, and he that will lose his life for my sake the same shall find it."

Our next suggestion is that the pastor should get to his work promptly. "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick." This is true in nothing more than in the matter of disappointing the people by coming up tardy in the beginning. There has been great improvement in this respect in recent years, and it is now a rare thing for a pulpit to be vacant even for one Sunday.

The power to adjust oneself to the situation is a wondrous help to the pastor. Some things are sure to be found not as they ought to be, and there is always opportunity, if not strong temptation, to criticise. A preacher should never forget that people are sensitive about such matters, and that to find fault is a perilous thing. Let him wait till, by his cheerful, patient and Christlike example among them, he has established himself in their affections, then he can tell them what they ought to do. Many a man has failed utterly in a charge for no other reason than that he prefaced his year's work by unstinting criticisms of what he thought wrong in the new charge.

The conclusion of the whole matter is that every pastor, in a new charge or old one, needs to be clothed continually with the grace of patience and abundant common sense.

Men who rushed after the novelties that were announced are now ashamed of their folly and are defending the basic truths of revealed religion. A striking illustration of this [illegible] the recent views of Dr. Gordon concerning the miracles of the Bible. Even his great name will not make the book popular and his former friends will not stand for his recent views. Men are more surprised at what he attempts to prove than they are disturbed about his having overturned the record which has been given.

There are so many things that to-day have multiplied believers that were once said to have been destroyed, that men are beginning to be undisturbed and unafraid whenever a man appears with a theory that claims to upset a long established and fundamental truth of the Word of God. Christianity has not been banished from the world nor will it be in the far future.

There is such a thing as winning by not fighting—a truth that is admirably set forth by the Sunday School Times in a recent editorial, which we quote as follows:

"A great scientist says that persistence is the sign of reality. And a few great simple doctrines of the New Testament have demonstrated their reality by persistence through the fluctuations of two thousand years. Today men think to prove their reality by sudden forays into public [illegible] and by [illegible] higher than [illegible] propaganda [illegible] and [illegible] afterwards [illegible] what has become of them? They [illegible] but they lack that sign of reality [illegible] humanity [illegible] characteristic [illegible] by being [illegible] when the other programmes are forgotten. The [illegible] in the beginning [illegible] sense [illegible] thing [illegible] whether there [illegible] a great deal [illegible] a different [illegible] captivated [illegible] that [illegible] patient waiting and persistence than in [illegible] assaults. Caleb furnishes a [illegible] example [illegible] a man [illegible] and [illegible] the source of his strength. When he came back from the mission in which he [illegible] the majority of [illegible] were against [illegible] to take [illegible] that [illegible] sentiment was [illegible] the minority. We are able, he said, [illegible] the land; and with a sort of humor [illegible] the Lord will make them [illegible] that are [illegible] are the words as we have them in the King James version—[illegible] the Lord his word [illegible] No weapon formed against the truth shall prosper, and [illegible] and who have therefore [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible] tabernacle [illegible]—Western Christian Advocate.

SAMUEL COLDWELL, son of S. W. D. and Lennie Coldwell, was born in Pontotoc County, Dec. 5, 1890, and died Oct. 16, 1909. Sammie was a dutiful and obedient son, and until a short time before his death he bid fair to live a long time, but disease took hold of him and the physicians were unable to arrest it, and Sammie passed out, the first of eleven brothers and sisters, just as he was entering young manhood. Thus we see the brightest hopes may be blighted. Let the young give themselves to God in early life, and thus be ready at any time for the end. D. W. BABB.

The angel of death visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Will Henderson, Dec. 11, 1909, and claimed for its victim the person of little FRANCIS OLIVE. This dear little one was permitted to shed sunshine into the home and joy into the hearts of her father and mother only seven short months. But, what pleasure! What joy to those hearts. But now she is gone from them; the little cradle is empty; but we know she is a bright little jewel in heaven, for God hath said, "Suffer the children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Amid the gloom and rain we laid the precious little body in Oakville Cemetary to await the resurrection morn. May God's richest blessings abide with the grief-stricken father and mother.

Beckoning hands of a little one, see.
Baby voice calling, O mother for thee.
Rosy-cheeked darling, the light of the home.
Taken so early, is beckoning, Come.

THOMAS JEFFERSON BROWN was born Oct. 28, 1833 near Holmesville, Miss., and died at Mt. Pelier, La., June 18, 1909. He was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South in 1855. He was married to Miss Marian Grubbs, in 1855. He was left a widow with five children. In 1870 he was married again to Mrs. Pernees Bullock, who bore him two sons. Brother Brown was a man who lived his religion in his home. I can say he has left some noble sons and daughters, who stand by the Church and community. "He was a Methodist of the old type." He was always glad to see his preacher. He taught his children to be good and true. He was laid to rest in Pine Grove Cemetery June 19, by a large crowd of friends and relatives. It was not the privilege of the writer to be with him in his last hours, but am told that he died in peace. May the Lord comfort the bereaved companion and children, and may they so live as to meet him in that land of rest, where pain and death are felt and found no more.

His pastor, H. C. MURPHY.

PAUL, son of Dr. Paul A. and Mrs. Kate M. Lawrence, was born Feb. 5, 1901, and died Oct. 30, 1909. Paul was an exceedingly bright little fellow, and a sweeter disposition was perhaps never given by the Father to one of his children. He was obedient and affectionate as a son; sweetly disposed toward brothers and sister, and a perfect little gentleman toward everyone. Though he was yet young in years, he was beginning to learn that lesson that many elder and wiser, have not yet learned, but which was said to be the beginning of wisdom—loving the Lord. Our little brother did not grapple with that grim monster for long, but long enough to win victory over it. On Thursday he was learning the lesson of development in earth's school; the following Saturday he was in that great school above, learning more perfectly that beautiful lesson of love to God, and praises to the Lamb. Weep not, parents, as for one that was lost, but if you weep, let it be for more love to God, who has accounted you worthy to be the parents of an angel. And may you, his brothers and sister, who have been so accustomed to the companionship and merry greetings of Paul, ever strive forward toward the goal of man. "There beside the pure stream of life, having been bathed in its waters, 'till all have been made immortal," is your playmate, your friend, your angel brother.

HENRY T. YOUNG.

On the evening of Oct. 2, 1909, there passed from earth to heaven, the soul of Mrs. T. B. SIMS. Her departure was sudden and unexpected; and to us it seemed untimely, for though she had not been in real good health for some time, yet no one thought that the end was so near. Mrs. Sims, who was Miss Virginia Beatrice Jones, daughter of Dr. Jesse S. Jones, was born near Hagansville, Ga., March 1, 1875. On June 28, 1894, she was married in holy matrimony to Mr. T. B. Sims, also of Hagansville. This union was blessed with four children, three of whom survive. At the age of twelve, Mrs. Sims gave her heart to God, and united with the Baptist Church, but later in life she joined the Methodist Church, of which she was a member at the time of her death. In testimony to the merits of this good and choice woman, we scarcely know what to say. Her virtues were so many, and if she had any faults, we know not what they were. In disposition, she was retiring and modest, but not excessively so. Hers was that modesty that bespeaks purity of thought and whiteness of character. In manners she was always gentle and pleasing. In speech she was thoughtful and charitable. She had something good to say about everyone. These admirable traits of character won her many friends, in fact, all who knew her could not but love her. She was a devoted wife, a true mother, a good woman. Her sad and sudden death cast a gloom over the whole town. Our deepest sympathy goes out to these little boys, to the grief-stricken parents, sister and to the heart-broken husband. May the loving Father above, according to his infinite mercy comfort and sustain them. J. A. HALL.

BOOK REVIEWS.

The House of Chinham. By Edgar Whitaker Work. Published by the American Tract Co., 150 Nassau St., New York City.

This is a beautiful little book of 55 pages built upon historical facts and legends and filled in with a setting of fancy and sentiment. It carries an interesting legend of the inn where Jesus was born, back to the days of David. It makes a very pleasant evening's reading. It is peculiarly fitting to the Christmas season.

A Southerner in Europe. By Clarence H. Poe. Published by the Mutual Publishing Co., Raleigh, N. C. Price $1.00.

This is a very profitable book of travel in which the reader is introduced to great facts and historic settings, rather than wearied with so many miles of travel, and the dull diary of successive days. He starts with the thought that Europe is not a foreign country, but our old home, and he goes back to learn how things are done at home, and find out wherein we have failed to do the best, and wherein we have improved on the homeland. The contrasts are picturesque, forcible and sometimes humiliating. It is a book that any thoughtful man will read with zest.

Francis Asbury, a Biographical Study, by Rev. H. M. DuBose, D.D., Published by Smith & Lamar, Nashville, Tenn. Price $1.00.

This is the first of a series of historical and biographical studies of the eminent leaders of early Methodism, to be prepared by the leaders in present-day Methodism. This book wonderfully reveals the heart of this remarkable man of apostolic labor. It takes him from the lowly surroundings of his early life, and traces his mental and spiritual growth to the position that he held by weight of character and force of spiritual life, in the hearts of the fathers of American Methodism. It is something far more that a mere diary of travels, and record of hardships. It is a life-story of the man, whose visions were more than fulfilled, and whose dreams for his church were not equal to the realities attained. Yet Francis Asbury seemed a visionary to many, and he expected the Lord to do things for America and Methodism, which few men of his day deemed possible.

THE BIBLE SOCIETY'S ENDOWMENT BULLETIN NO. 7.

One hundred and sixty-three thousand dollars still remain to be subscribed before Dec. 31, 1909, in order to secure Mrs. Russell Sage's offer of $500,000 and create the Endowment Fund of $1,000,000. $337,000 have been paid in or subscribed.

Seventy-four thousand dollars have been added since the issue of Bulletin No. 6. The largest gift included in this sum is $10,000, given by a generous donor. Widespread and growing interest appears in the subscriptions daily received. A gift hardly less notable than the one just mentioned is $5 from a missionary in Korea; another five-dollar gift is from an aged Grand Army Veteran of small means in Ohio, who has been a contributor to the Society since 1849; a church in the New England States composed of Armenian immigrants from Turkey sends $11 for the fund because, as the pastor remarks, they know what they owe to the Bible Society. In answer to a special appeal for a Christmas Dollar, from every State in the Union letters bring gifts from one or two dollars up to one thousand dollars.

The subscribers of $1,000 or more now number twenty-five men and twenty women. But the goal is not yet reached.

LAYMEN AND THE APPOINTMENTS.

We believe that the laymen have a right to say to the presiding elders and to the Bishop of an Annual Conference what they judge best for the charge to which they belong. We know of no law that forbids this, but this does not mean that they have a right to demand of the Bishop that he shall do a certain thing which they desire to have done. Nor does it mean that they are absolved from the obligation to stand by the man for whom they did not ask if it so happens that the appointing power does not give them the man for whom they have asked. The man sent is their man and according to the law of the Church they should stand by him and help to do the work. It would not be unlawful or an unbecoming thing for the laymen who wish to interview the Bishop to let their respective presiding elders know what they have asked of the Bishop. We have known harm to come where the laymen have been begging the Bishop to do a thing of which the presiding elders had no knowledge. Our observation has been that in most cases the appointments have been more wisely made where the matter has been left to the constituted authority for making them.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

A CHRISTMAS GIFT FOR YOUR PASTOR.

By A Reader of the Review.

Doubtless at this glad Christmas season of the year everybody who has a good, faithful pastor thinks of him and wants to gladden and encourage his heart by some expression of appreciation and sympathy. You would like at the same time to do this in some way that will be of substantial benefit to him as well as a help and inspiration to his ministry. But it is really a difficult problem to think of a present that would meet all these ends. There is probably nothing that would so surely and effectually do this as to make him a Christmas gift of a year's subscription to the Methodist Review. On all hands those who know the Review—the editors, the connectional officers, the pastors, the presiding elders, the Bishops, and the laymen—agree that it is one of the freshest, livest, most stimulating, most informing, and in every way most helpful of all the journals of this day of multiplied high-class journals and magazines. It is especially so for the preacher, and most especially so for the pastor in Southern Methodism.

Moreover, this Christmas gift is not exhausted during Christmas week, but it will spread its benefits and its blessing throughout the livelong year.

HER DUTY

"I feel it my duty," writes Mrs. Martha Dingus, of Lykins, Ky., "to inform you what Cardui has done for me. I have been a chronic invalid for years. I reckon I have had about every ailment that women are heir to. I have doctored a great deal with a great many doctors, as we have traveled a great deal in search of health, yet received but little benefit and got no better.

"Four months ago I commenced to use Cardui, and since then have been steadily improving all the time. I am now 46 years old, and am in better health than I have been in 20 years, and I give Cardui the credit for it."

Cardui has been known, during the past 50 years, as a reliable, effective remedy, for the ailments peculiar to women. It is a pure, non-intoxicating preparation, made exclusively from vegetable ingredients, having a special, curative effect on the female system. Cardui has been found to relieve pain and restore disordered functions to health.

If you're ill, don't wait until you have suffered for years before taking Cardui to relieve you. Isn't it your duty to spare yourself this pain? Get Cardui at once. All reliable druggists sell it.

THE COMING OF THE REDEEMER CHRISTMAS SERVICE.

Matt. ii:1. Num. xxiv:17. Jer. xxiii:5.

Into the streets of Jerusalem came wise men from the East [illegible] Jerusalem ages ago. They asked for the one that was born King of the Jews. They said that they had seen his Star in the East and were come to worship him. The rumor of the strange garb and words of these men filled Jerusalem. The word made its way into the palace and disturbed the heart of Herod. In his insane jealousy there was no cruelty that he would not commit, no length that would not go, to put out of his way any possible rival for his throne. He sent for these strange messengers, and found that they were seeking the birth-place of the King so strangely revealed to them. When Herod called the chief priests and scribes of Jerusalem they all agreed that the Messiah should be born in Bethlehem, and thither the strangers made their way. Then appeared to them the Star which they had seen in the East. And when they found the child they fell down and worshipped him. They made their presents to him, and went their ways.

Why were the leaders of Israel so confident as to the birth-place of the Messiah? Through ages the Hebrew prophets had been adding prophecy to prophecy as to the coming of the Messiah. They had even marked the very place where he should be born. "And thou Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda: for out of thee shall come a governor that shall rule my people, Israel." The ages had been long and generation had given place to generation, but with patience Israel had waited and believed that the King should come at length.

There are exceeding great and precious promises committed to us, and each Christmas-tide, but impresses them afresh upon our hearts. As the heralds of old brought their gifts to the Master's feet, at this season, so we too should bring our gifts to him. But as we may not see him face to face we should give our gifts to those that will most please the Christ. There is not very much of the real Christmas spirit in the gifts to those from whom we expect like return. But the Christ spirit will impel us to give to those who need, and so to give that the offering can be received without humiliation. We should give to those around us, where we can spread the Christmas spirit and make men feel glad that the Christ ever came among men. The season should be to us one of gladness and good cheer on every side.

The Great Antiseptic.

Royaline Oil, made by the Royaline Medicine Co., of New Orleans, La., is as truly antiseptic as any remedy can be, being composed of a number of the best antiseptic ingredients known to the materia medica. In addition, it is a good pain medicine and therein has an advantage over other antiseptics, being of greater strength. A test of this can be made in the case of severe pain. Equally useful for man or beast. Price 25c. a bottle. Druggists.

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property-holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city, not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property-holders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically no outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co., for a detailed explanation.

LESSON FOR DECEMBER 26, 1909.

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST.

Matt. ii:1-12.

Golden Text: "And thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins." Matt. i:21.

Scripture began to be fulfilled in the advent of the Savior of mankind, when Jesus was born in Bethlehem. Jesus was the chosen seed of Israel's race, but there was, at the time of Jesus' birth, reigning as king, a descendant of Edom. Herod was an Edomite, and his claim to the kingship was realized by other means than the established succession as prescribed by the Jewish law: thus a descendant of Esau was in possession of the forfeited blessing which by right belonged to Jacob. The first worshipers that came to seek him that was born King of the Jews, traveled from the East, perhaps from Near Ur of the Chaldees, where Abram received his call from God. It was there the children of Judah were taken captive, and they took with them their faith in God, and taught their children that some day deliverance would come. In that same country the teachings of Ezra the great scribe were held sacred, second only to Moses and it might have been that these wise men that came so far seeking the Messiah, were descendants of those captive Jews that ever looked westward for deliverance. They may have searched deep in Scripture and tradition, yet there was still a longing of the soul that they knew not how to satisfy. God has so created man that he must seek after him, and have his mind stayed on him, that he may be kept in perfect peace.

There was another whose spirit of unrest became alert when he knew the objective of the wise men's long journey. King Herod in the palace, and all Jerusalem with him, was troubled from the birth of a little babe, for whom there was no room save in a manger. So troubled was the king that he called those that were familiar with the writings of the prophets, and demanded of them where the Christ should be born. To find the Christ in those days, and in all time, is to search the Scripture. The learned men quoted to the king that part of Micah where it reads that Bethlehem would be the birthplace of him "that shall rule my people."

Then Herod called to the wise men to question them about the Star they had seen, for he wished to place the material evidence in conjunction with the spiritual, in order that this menace to his power be proved real or imaginary. He believed it was real, and he sent the travelers to Bethlehem, knowing in his heart that there they would find the great object of their search. They went as they were directed, and on their way beheld the Star that had been their guide, was still leading, leading on until it came and stopped and remained over the place where the infant Jesus lay. Then this was he that was born a king, did doubt make them look up to that Star which when they saw they were glad?

O what a precious memory we have of the means by which we were led to worship our King! In the gladness of their hearts these great men opened their treasure and made presents to the "Prince of Peace" as befitted his station. It was enough, they had seen the King, and they turned to their homeward journey, but not by the way they had come, "another way" was directed them in a dream, for they were "warned of God" not to see King Herod again.

They had much to tell at the homeward end of their journey, much that had transpired which had been told them and which they must have believed. Shepherds had come in from the hill country where they had been watching their sheep, and had told to all that would hear, of how in the darkest hours that comes just before dawn, the long looked for announcement had been made to them by an angel from heaven. They were afraid at the sight of the angel, but his first words came to them gently assuring them: "Fear not" said the angel "For unto you is born this day, in the City of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." then followed the eternal anthem of praise as sung by the multitude of the heavenly host, which had suddenly appeared: they sang the song they had learned in heaven: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth, peace and good-will toward men." What a wonderful message brought to earth by angels from heaven. What glorious part is ours that we can tell it, for it is true today as it was the first day when sung, and echoed among the hills of Judea.

"I love to tell the story, for those who know it best,
Seem hungering and thirsting to hear
 it like the rest."

Then at this sweet Christmas time let us tell the story of Jesus and his great love, his love that knows no bounds, but gathers in all the children of his Father.

Tell them of a joy in heaven, eternal present, the past fulfilled and if a future it is an ever-approaching nearness to the Father. Tell the story to the fathers and mothers, that God sent from heaven a message of love, sent it by his only Son, a message of love to the world: that he gave us our children that in our love for them we can learn his love for us. Christmas future will be as Christmas present, awe abiding in his love. Then the Christmas past that makes one more mile-stone on their way, and takes its place with the many that have come and gone: the aged servant of Christ is near the borderland, he can almost see the house of many mansions, yet his heart is full of joy on this Christmas present, for he can testify of God's love, of the time when Jesus was born in his heart, and of all the promises of God there hath never failed one, saying with assurance felt, "God bless us every one." We come bringing the gold of loyalty to our King. We bring the Myrrh of humanity, for he became man that he might be touched with the feeling of our infirmities. We bring the frankincense, that our unceasing prayer be offered up by a high priest forever after the order of Melchisedek.

ATTENTION.

TOBACCO—THE EXPERIENCE OF AN OLD MAN.

Many mile-stones along the pathway of life have been passed since I first subscribed for and read the dear old CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. The third of last March, I passed my seventy-sixth mile-stone along the way. I am still subscribing for and reading it. In the issue of Nov. 4th, I noticed Brother H. P. Lewis' article, under the caption of "A Needed Legislation," and if the good editor will allow, I would like to say I think any good legislation for either church or State can be wisely and profitably applied at any time, as I think any truly Christian man, whether he be a minister or layman, can and will quit doing wrong, if he is thoroughly convinced of the wrong. None but those who, like Ephriam "joined to his idols" would persist. This I know from sad experience; for I commenced using tobacco when nothing but a child. I used it for more than sixty years, with the exception of a few short intervals. I will give a short sketch of my experience, hoping it may help some one who is trying or expecting to try to quit. The longest period, until I quit for good, was twelve months, and I was almost a terror to myself and family. During the time every nerve in me seemed to be unstrung. There was little rest for me or my family day or night when I was awake. I asked my dear wife what I should do when the time was out. She said: "Get some tobacco." Then it seemed that I could never get a satisfaction any more, but all these years never could kill the conviction that I was doing wrong, for I hardly remember ever kneeling in either public or private to pray, that tobacco was not about the first thing to rise up to condemn me, but in 1897 I decided to quit it, if I should die in the attempt, and it seemed that the devil, with his combined forces, came to try to defeat me. I was in a horrible fix. But I was determined to fight the battle single-handed and alone, if I did not get help. The fourth night after I had quit, as I was undressing to retire to bed, I prayed to God a prayer something like this: "Oh, Lord, if this is a thing that would shut me out of heaven, I will quit it, if it kills me, and I want help." I laid down, not knowing what the consequence might be. I woke up at 2 o'clock, and, to my joy and delight, I found every nerve in me as quiet as a sleeping baby, with every desire for tobacco and coffee gone, and they have never returned, and I never expect the desire to return any more, for he spares me still, and tells me in his holy Word that he is able to do abundantly and above all that we can think or ask.

Yours in his name,

AN OLD ADVOCATE READER.

AT HOLLY SPRINGS.

Dear Advocate: Brother O. W. Bradley and his good wife are with us and duly installed at the parsonage. Yesterday he was greeted by a big snow and as a result not so large a congregation. But it turned out luckily. He did not hold service in the main auditorium but in the Sunday school room below. Before service a sort of informal "acquaintance meeting" was had and a right happy crowd we were, all meeting and greeting the preacher and his wife. It seemed to clear away whatever of stiffness the coming of a new man might bring to his work. We all got close together right at the start. He gave us a fine talk, somewhat "ex cathedra" you see, from John 1:42, and before he finished we all felt rather sorry that we had ever in our lives criticised the impetuous Peter. We all rather felt like Peter was a great big Methodist who did big things at the right time but who some times, rather "fell from grace." Brother Bradley has made a good start. We are proud up here that we are Methodist. We like that little story which runs thus: Three men, a Baptist, a Presbyterian and a Methodist, were talking. The Methodist happened to be an Irishman. The Presbyterian asked the Baptist that if he were not a Baptist what would he be, to which the reply was "I would be a Presbyterian." The Baptist then asked the Presbyterian that if he were not a Presbyterian what would he be and the Presbyterian replied "I would be a Baptist." They then turned to Pat and said "Pat if you were not a Methodist what would you be?" True to his Irish instinct he replied, "Begorry, I'd be ashamed of it." We were all hoping and praying for a good year. With Cunningham and Bradley at the bat we ought to do well. Come to see us, Mr. Editor.

A MISSIONARY CRUISE.

During the summer of 1910, a party of Americans will cruise in the Mediterranean to visit American colleges, missions and hospitals in the Near East. They will use the handsome steam yacht "Athena" to visit Macedonia, Turkey, Asia Minor and Syria. Conferences with missionaries are arranged in Constantinople, Smyrna, Beirut and Cairo in Egypt. The party will have sufficient leisure to enjoy the art of Greece, the inspiration of the Holy Land and the Egyptian temples up the Nile. Professor Harlan P. Beach of Yale will lead the missionary thought of the whole trip. Before the Missionary Cruise, the group will attend the Edinburg Conference and the Passion Play at Oberammergau. The Itinerary and programme has been planned by a large committee of missionary board secretaries. Membership is by private invitation which can be arranged through the foreign boards. Mr. Von Ogden Vogt, Trinity place, Boston, has general charge of the total programme.

LOUISIANA METHODIST ORPHANAGE.

Through the kindly interest of that friend of humanity, Mr. Thos. V. Ellzey, all the railroads of the State have consented to "deadhead" all articles that may be sent by freight to our Orphanage during the Christmas holidays. We hope the Sunday School superintendents, pastors, and all friends of our Orphanage will take advantage of this splendid opportunity of helping our institution, and send in all they can. This will afford all our people a rare opportunity to help in a very substantial way.

We can use everything in the shape of groceries, lard, meat, flour, meal, rice, grits; in fact anything with which to feed the children will be of great help to us. Corn, hay and grain of any kind will be acceptable, for we now have a mule and several cows to feed, and we have but little feed for this purpose.

We have been so liberally supplied of late with second-hand clothes that we do not need anything in that direction at present, and second-hand things of that kind will be a waste.

We will need but few toys, but let your Christmas gifts be of a useful, substantial nature.

We feel sure that our people are coming more and more to realize the real Christmas spirit. That it is more appropriate to give to the needy than to receive gifts, or bestow them upon those who do not need. Let all who can make a gift in money. On January 1, we will have a [illegible] for $500 at the bank, and we must have the money to meet this [illegible]. With a special Christmas gift from the Methodists to their Orphanage, enough money is given to [illegible] this debt.

Send all packages, boxes and bundles to Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, R. W. Vaughan, Ruston, La. Send all communications about packages and make all remittances to Robt. W. Vaughan, Ruston, La. Sincerely,

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN.

A CLEVER ELEPHANT.

A gentleman who lived in India for many years tells an interesting story of the cleverness of an elephant which he owned.

This gentleman had two small sons to which the elephant took a great fancy. So devoted was this elephant that the father felt perfectly safe in leaving his little boys in its care.

One day the elephant and the two boys went off on a tramp together. They remained away so long, however, that the father became anxious, and finally went to look after them. After searching for some time he came to the river bank, and there a funny sight met his eyes.

The great elephant was standing knee deep in the mud, with a happy small boy squatting on either side of him, and all three were fishing just as hard as they could. The boys held their rods in their hands, and their companion held his with his trunk. By and by the elephant's line gave a flop, and the boys crowded up to see whether it really meant that he had caught a fish. He had, and while the big brute watched them solemnly, they pulled out the line, detached the fish, and then, putting on another worm, gravely handed the rod back to its owner.—Exchange.

Never let us be discouraged with ourselves. It is not when we are conscious of our faults that we are most wicked; on the contrary, we are less so. We see by a brighter light, and let us remember, for our consolation, that we never perceive our sins till we begin to cure them.—Fenelon.

"Power for Service."

BY REV. J. B. LAWRENCE,

Corresponding Secretary, Board of Missions, Baptist Convention of Louisiana. Editor of Baptist Chronicle, Published at Alexandria, La.

This is a book of 270 pages, printed on heavy paper, and finely bound in cloth. It discusses in a clear and forcible way one of the great questions of the day. In these days men are preaching a practical gospel, impressing the fact that "we are saved for service." This book discusses "Power for Service," or the secret by which saved men do the work of the Lord. It is written in a pleasing style, and cannot fail to interest and benefit all who have any desire to become one of the Lord's co-workers. It is to the credit of the author that in the very first paragraph of the book he sets forth very distinctly and truly what our Lord meant when he said to the disciples: "Tarry ye at Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." This is the key-note of the book.

Glances at the World.

Far out of the ordinary must be the life of the man of whom no word of good can be said after he is dead. Such a man was Leopold, an old man, King of Belgium, who died a few days ago. He enriched himself at the expense of the lifeblood of hundreds of thousands of his subjects, and died with their curses on their tongues. No one has risen up to speak a word in his favor. On the contrary, his wickedness is being held up to public gaze, and used as an argument in favor of future punishment. The barbarities practiced on the natives of the Congo in Africa, by which it is said millions of them lost their lives, is attributed to Leopold. The barbarities were practiced for many years. On many hands for several years past there was loud cry for intervention on the part of civilization to put an end to them. The protests coming from missionaries of the Presbyterian church in the Congo did attract general attention, but the only practical result was the arrest and trial of two missionaries for slander, which however, ended in their acquittal. It is to be hoped that the atrocities i nthe Congo will cease with the death of the King, and that the poor laborers in the rubber fields will have a taste of real life. Leopold himself, like infamous predecessors, Herod and Nero, and others will live in memory only as a monument of human depravity. Would that the memory of such men could perish from the face of the earth.

Mr. Wilson, secretary of agriculture, has issued his annual report. It puts forth some very encouraging facts. It shows that during the eleven years past the agricultural products of the country have increased in value from $4,417,000,000 to $8,760,000,000, or $70,000,000,000 for the eleven years. This sum he says, "has paid off mortgages, it has established banks, it has made better homes, it has helped to make the farmer a citizen of the world, and it has provided him with means for improving his soil and making it more productive." The secretary says further: "There has been a tendency of the animals and crops to increase in value at the farm at a faster rate than all commodities have increased at wholesale. Within the wholesale trade, also, farm products exceed all other classes of commodities in relative increase of prices since 1896, and food is exceeded only by farm products and by lumber and building materials. The only large exception to the leading place taken by farm products in rise of prices is unfed beef cattle, the farm price of which has barely begun to rise above the price level of 1896—1900." From all this Mr. Wilson infers that the fertility of the soil is increasing, instead of wearing out as is often asserted. We are not sure that he is entirely correct. While it is true that in many sections the use of commercial fertilizers has increased the yield per acre, the fact cannot be overlooked that during the eleven years mentioned the amount of land opened and brought into cultivation is very large, and has necessarily increased the amount of agricultural products and other things raised on the farm—such as cattle, hogs, horses, mules, etc. Some credit, in fact, a great deal, must be given to expansion of the cultivated area, as well as to the improvement of farming methods. Notwithstanding Mr. Wilson's rosy view of things, we are still of the opinion that Mr. J. J. Hill's warnings, to which we lately called attention, should not be forgotten, for the high price of living—of food stuffs of all kinds, show that production is not keeping pace with demand, else there is something wrong and ruinous in the manipulation of the markets.

Now and then one of our cherished ideals is shattered. It grieves us. Not very long ago when the "militant suffragettes" of England began in a boisterous and, not only in an unwomanly, but criminal way to promote their cause, we thought and said, no American woman would be guilty of such conduct. We thought we had ground for saying so. American woman suffragists, as a rule, being intelligent and well educated, and members of the best society. But it turns out that even our elect are not proof against the temptation to fight where fighting does more harm than good. And the militant one now languishes in an English jail. This lady, on the occasion of the banquet of London's Lord Mayor to the Cabinet, dashed a brick through a stained glass window. She was forthwith arrested, tried and sentenced to a month of hard labor in a London jail. Such self-sought martyrdom is about equivalent to self-sought cross-bearing in which there is not a particle of merit. On the contrary, it is rather for censure and scorn. Now, were the women persecuted for adhering to the cause, and promoting it, the case would be different. But they are not going to be persecuted, and the great majority of them must live and die without martyrdom.

We are not yet ready to join the enemies of Dr. Cook in saying that "he never reached the North Pole." The dispatches from Copenhagen University printed in the papers of December 22, indicate that the report of the University professors who examined his records, is adverse to Dr. Cook's claims. But we do not doubt that the statements sent out are much exaggerated. At any rate we shall await further details. It is almost unbelievable that a man of intelligence, and with the least bit of scientific knowledge, should deliberately impose a falsehood on the whole world, and especially in view of the fact that the world is interested in the discovery of the pole. Such imposition, like murder, would surely be detected. That the affidavits of the two men who sware they prepared some of Dr. Cook's data, notwithstanding they showed themselves willing to conspire to deceive the public, injured Dr. Cook greatly, cannot be denied. And Dr. Cook further injured himself by disappearing from the public. The two things together made his case almost irretrievable. If Copenhagen University utterly repudiates his claim, he can never redeem himself. The taking of correct observations, howkever, necessary to enable one to exactly locate the pole, are not necessary to help one reach it. He might do that accidentally. The keeping of correct records is a wholly different thing. A man might reach the pole, and make incorrect records, but he would suffer thereby, because such records are required by scientists. So we say, though Dr. Cook's records may be short or faulty, the fact does not prove that he failed to reach the coveted spot.

We clip the following paragraph from the Pittsburg Christian Advocate:

"Another conflict is on in France between the clericals and the government over the question of the secularization of the schools. The administration, which is directed by the Republican party, is seeking to carry out a programme of complete separation between the church and the schools corresponding to the separation of church and state which has finally been accomplished in that country. Under the direction of the Pope and the French Roman Catholic bishops the clericals and Royalists are opposing the secularization of the schools, and propose to make the question an issue in the next general election. They declare that the movement for lay schools is only a conspiracy hatched by free-thinkers, Jews and Freemasons against the Christian religion. They deny the force of the contention that the victories of the Germans were gained through the superior education which German school masters impart. On the other hand, the Republicans declare that the instruction imparted by the church was largely royalist or imperialistic teaching, which the Republic was bound to suppress in self-defense, since it was virtually sedition that was being taught. The Premier of the French government reminds the clericals that they enjoy the fullest liberty of belief and worship, and that the clergy never had freer exercise of their prerogatives. The separation of the church and state has given the clergy liberty which they never enjoyed before. He declares that the time is rapidly coming when the bishops and priests will prefer to do their duty as Frenchmen, rather than their duty as Catholics subject to the domination of Rome. It is said, indeed, that a large part of the most devout of the Roman Catholics of France approve the separation of church and state, and the secularization of education."

FELIX R. HILL, D. D.

The routine business of our Annual Conferences is from time to time interrupted by such stirring occasions, when a veteran of the itinerancy announces that the Great Captain has given the order that he step out of the ranks and leave the battle in the hands of others. Such a scene was enacted at the recent session of the Louisiana Annual Conference, when the name of Felix R. Hill was called. Tall, erect and still young in appearance, he stepped in front of the pulpit to tell his brethren that the condition of his health was such that he feared the unwelcome command had been issued. He did not feel that he was "worn out," and hence would not ask for superannuate relation. He was insistent on this point, declaring his unwillingness to be a beneficiary of the superannuate fund. Again, he was not assured that his health was such as to warrant him in requesting a supernumerary relation, but expressed his desire for a location. The men in the "traveling connection" are loath to see a comrade join the local ranks, especially in the case of an itinerant who has served faithfully as long a time as Dr. Hill has, namely, forty-six years. Hence, with one voice, from Bishop Candler down, the Conference demurred. All over the Conference room men arose, disregarding parliamentary procedure, and, with tears in their eyes, protested. Some of them went to him, and, shaking his hand, pledged their love for and appreciation of him. He was completely overcome by this demonstration of affection on the part of men with whom he had been associated but a few years, and yielded to their wishes that he take a supernumerary relation, the motion being made by his Presiding Elder, Dr. F. N. Parker.

For nearly a half century Dr. Hill has been one of the most effective pastors in Southern Methodism. He has served the first pulpits of the church in Murfreesboro, Nashville, Mobile, St. Louis, Kansas City, Baltimore, Louisville, Shreveport and New Orleans. His success was no mystery to those whom he served. He was gifted with a personality, whose magnetism was well nigh irresistible, especially in the social circle. It was not to be wondered at, therefore, that his ministry was chiefly the evangelism of personal work—the most difficult as well as the most effective kind. He possessed to a remarkable degree the power of organization, which he used to capital advantage, especially among the young. He was phenomenally industrious, and illustrated to a striking degree the Pauline maxim, "This one thing I do." Being strictly a man of one task, he permitted nothing to intervene between him and his work. His pastoral visitation was incessant [illegible] poor. He [illegible] was practical, religious and [illegible] impossible to [illegible] ministers to the people [illegible] an excellent [illegible] at First Church, New [illegible] financial showing [illegible] without [illegible] was the most exacting [illegible] health and usefulness.

VANDERBILT AND [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] Christian Advocate puts [illegible] I will [illegible] trustees of Vanderbilt [illegible] ing and have [illegible] from the [illegible] have I had as well [illegible] personally [illegible] having [illegible] Neither [illegible] particular [illegible] that Governor Porter, Major [illegible] know more about the affairs of [illegible] bilt than I do, though [illegible] only of its board of trust [illegible] standing committees of the [illegible] Some readers of this paper [illegible] ter of which my judgment and [illegible] mine. To such I will say, direct[illegible]

1. The bill before the Tennessee Legislature [illegible] had nothing to do, direct or remote, with the [illegible] Peabody College for teachers. That [illegible] no donation or favor of any kind [illegible] bilt. It offers to inaugurate [illegible] of our university, and to exchange teaching and other facilities with [illegible] on terms agreeable to [illegible] both. It may later offer to purchase part of [illegible] campus. No such proposition has yet been made, [illegible] since the board of the new college has not yet secured control of its funds. If such a proposition is made, it will, of course, be considered by the whole Vanderbilt board. I know no reason why that board should not be thought competent to pass upon the matter.

2. No proposition, direct or indirect, to "secularize" Vanderbilt has been made by any body connected with the board of trust [illegible] to any body connected with the board of trust. Such a charge, whether made by governor, president, major or general, has no foundation in fact. It is a figment of somebody's imagination, designed not to help Vanderbilt, but to hurt it.

3. The collocation and proposed "teaching contract" between Vanderbilt and the new Peabody College for Teachers do not constitute a "merger." Why does not Dr. Boswell on this point take the word of the able men who are proposing this relation? His skepticism does him no credit. Neither does his fantastical direction to the teachers of Vanderbilt University, "paid for their services from church funds," giving time to work outside. If he fancies that the board of trust of Vanderbilt is in the habit of keeping employes on its rolls who do not earn their salaries, then he knows less of that board than he assumes to know. We shall get a quid pro quo for everything that we do for the Teachers' College [illegible] know nothing of it [illegible] and was so indifferent [illegible] nothing to promote [illegible] speak to the senate, a [illegible] Dr. Kirkland has not in [illegible] concerning the purpose of the [illegible] Vanderbilt's [illegible] unnamed [illegible] I have later [illegible] Nashville [illegible] give that information [illegible]

[illegible] are rather severe [illegible] Winton's personal allusions [illegible] what we have there [illegible] and Dr. Kirkland [illegible] supposing that in following the lead of [illegible] Dr. Kirkland he was of the same mind. If Dr. [illegible] say that he is not in accord with Dr. [illegible] so far as to wrest Vanderbilt [illegible] from the ownership and control [illegible] church and secure the University a place [illegible] Carnegie Foundation, we will have no [illegible] him. Or, if he [illegible] the one vital issue [illegible] Methodist Episcopal Church, South, [illegible] and has of right the [illegible] what he says. On [illegible] he has not declared [illegible] co-ordinat[illegible] and the Peabody College [illegible] is yet only on [illegible] unless the re[illegible] bill before the Tennessee Legislature [illegible] and the "contrac[illegible] are enlarged to [illegible] Dr. Kirkland and his board [illegible] there is no telling what [illegible] happen.

2. Dr. Winton says "the bill before the Tennessee Legislature had nothing to do, direct or [illegible] with the Peabody College for Teachers." [illegible] Dr. Winton say it had nothing to do directly [illegible] with Vanderbilt University? Will he say that had it passed it would not have directly [illegible] affected the interests of the [illegible] University? The impression prevails that had the bill been enacted into law, it would not have strengthened the hold of the church on Vanderbilt, but would have strengthened the hold of Dr. Kirkland's board of trust on the funds of Vanderbilt University, to the extent at least of allowing that board to do things, which, now it can[illegible]

3. If those interested will read Dr. Winton's paragraph 3, and then turn to our editorial of December 2, they will see in what sense we used the term "merger." They can then judge the character and extent of our "skepticism," and whether or not it is to our credit. Our objection to Vanderbilt's professors taking time paid for by Vanderbilt's funds to teach in another and a secular institution may be "fantastic," but it is an objection well based, considered apart from everything else. But Dr. Winton assures us that "we shall get a quid pro quo for everything that we do for the Teachers' College." Granted, but does it not follow that if Vanderbilt's professors serve the Peabody school, and Peabody's professors serve Vanderbilt, each getting a quid pro quo, it is a "merger?" As far as it goes it is as good as can be effected.

4. Dr. Winton says he "did not contend earnestly for the much-mooted legislative bill." We accept the statement. And he adds: "Dr. Kirkland was not in position to speak freely concerning the purport of the bill, since, so far as it bore upon Vanderbilt's affairs, it had to do with private and unfinished business of the board of trust." That is an amazing statement. It leads us to infer that Vanderbilt's board of trust inspired the bill. It looks that way to one on the outside. As to Dr. Winton's explanation, etc., in the Western Methodist, candor compels us to say that though we read it, but little impression was made by it. We did not read it very carefully. Had it appeared in Dr. Winton's own columns, where it should have appeared, the impression might have been wholly different. May be we should beg Dr. Winton's pardon.

Since writing the above we have received another communication from Dr. Winton. We notice only two points:

1. He says, "A law is already on the Tennessee statutes book empowering any school board, if it chooses, to donate its real estate to another doing similar work. * * * * If such laws are so revolutionary and 'dangerous' why did not some of these anxious brethren cry out against that one?" In reply we say: We do not know when that law was passed, but we feel sure that had it passed with a view to giving or selling any part of the campus of Vanderbilt University to the Peabody school, or any other secular institution, there would have been as loud a "cry out" against it, as the one Dr. Kirkland endeavored to secure. The church exercises no control of any kind over secular schools. It seeks to control only its own.

In reference to formally accepting the report of the Vanderbilt commission, the Doctor says: "I, as a layman in legal matters, was ready to so vote, though I strongly dissent from some positions taken in the document—if I understand it, which I doubt." He does not tell us how he stands now. If we do him injustice by saying we suspect he stands with those who think such action "was inadvisable and probably illegal," we ask him to say so, and we will acknowledge the wrong.

SEASHORE CAMP GROUNDS.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL REPORT FOR 1909.

Brethren: The responsibility of this institution of the church is appreciated by each member of the board.

To extend its usefulness has been the burden of our thoughts and the object of self sacrificing labors. For eight years I have been connected with this honorable body, so my experience entitles me to an opinion, viz:

The influence of this consecrated place has extended more within the past year than it has in any previous year. The plan adopted by you of extension and development has met with favor and approval by other denominations, the public, and as far as I have heard without objection from our ecclesiastic body. Interdenominational work, and educational advance, is but the outgrowth of the religion of love.

The day has come when under the guidance of able legal friends, R. P. Roach, of Mobile, Asst. Gen. Marshal J. Miller of N. O., Ford and White of Biloxi, Miss., and Lieut. Gov. Shands of Tulane, it becomes expedient in order to further advance on the lines indicated to change our charter, name and governing board. It is now your duty to consummate the plans that are matured and have the sanction of the three patronizing Conferences. Attorney R. P. Roach, of Mobile, who has given so much time and energy to this matter, will show us the further steps and pilot us from legal snags and quicksands, and I hope from censure of church members, though a few may be tent-holders.

For detailed reports of each department, we will look to written reports from each of the chairmen of the Standing Committees, so I will not burden you with a repetition.

Having spent much of the summer season on these grounds since I have had the honor of being president, I feel warranted in making a few suggestions, viz:

The rules now in vogue are sufficiently comprehensive and interfere as little as possible with the enjoyment of all who visit the grounds. The tendency to violate the Methodist idea, of keeping the Sabbath day holy, or of the sexes bathing together, are changes favored by some; collectively we stand as exponents of a noble church upon which we would not bring reproach. Many come here simply for pleasure; I would suggest that the present rules be not changed. Our relation to local churches was never more pleasant and mutually helpful. The expediency of placing a mortgage on this property in order to improve it will require your attention. I know this has received much thought and two conferences have voted in favor of $20,000 mortgage. The following considerations are pertinent:

First. This is church property, unique in the fact that it belongs to three conferences. Church schools are never a source of revenue. How then will the interest and principal be paid? By voluntary contributions of well-to-do members of the Church in the three States. Would it not be better that this amount be raised from the same source before interest has to be added? Church institutions are not conducted on money making lines as a commercial institution. I am heartily in favor of the contemplated development. They are essential. Would it not be better to sell all the timber and land north of the L. & N. railroad and use the proceeds to improve the twenty acres in South Side? This would not require haste, since in the opinion of eminent jurists, the educational work now instituted, together with change of charter and name, will meet the requirements of law and exempt this property from taxation.

After weighing the above suggestions and learning that the property north of the L. & N. railroad is not saleable now, I wish to declare myself in favor of selling $20,000 worth of bonds, $50 each, twenty years duration, to members of the M. E. C. S. in three conferences, said bonds secured by mortgage on the grounds. In this way the property is not jeopardized, since its creditors are many and are the friends of the church.

The spiritual condition was most helpful. Educational institutes are in session, one after another the whole summer. The most cordial brotherly love and good fellowship seems to pervade the entire Camp at all times. The entertainment of orphans has brought happiness to many and proved an annoyance to none. I recommend that such pleasant outings be encouraged. Our financial condition is better than ever for there are no outstanding notes.

In conclusion permit me to say that the association with the godly men of this board in the endeavor to discharge the trust committed to us by the church has been a spiritual up-lift to me, and I trust I have proven a stumbling-block to none. Most sincerely,

E. L. McGehee.

P. S.—Our new charter has been signed by the governor of Mississippi and duly recorded by the secretary of state. On the 12th of January at the Sea Shore Camp Ground the new board will be organized and the "Sea Shore District Training School" will superceed the Sea Shore Camp Ground.

E. L. McGehee.

"There are many valid reasons why the spiritual welfare of children should engage the warm attention of all Christians.

"Children are included in the benefits of Christ's atonement, and they shared conspicuously in his personal attention when he walked the earth. 'Suffer them to come.'

"Children very early become conscious of their need of pardon, and on seeking the Savior they become as happy in his love as adults do.

"Children seem to be as susceptible to the strivings of the Holy Spirit as grown people are, and when they receive the witness of their acceptance, their little faces glow with joy and their hearts flame with love.

"The salvation of children is a hopeful matter also, because their hearts are not hardened by sin, and they receive the truth that saves in more simple faith than confirmed sinners do.

"It is a great advantage that children enjoy, to begin the Christian life early, for they do not only make the most earnest and consistent disciples, but they have nearly all their lives before them for the rolling up of good results from service. What a reward is possible to the diligent servant that does the will of the Master from the cradle to the grave!

"And there is another reason that should appeal strongly to the evangelistic worker. Children are with us now. They love to hear the gospel story. By and by it will be more difficult to reach them. If they enter adult life unconverted they may be forever lost. Children quickly learn the vices of grown-up people, and when they fall into them many become worse sinners than those who precede them.

"And it should not be forgotten that children may die while yet young. How sweet for them in the hour of passing that they know and trust Jesus.

" 'Mamma,' said a little boy who was dying, 'does Jesus want children?' 'Yes,' answered the watching mother. 'Then I guess he wants me.' And soon the little sufferer was with the Savior to whose heart he felt himself dear."—Michigan Christian Advocate.

A CARD

The Conference Board, in its wisdom, thought [illegible] fit to continue the time and work of the Commissioner of Education for the time that I understood I was engaged for, so I close my work with the Conference session. The work committed to me for the past year was fraught with many difficulties and undertaken at the most inauspicious time as far as financial conditions were concerned. Nevertheless, I went forth to the work in the face of the prophecy of failure and turned into the treasury of the Board of Education, in cash and its equivalent, a little more than the total educational collections [illegible] the preachers.

To be precise, the Commissioner raised above the maintenance of the office and its expenses five hundred dollars. There were made pledges towards the building fund for this year; there were conditional pledges on this great and needy work made by our friends that would amount to a great deal. Now, we are much less needy than we were one year ago. I beg of the friends of Christian education throughout our borders to keep their pledges in mind and assist the schools to the limit of their ability. This work should be greater than the personal relation of any man. As everybody knows, my relation to this movement is not, and never has been, stipendiary. The only desire I have ever had is to see the work advanced. I care not by whom, just so it is done. We are abundantly able to meet our obligation to our church and to God in this matter, and our realization of that obligation ought to be so clear as to put us above the gratification of personal animosities and the satisfaction of sordid ambitions; you and I are here to-day, and gone to-morrow:

"But the Church of Jesus Constant will remain."

THE SUGAR SCANDAL.

The biggest scandal of the times—ranking next in magnitude to the insurance scandals in New York several years ago, is the sugar fraud scandal now under investiagtion by government authorities. By means of false weights, or a device in government scales by which false weighing was accomplished—in use, nobody knows how long, save those who invented the device and attached it to the scales, the government has been defrauded out of millions of dollars—the tariff duty on imported sugar. When the fraud was detected importers refunded about a million and a half of dollars. If prosecutions are successful somebody will suffer fine and imprisonment. Why such scandals? How comes it that men in public life make it a point to steal? The Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. MacVeigh, avows in part, specially with reference to the frauds in New York. He says: "The influence of local politics and politicians upon the customs service promoted that laxity and low tone which prepare and furnish an inviting soil for dishonesty and fraud. Unless the customs service can be cleared from the payment of political debts and exactions, and from meeting the supposed exigencies of political organization, big and little, it will be impossible to have an honest service for any length of time. Any considerable share of the present cost of this demoralization to the public revenues, to the efficiency of the service, and to public and private morality, is a tremendous amount to pay in mere liquidation of the small debts of political leaders." The collector of customs at New York, Mr. Loeb, is fully justified in his efforts to reform the service. He deserves success.

FROM THE PHILIPPINES.

My last letter was from Macabebe, a small one-company scout post. Small posts are not considered desirable by medical officers, except where there is a large amount of available outside practice. There is very little to do, and no society of any kind, so one can readily see how very lonesome such a post is. Staying out among the alien people, speaking another tongue and having strange habits and customs, makes one see more clearly the terrors that confront a foreign missionary. What faith and consecration it takes to live such a life! But practically all these people are adherents to the Church of Rome, and ministers tell me they are harder to impress than unbelievers.

In August came my order to transfer to Ft. Wm. McKinley, the largest post in the islands. Situated only five miles from Manila, and out among the hills, it is an ideal post. Plenty of work to keep me busy, and thus make time pass more quickly. Being actively employed, keeps me from missing wife, boy and mother so much. But the best of all, is the proximity to a Methodist Church, only 20 minutes on the cars. Dr. Boswell, stay at home for four or five months, and see how good it feels to be in the Lord's house again. The music is sweeter, the singing better and best of all, a poor sermon sounds like a Bishop.

Speaking of Bishops, reminds me of an excellent sermon by Bishop Oldham, a few weeks ago. He gave us a splendid interpretation of the faithful servant. St Paul made no mistake when he said, "by the foolishness of preaching, we persuade men." What an inspiration is a great sermon. In many ways, he reminded me of our lamented Bishop Ward: the same rich voice, clear enunciation, splendid diction, bright, sparkling thoughts.

The Methodists are not very strong here, but they are loyal. Congregations good, and very attentive. The choir is above the average. Dr. Harper is a gifted preacher and much admired by his people.

Recently, ex-vice-president Fairbanks visited the city and post. He was a guest at a banquet tendered him by the famous "Quill Club." It was attended by all the leading dignitaries and high ranking officers of the army. All toasts were drunk in pure, clear water—something unusual for Manila. Mr. Fairbanks made a most happy address, which was as happily received.

One of the most charming men I have ever met out here—or anywhere for that matter—is Rev. J. L. McLaughlin, the agent of the American Bible Society. He says the work among the natives is growing, and is inspiring; but about the American population, he is not so sanguine. I believe that I know why: Americans are here only temporarily. They all refer to the States as "God's Country," and so far I have yet to hear of any family calling this country "home." To build a great nation, build many homes. The sacredness of the home, is the safety of the nation.

It is a pleasure to thank the brethren for their kind words in letters received. One must be 10,000 miles from home to really enjoy letters; out here a letter means so much more than at home.

With best wishes for all my friends, and asking that they remember me in their prayers, I remain, faithfully, E. C. BALLARD, M. D.

CORN PRIZE WINNER.

In view of the greater interest being manifested in corn growing, and also of the greatly increased yield of corn, the past year, a word or two about the prize winner of the Kellogg $1000 trophy, for the best ear of corn, at the National Corn Exposition, held recently at Omaha, Nebraska, should be of more than passing interest to our farmers. The fortunate winner was Mr. Fred C. Palin, of Newton, Ind., and according to his own statement, it took him seven years to produce this ear; by which he means that he had intelligently striven seven years to reach his ideal.

According to the superintendent of judges at the exposition, the Palin ear was not only the best ear of corn this year, but was a finer specimen than the famous Pascal ear which sold for $550 two years ago. And, according to Prof. G. I. Christie, of Purdue University, one of the judges, it was the best ear the world has ever produced.

"My system of farming," said Mr. Palin, to an agricultural press representative, "is to rotate wheat, oats and corn, and I use some commercial fertilizer." The field from which this ear was selected made about 90 bushels per acre. Mr. Palin was born and raised on a farm, but engaged in various pusuits until 1898. Last February he wrote the "American Elevator and Grain Trade" as follows: "During all my various vocations, I was impressed with the fact that agriculture is the foundation and life of every other business in existence; that it is the master-wheel; and as it slows down or gains momentum, so do all commercial or manufacturing enterprises. In 1898, I was enabled to rent some land and borrow a team of horses and some implements, with which outfit I began farming. I subscribed for agricultural papers and asked for all the experimental station bulletins I could get. The study and investigations I made in this way proved to be interesting, entertaining and beneficial, but not to the degree I wished; hence I started to school, and became one of the short-course students. While I am only as yet what should be called a 'primary,' I feel that I have made no mistake in following up the instructions that have come from experimental investigations."

Mr. Palin is still farming the land he began on in 1898, and while he is a tenant, he owns all of the horses and up-to-date machinery to run 280 acres of land and is half-partner in all the grain, cattle and hogs. About 40 head of cattle and 300 head of hogs are fed annually, to consume the farm products. It is noteworthy that Mr. Palin was not only a reader of agricultural literature, but was a student of a short winter course at the Agricultural College of his native State. The fact, that a farmers' conference had been called at Baton Rouge for Jan. 10, to 22, under the management of the Agricultural College of the Louisiana State University, should cause the farmers of Louisiana who are being forced, by the böll-weevil, to grow corn more extensively, to give serious consideration to the opportunities offered during these two weeks, of becoming acquainted with the most up-to-date methods of dealing with these crops. Practice in judging corn, live stock and agricultural products will be a leading feature of the conference. The expenses after reaching Baton Rouge, should not exceed ten or twelve dollars for the entire period.

For full particulars, write W. R. DODSON, Baton Rouge.

"Mr. Justyn," said the editor, looking over the new reporter's story of the political meeting. "In this write-up of yours you say 'Resistless waves of applause from the audience fairly overwhelmed the speaker.' Look at the absurdity of that figure of speech. How could a 'resistless wave' of applause or anything else come from an audience, Mr. Justyn?"

"It could come from any sea of upturned faces, couldn't it?" insisted the new reporter.—Exchange.

That China is [illegible] growing [illegible] many [illegible] has expressed the view that China has made more progress since the Boxer outbreak than [illegible] of the world has ever made in the same length of time, and he [illegible] as the facts [illegible].

The evangelization of China [illegible]. The number of converts has [illegible] more than [illegible] in eighteen years, and there are now more than two hundred and fifty thousand Christians [illegible] the native Protestant Churches of the Empire, with [illegible] that many more [illegible] making a Christian population of half a million in China. The character of these Christians compares favorably with that of the Christians in Western lands. The whole country is now accessible to the missionary and the native evangelist.

But besides the direct work of evangelization that is being carried on all over the Empire, in which a large proportion of the four thousand missionaries now in China are engaged, there are other movements in operation which show the general progress and spirit of the people along all lines, religious, social, commercial and political. The gospel is going into China with all of its multifarious blessings, touching every part of the social fabric of that people and saving China not only spiritually and morally, which is the chief and all-important aim, but mentally, physically, socially, and politically.

There are four great movements going on which show in a striking manner how the gospel is [illegible] bringing most beneficent results in that great land. These are, the Anti-Opium Campaign, the Educational Reform, the Establishment of Constitutional Government, and the Emancipation of the Women.

The Anti-Opium Movement was actually begun by the government three years ago, in September, 1906. The president of the Anti-Opium Society of China, Dr. H. C. Du Bose, sent a petition around among the missionaries in China to be signed by them, petitioning the Empress Dowager to issue a decree abolishing opium smoking. This petition was signed by some fifteen hundred missionaries, and was duly forwarded to the Empress Dowager through the proper official channels. As there was some delay in responding to the appeal of the missionaries, Dr. Du Bose was sent to Peking by the Society and had an interview with one of the members of the Foreign Office, Tang Shao Yi, in regard to the matter. In due time the decree was issued, much to our surprise and delight. We were like the disciples who had been praying for Peter's release from prison. We had been praying and working for such a decree, but when it came we could hardly believe the fact. But there it was, an order to all the officials and people in the whole country, that within ten years opium smoking must cease in China. It was ordered, among other things, that all the opium dens (public places for smoking opium, corresponding to our whisky saloons in America) should be closed at once; that all officials under sixty-five years of age that smoked opium should break off the habit within six months, on pain of dismissal from office; and that the cultivation of the poppy plant—from which opium is manufactured—should be reduced one-tenth each year, so that within ten years from the date of the decree no more opium should be manufactured in China. The British government had already agreed to co-operate with the Chinese government in their efforts to stamp out this curse, and subsequently ordered that the amount of opium imported from India should be reduced ten per cent. a year, so that after ten years no more [illegible] of the most important [illegible] and they are [illegible] the habit of [illegible] progress, they [illegible] themselves from [illegible] that the [illegible] teachers in this [illegible] the beginning [illegible] the opium habit [illegible] confirmed [illegible] of the church [illegible] the missionaries and [illegible] which is growing in [illegible] opinion, especially among the [illegible] China, that it [illegible] such vigor and [illegible] cess.

And now [illegible] in the first place, a large part of [illegible] from the opium dens [illegible] and villages [illegible] immediately [illegible] the law [illegible] public places [illegible] from the [illegible] native preachers, and others in various parts of the country, fully two-thirds of the territory of China is now free from the opium dens [illegible] around Shanghai, where [illegible] presiding elder of the Shanghai District [illegible] that in practically all the [illegible] that region the dens have been closed [illegible] were really [illegible] blind tigers, where [illegible] style. The opium smoker [illegible] opium from the regularly licensed [illegible] drug, and take it home and [illegible] must not smoke in public [illegible] friends to smoke with him [illegible] home an opium den. There are [illegible] parts of the country where the dens have not yet been closed, but the [illegible] is small, and it is continually growing [illegible].

The opium-smoking officials [illegible] making heroic efforts to break off the habit, [illegible] many of them have succeeded. The time has been extended, in case of some, by imperial clemency. Others have suffered death in consequence of giving up the pipe, [illegible] complications are often brought on when the opium is stopped which result in illness and death. But the Peking government is determined [illegible] ing officials to give up the habit [illegible] office, and they are gradually [illegible] nearing their goal. No soldier or officer [illegible] is allowed to smoke opium under any conditions, and the punishment for doing so is decapitation.

The cultivation of the poppy plant is being rapidly reduced. An official report sent last autumn to Peking by the Nanking Viceroy said that the area of land being sown to the poppy [illegible] New [illegible] that Shanghai and [illegible] the [illegible] from the poppy [illegible] and other [illegible].

This commission [illegible] Bishop [illegible] Brent [illegible] delegates [illegible] thirteen nations [illegible] the United States, [illegible] France, Germany, [illegible] Britain, [illegible] Japan and China [illegible] the meeting [illegible] the results [illegible]. Among other things the commission [illegible] on the subject of the evils of opium smoking. An Opium [illegible] had been appointed by the British [illegible] to investigate the subject. They [illegible] India, and after [illegible] there, and [illegible] having gone to China at all, but [illegible] in effect that opium smoking was not injurious, but [illegible] was rather beneficial than otherwise [illegible] to the Chinese. The Anti-Opium Society [illegible] show the fallacy and the [illegible] of this report [illegible] in charge of our [illegible] a [illegible] the dangerous effects of opium [illegible] the Chinese. Dr. Park [illegible] hundred [illegible] with [illegible] of opium smoking. These [illegible] a book which subsequently [illegible] with the change of view [illegible] Parliament and [illegible] the passage of [illegible] by Parliament that the traffic [illegible] India is [illegible].

The International [illegible] Commission [illegible] declared in the most emphatic language that [illegible] evils and [illegible]. They further [illegible] their respective governments [illegible] traffic [illegible] in their [illegible]. This is a very important [illegible] the British cease [illegible] in the traffic, Turkey, Russia, Persia [illegible] other nations [illegible] make it [illegible] then [illegible] with the traffic [illegible] nullified.

The International Opium Commission was a spectacle worthy of the attention of the civilized world. How times have changed! Instead of a war, such as occurred more than sixty-five years ago, to force the opium traffic on China, here were the representatives of the leading nations of the world meeting to consider ways and means to help China solve the difficult problem of how to free her people from the ravages of the drug.

The results so far gained had been so encouraging that a decree was issued last autumn ordering that opium smoking should cease in five years, instead of ten, as was ordered in the first decree. The sale of the drug, which is still permitted in the shops regularly licensed for the trade, and the private smoking in the homes of the people, are to be finally prohibited in five years from the date of the issue of the last decree.

Here is a marvelous sight! full of hope for every well-wisher of his race. On the one hand, we see the newest nation of the world—a Christian nation—engaged in a life-and-death grapple with the whisky traffic, and such progress has been made that it requires no prophet to see that that traffic is doomed to early extinction in the United States. More than thirty-six millions of our people now live in prohibition or local option territory. On the other hand, there is the oldest nation of the world, a non-Christian nation, engaged in a life-and-death struggle with the opium traffic. Marvelous progress has been made, beyond the most sanguine hopes of any, and the end is in sight. Opium smoking in China is to be abolished, and that country, so great in the potency of its new life, as it comes to its own and develops its national spirit, will be freed from the incubus that has so long weighed it down. The oldest and the newest nation in the world are going to sing the song of victory together!

The year 1906 was a notable one in modern Chinese history. The old Empress Dowager, who had, in 1898, checked the young Emperor in his zealous efforts at reform, and had set back the hands on the dial of progress, and, by her reactionary policy, brought on the Boxer madness of 1900, had so far changed her point of view that she set about doing the very things for the doing of of which she had, with the help of the reactionary leaders of the time, deprived the Emperor of his power and made him but a mere figurehead in his own government for the rest of his life. She not only issued the decree against opium, above referred to, but she promulgated two other edicts that were nothing short of revolutionary in their character. She ordered that the old system of education in China should be abolished and Western education established in its place, and she issued a decree granting Constitutional government to the country.

By a stroke of the vermillion pen, she swept away the old order of things in the educational system; and henceforth any man in China who wants to follow an official career must pass an examination, not in the old Confucian classic, but in the branches of modern learning—mathematics, science, Western history, geography, philosophy, etc. A fair illustration of the old Chinese system of education may be given by supposing that in all the schools of the United States the course of study were based on medieval theology, and that from the primary school right away up to the highest schools and colleges in the land, all students did nothing but commit these works to memory, and that no man could be eligible to an official position in the country until he had passed an examination held by a government examiner, and written an essay on some subject taken from these works. This is practically what the Chinese have been doing for many centuries, and they have called it education. In their system there has been no mathematics, no Western history, no science or geography, no astronomy, nothing that we call education. Up to ten years ago, it had been the boast of Chinese scholars that their education had not been adulterated by anything of modern origin. They have been under the dominion of a philosophy somewhat like that of Aristotle, which ruled the thought-world of Europe for nine hundred years. They formed their theories about things, and then looked into the facts around them. If the facts did not conform to the theories, so much the worse for the facts. This was the condition of philosophy in Europe before the days of Bacon, who taught men to look at facts and make their theories conform to facts. The Chinese have also held practically to the Ptolemaic system of astronomy. They believed that the earth is in the center of the universe, and that the sun, moon and stars revolve around it.

But now there has been a complete right-about-face, a revolution in their mental attitude that is marvelous in the sweep of its far-reaching significance. They are from henceforth to study the facts of the physical world about them, and if their theories do not conform to the facts, the theories must go by the board. They are to learn that the earth is not the central fact in the universal scheme of things—that it is but a speck of star-dust in the infinite universe of worlds on worlds arrayed. We may imagine, but we cannot describe, what this intellectual revolution, this mental emancipation, will mean to the Chinese, and through them to the whole world, as, in consequence of it, China comes to bulk larger and larger in the development of the world's civilization that is to take place in the immediate future around the Pacific basin.

The old order of things having been abrogated, a new educational system is to be put in its place. The government has, for these nearly three years, been studying this problem with a view to inaugurating a system of public schools for the whole country. They have not yet reached a final conclusion, and so China is passing through a transition period in her educational affairs, and a somewhat chaotic condition of things prevails for the time being. In the meantime, officials and public-spirited men of wealth are establishing schools on their own account, which are in some measure meeting the needs of the situation. Even before the decree abolishing the old order of things was issued, many such schools had been established. Yuan Shi Kai, while he was Viceroy of the metropolitan province of Chihli, had inaugurated a public school system in his province, and under the superintendency of Mr. C. D. Tenney, president of the Tientsin University, had established more than five thousand primary schools for the instruction of the children of that province in Western learning. Numerous ambitious educational schemes had been started in other parts of the country, and some of the missionaries had been requested by the officials who were promoting these schemes to go and take charge of them. This writer, among others, had an urgent call to go to Nanking and take charge of a university that the Viceroy wanted to establish there. The salary offered was about three times that paid him by the Board of Missions. Other educational missionaries received the same offers and urgent appeals for help. Some refused, as did this writer, feeling that they were doing more effective work for China in a mission school than they could do in a government school. Others yielded to the urgency of the call, seeing, as they thought, an opening for usefulness in helping to shape the educational policy of the country. Since the period of educational reform was definitely inaugurated by the decree of 1906, many more schools have been, and are being established by officials and gentry throughout the country for teaching Western education. These, while in some measure meeting the needs of the new situation, are also preparatory to the inauguration of a complete government system of free schools when it comes, as come it will in the near future.

Students are now going abroad in increasing numbers to Europe, America, and Japan, to get an education along Western lines. A large number have gone to England, France, and Germany. There are more than three hundred Chinese students in America, and about five thousand in Japan. Three or four years ago, a marvelous exodus of Chinese students to Japan took place. The idea got abroad in China that Western learning could be obtained cheaply and quickly in Japan. Many thought with six months' study in that country all the essential parts of a Western education could be secured—English, mathematics, science, etc. So Chinese students began to go to Japan in large numbers, and at one time there were about sixteen thousand of them in that country, principally in Tokio. The Japanese schools were overwhelmed with the numbers, and found themselves quite unable to cope with the situation in any adequate manner. Many of the Chinese students were soon disillusioned. They found that they could not get Western learning so easily as they had thought, and it was not many months before they began to drift back home, wiser, if sadder, men. The number has been reduced to about five thousand at the present time. But even this number is significant, by reason of its size, as showing one of the ways by which Japan is exerting such a profound influence over Chinese affairs today.

Vast quantities of our educational literature which have been translated into Chinese, principally by the missionaries, are being published and scattered abroad throughout the country by the various publishing houses, missionary and other, that are operating in Shanghai, Canton, Foochow, and other places. Millions of pages of school books and general literature of all kinds, translated from the English, and some from the German and French are being bought and read with avidity by the Chinese throughout the country. Let us, if we can, form some idea of what the leaven of ideas thus working in the Chinese mind may accomplish in the immediate future. A Baconian age has dawned upon China. Her novum organum is already being written. The new learning has taken hold of the imagination of the people and their mental bondage to the ignorance and false philosophy of the past is being shattered by the impact of the new ideas from the West. The Chinese are turning from the dead past, and their faces are toward the sunrise.

The following from Dr. Arthur H. Smith gives a clear idea of the educational changes now going on in China:

"The greatest change of all is the complete abolition of a system of examination having the sanction of nearly two millenniums, and the substitution of modern learning. * * * * Whether we consider the millions concerned, or the consequences of the step, it may justly be regarded as the most comprehensive intellectual revolution in the history of mankind. GOOD-BYE

With this issue of the Advocate I close nine years of service as its editor. I have tried all these years to serve my Master and my Church. Duty has been my watchword. During the time I have had as little to complain of as any man that ever occupied such a position. [illegible] I turn the paper over to my worthy successor, Rev. R. A. Meek, and heartily commend him to all my friends. May he be abundantly useful and blest in the work.

With prayers and best wishes I bid everybody a loving good-bye. Fraternally,

Jno. W. Boswell.

OUR WORKING ORDER

The Church in Louisiana and Mississippi was never in better working condition than it is at this time. This may be true of the Church in general, but of the details of the work at large we are not so well acquainted, owing largely to the fact that our editorial work, part of which is writing for other Church organs, has been interrupted by the Annual Conferences and going to and from a new pastoral charge.

There has been a large numerical gain in the church membership. This indicates not only activity on the part of both the laity and the ministry, and a good spiritual condition in the Church. Great ingatherings never follow an inactive ministry and indifferent membership.

There was a large increase in the preaching force. Twenty-one or two preachers were received into the North Mississippi Conference alone, including six who came to us from other churches. It looked like old times when, in answer to Question One, the presiding elders brought forward so many candidates. The Lord of the harvest is hearing the prayers of his people and sending laborers into his harvest. This fact is apparent in other sections of the Church.

There was a large increase in the benevolent collections. Collections for foreign and domestic missions, including those of the Woman's Foreign and Home Societies, Church Extension and for the superannuated preachers, and widow's and orphan's fund, all exceeded. If there was a deficit in anything we do not recall it. And never in the history of the Church did the stewards do so well in paying the preachers. And in the appointments of the preachers, while, as is usual, some were disappointed, and may be a few were hurt, we have heard of no rebellion. On the [illegible]

ARE BASEBALL PITCHERS SLAVES?

For a number of years past we have seen notices in the sporting columns of our daily papers by one league to another. We never fully understood what was meant by the "sale." But we always thought it was strange, for it seemed to us that the individual was treated as personal property, and that leagues had the right to buy and sell, as slaves used to be in the open market. We notice that recently a certain ball pitcher was sold by one league to another. The buying league paid $300 cash, and gave its note for the balance, $200. The manager of the buying league, it seems, changed his notion, and refused to pay the balance. He was sued, and the suit went against him, and he appealed the case. His ground of contention is that under the terms of sale the man bought is held in "involuntary servitude," which is in violation of the Thirteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution, that instrument saying: "Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction." On this ground the case in point will be appealed, if necessary, until it reaches the Supreme Court, which tribunal will decide whether or not a man sold by one baseball league to another is a slave within the meaning of the law. The question will, at least, interest the men who are sold.

A project is on foot "to hold a national exposition" in commemoration of the liberation of Southern Slavery, in 1913—fifty years after Mr. Lincoln's proclamation. That this would be very agreeable to the negroes goes without saying, and could it be confined to the negroes and wholly in their welfare, it would meet with comparatively little opposition, even in the South. But to make it a national affair—leaving the world to infer that all sections of the country join in such a jubilation. We have seen no mention of the matter in any Southern paper—only a dispatch to the daily press. But the Northern press does not look upon the proposal with unanimity. The New York Times, in an editorial, says: "The assertion that any large number of influential whites in the South look upon the plan with favor lacks verification. Booker Washington's proposal, on the contrary, already has stirred up a great deal of ill-feeling. Attempts to concentrate a national celebration of the freeing of the slaves seems unwise. Few of our colored population can afford to travel. The cost of an exposition would be enormous, and if the result was a failure the negro would gain very little encouragement from it. We have said in the beginning that the matter should be carefully considered beforehand all over the country. If the proposed exposition is generally favored and every State is prepared to take an earnest part in making it successful, it should be undertaken with a will. But thus far the proposal has few supporters. Hostile judgment of it is plentiful. Pushed forward in a spirit of antagonism it will do much more harm than good."

One of the circuit judges of Mississippi, whose name for the present escapes us, has established a new ruling in damage suits brought against railroads. A man was hurrying to catch a passenger train, and had his mind so intently fixed on boarding the train that he did not see a freight train, rapidly approaching from the opposite direction. He was struck by this train and killed. It was in evidence that the freight train was hidden from view on a deep cut, the road at the place making considerable curve, and going at a speed variously estimated at from twenty to forty miles an hour—the slower speed being considerably in excess of the speed allowed by the municipal ordinance of the town through which the train was passing. Suit was brought by the man's widow for damages. One contention in the suit was that the railroad employes were not sufficiently careful in running their train at the time and under the circumstances. Against this the road's attorney urged that the man contributed to his death by carelessness in that he did not stop and look about to see that the way was clear. The judge in his charge to the jury held that a person trying to catch a train with a view to taking passage is not compelled to stop and see whether there is danger, it being the business of the road to keep the way clear. Under this ruling the jury assessed damages against the road. The road's attorney took an appeal, and the finding of the lower court was sustained. This judgment of the Supreme Court of Mississippi will make railway managers more careful how they run trains by stations when other trains, especially passenger trains are in waiting.

PERSONAL.

Rev. W. G. Harbin will begin a revival in this city in the Mary Werlein Church on next Sunday.

Rev. P. H. Fontaine spent several days in the city, and preached on last Sunday at the Mary Werlein Church. He honored the ADVOCATE office with his presence.

Rev. Rob't H. Wynn and family spent the Christmas holidays in this city. Brother Wynn made a pleasant call at the ADVOCATE office last Monday.

Rev. Joseph H. Collins stands ready to assist any of our pastors in revival meetings. Those who desire his assistance can reach him by addressing their communications to 511 Mississippi Street, Jackson, Miss.

Our friend and brother, Rev. W. C. Harris, is located at Talpa, Texas, where he anxiously awaits news from his many friends in North Mississippi. We trust he may find friends, and have great success in his new home.

Rev. J. C. Ellis, returned for the second year to Gallman, Miss., has met a hearty reception, and is pleased. The Old Crystal Springs Church, just before and during Conference gave him and his family a hearty pounding, which they received as meekly as possible under the circumstances.

Rev. Hugh Jamieson has been spending the holidays at home with his mother. Brother Jamieson preached last Sunday morning for Rev. H. T. Carley at Carrollton Avenue, and Rev. J. L. Sutton occupied the pulpit at the evening service. Brother Carley and his wife and baby are spending the holidays with her parents in Mississippi.

Rev. W. S. Shipman is back on his old stamping-grounds at Cleveland, Miss., and in the preachers' home. He says, "The Rev. John Tillery Lewis and wife know how to fix up a parsonage and leave it clean and nice. May the Lord increase their tribe! The Cleveland people love them and hate to see them leave." This encourages us.

The "appreciation" of Dr. F. R. Hill in this issue appears without signature, as the writer desired. It comes from the mind and heart of one who has known Dr. Hill for many years—in fact, if we mistake not, from the writer's childhood. Dr. Hill's friends will greatly enjoy the well-earned tribute to his worth as a Christian man, and minister of the Word.

Dr. S. H. Werlein has been transferred from the Little Rock to the Louisiana Conference and appointed to First Church, New Orleans. Dr. Werlein is no stranger here. He is a native of the city, and one of the more than fifty preachers given by New Orleans Methodism to the Church. He has been absent, save on occasional visits, for many years, and the younger members do not know him, but they will soon know him and love him. He is not only a good pastor, but an able preacher of the New Testament. We predict for him a successful pastorate at First Church. He will begin his ministry here the first Sunday in January.

Rev. W. A. Betts, president of the Mississippi Training School, at Montrose, Miss., is crowded with pupils, and is making diligent effort to equip his school with a supply of proper seats, apparatus, etc. The friends of the school in that Conference will do well to stand by him in his desires. This paragraph from the Christian Advocate (Nashville) is accompanied by an appeal to help complete the seating of the school, supply proper apparatus, etc. Two dollars and twenty-five cents will purchase a modern single desk. The name of every one furnishing that amount will be engraved on a metal plate and permanently attached to the desk. Let Brother Betts have many responses!

The death of Senator A. J. McLaurin, of Mississippi, removes one of the most conspicuous and popular political leaders of that great State, and an influential member of the United States Senate. He has long been in political life—always successful. It is said that he never lost in any contest. He had an untarnished name. We do not know that he was a professed Christian, but he was a friend and supporter of our church at Brandon, Miss., in which the members of his family were active workers. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. C. F. Emery, the pastor. They were very simple, according to the ritual of the church. This was the wish of the family, and in keeping with the life of the distinguished dead.

BY REV. J. B. LAWRENCE,
Corresponding Secretary, Board of Missions, Baptist Convention of Louisiana. Editor of Baptist Chronicle, Published at Alexandria, La.

This is a book of 270 pages, printed on heavy paper and finely bound in cloth. It discusses in a clear and forcible way one of the great questions of the day. In these days men are preaching a practical gospel, impressing the fact that "we are saved for service." This book discusses "Power for Service," or the secret by which saved men do the work of the Lord. It is written in a pleasing style, and cannot fail to interest and benefit all who have any desire to become one of the Lord's co-workers. It is to the credit of the author that in the very first paragraph of the book he sets forth very distinctly and truly what our Lord meant when he said to the disciples: "Tarry ye at Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." This is the key-note of the book.

JOHN WESLEY McKAY was born Jan. 7, 1858, and died at 12 o'clock on the night of Aug. 31, 1909. He left a mother, three sisters and a brother to mourn his departure. Brother McKay's father had preceded him about five years, he having been an invalid for a number of years. It was my pleasure to know Brother John, as his pastor, for four years, he being a steward when I took charge of his church, Mathews' Chapel, which official position he retained until his death. I have never known a more devoted son and brother. He never neglected his aged mother for anything. He would consult his mother and sister kindly about all business affairs, as a dutiful boy would have done. Oh, what a pleasure for the writer to visit them! and when the sun began to hide his face behind the horizon, if Brother John was not already at home with his mother and sister, we knew that he was near by, if not providentially hindered. Yes, Brother John McKay was an ideal son and brother, a good, honest citizen. While Brother McKay was not conscious at the hour of his death, Sister Anna, his sister, writes me that he would frequently say during the day he died, "Oh, dear Jesus," and the day he was taken sick he sang, "There is a bright day coming." May God bless, comfort and guide the loved ones.

J. C. ELLIS.

EARL EMBREY SORRELS was born Nov. 20, 1888, and died at his father's home near Longtown, Miss., Dec. 10, 1909. He professed religion and joined the Methodist Church in August, 1906. From the first he gave evidence of being genuinely converted to God and entered at once upon the active duties of a Christian. Earl was a promising lad, having been raised in a Christian home and surrounded with the best influences there, he had very exalted ideas of life and was above anything that was ungentlemanly or coarse. He was obedient to his parents, kind to his brothers and sisters and considerate to all people. During his last illness which lasted many long months, and necessitated a very painful operation and much weary travel and suffering, no one ever heard him complain, but was always cheerful and hopeful. He always said he would get well, but when he realized the end was near, he said all was well, he was ready to die. Earl is at rest, his life will no doubt continue to inspire other young men to live godly in this present world. Peace be to his ashes. May the consolations of Divine grace sustain the broken hearts.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Quitman, Miss., on the death of Mrs. M. E. TERRAL which occurred Nov. 26, 1909.

Whereas, It has pleased our Heavenly Father, in his infinite wisdom, to take from us our beloved president, Mrs. M. E. Terral, and realizing as we do, that our finite minds cannot grasp the workings of the Infinite, and believing he has done what is best for his beloved, therefore, be it resolved:

First—That we humbly bow to his will, although we feel that our loss is irreparable, and that her place among us can never be filled.

Second—That with hearts full of gratitude, we thank God that our lives have been made fuller and richer by her beautiful life of love and faith among us.

Third—That we extend our tenderest love and sympathy to her bereaved loved ones, and pray that God may bless and comfort them in their sorrow, and make her memory a link to bind their hearts closer to him.

Fourth—That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the Minutes of this Society; that a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and one to the family.

BAD STOMACH

"My Stomach is Going From Bad to Worse."

If your stomach is out of order, if it doesn't feel right after meals, go to-day and get a 50-cent box of Mi-o-na stomach tablets. In a few minutes after the first dose the misery will disappear, and you will be thankful.

But don't stop there. Your stomach is wrong and you want to put it right; you want to cleanse, purify and strengthen it, so that it will be able to digest a hearty meal without any medicine whatever. So go right on taking Mi-o-na for a few days. It will build up the stomach, unclog the liver, purify the bowels, and make you entirely satisfied with your stomach in a few days.

Mi-o-na stomach tablets are made from the best prescription for stomach trobules ever written. They are sold by druggists everywhere and are guaranteed to cure any case of indigestion, acute or chronic, or money back.

WOMAN'S BEAUTY

A woman's beauty is dependent on her health. To keep her beauty, she must keep her health. Sickness and suffering leave their trace, pain leaves its marring imprint. Ladies have come to realize that to be beautiful and attractive they must give attention to physical fitness and health.

Countless women suffer from ailments designated generally as "female complaint," thinking it is the natural lot of their sex to suffer.

This is a mistaken belief. Nature invariably has a cure for her children's ills. Thousands of women have found permanent relief for their sufferings by using that natural, herbal medicine,—Wine of Cardui. Cardui is a pure, non-intoxicating remedy, specifically for women, which has grown steadily in favor during the past fifty years. Letters pour in every day, expressing the gratitude of the writers, who have been relieved of their misery and restored to health.

When you are nervous or sick, get Cardui from your druggist, and try it.

N. B. Upon request, we will send you, free of charge, our valuable, illustrated 64 page book "Home Treatment for Women." In it you will find valuable information regarding the treatment of female troubles.

Dear Dr. Boswell: [illegible]

At the last session of [illegible] for Haynesville for the third time. [illegible] the Haynesville Mission [illegible] last year by a local preacher, Rev. J. M. Carpenter [illegible]

We have located here Brother Walter G. Harris, the best all-round evangelist I have ever been with, and I have been with several. A true Methodist, a man who loves his church and almost idolizes the Methodist ministry. He puts no man ahead of his brother preachers. I wish we had more like him—one in each district would swell our mission collections and our nominal sum for 1910. I can heartily recommend him to brethren wanting help in meetings. My people have received me cordially. Pray for us.

FROM BROOKSVILLE, MISS.

Mr. Editor: The Bishop moved me to Brooksville, one of the most delightful charges in the North Mississippi Conference, and I arrived with my family on Saturday following the reading of the appointments, finding every thing in fine shape and receiving a warm-hearted reception.

Under the pastorate of my predecessor, Brother Galceran, the Woman's Home Mission Society overhauled the parsonage, completely changing its appearance, and making it one of the most modern and neatest looking houses in town, and second to none in the Conference.

The interior received, if any difference, more attention than the exterior. They put in new wall paper, new matting, and rugs, new furniture—in fact, the whole thing was practically made new, and so completely furnished that we had only to walk in and begin to enjoy the comforts with which we found ourselves surrounded.

With best wishes for the Advocate and personally for the editor and editor-elect.

DON'T BE WITHOUT WATER.

There is no need of the property holders of this city being any longer without water and sewer connections. This has been the one great distress of our city—not being able to have modern improvements in our homes. But now there is no need of any more complaints along this line, as the city is perfectly willing to connect free any property with the water main, carrying the pipes to the property holders line, without any cost whatever to them.

The popular firm of C. C. Hartwell & Co., on Baronne Street, are making a liberal proposition to connect the sewer pipes free of charge. They also go farther and agree to do all plumbing and laying of pipes necessary to connect the house with the sewer and water on monthly payments. This enables the property holders to not only put the property occupied by him but any property he has for rent in modern shape, with practically no outlay of ready cash. People interested in this proposition should consult C. C. Hartwell & Co. for a detailed explanation.

LESSON FOR JAN. 2, 1910.

JOHN, THE FORERUNNER OF JESUS.

(Matthew iii, 1-12.)

Golden Text: "The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight."—Matt iii, 3.

The father of John the Baptist was a priest named Zacharias; he was a good man, who entered upon the duties of his office with full appreciation of its spiritual import. His part of the temple service was to burn incense, the symbol of prayer, while the people outside of the holy inclosure were engaged in prayer. One day, during this service, there came an angel to Zacharias with a message from God. It was the same angel Gabriel that came to Daniel once, while he was earnestly praying; the purpose of these visits implies that Gabriel was a ministering spirit, sent to man with comfort and sympathy, just as the Angel Michael was the spirit of power against evil.

The message that Gabriel brought was that the prayers of the priest had been heard, and that to him would be born a son. When Zacharias saw the angel, he was very much afraid and filled with wonder; but the angel told him not to fear, but that he would be joyful and glad of such a son, for he would grow up great in the sight of the Lord. Then he told him of a great mission his son would have, and how he would be prepared for his work: that from his very birth he would be filled with the Holy Ghost. His name was to be John, and he would turn many of the children of Israel to the Lord their God. His greatest work was "to make ready a people prepared for the Lord." He was to be the forerunner, the foreteller of the Messiah. He was to preach the coming of the Kingdom of God, and herald the coming of the King.

This all seemed so wonderful to Zacharias that he did not believe it, and wanted a sign that it was surely true. The angel gave him a sign; it was that he would not be able to speak a word until his son was born. The people were still waiting on the outside of the sacred part of the temple, and when the priest came out to them and was not able to speak, they knew he must have seen a vision. It is so sometimes with us, that when our prayer has been answered, doubt suggests that it would have happened as it did, if we had not prayed, and we do not give glory to God, nor even thank him for the blessing received.

The angelic prophecy was fulfilled: John grew and waxed strong in spirit, for he spent his time away from the haunts of men, where he could hold undisturbed communion with God, and prepare himself for the greatest of all work up to that time. He was the prophet of the Highest. There was no prophet in Israel for about four hundred years, so John stood between the old and the new dispensations, preaching the complete fulfillment of all prophecy in him whose path he came to make straight, in guiding "our feet in the way of peace"—the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins.

The place of John's first preaching was called the wilderness, not intending the full meaning of the term, for there were people dwelling there: it was that country on each side of the Jordan, and near the seaside, forming the river valley, which was ten or twelve miles wide. The wilderness of Judea is typical, for there was so great a dearth of spiritual worship that the whole nation was a wild and barren waste. He preached a preparation for a kingdom.

The people lived in a state of expectancy that a King would arise to deliver them from the power of their enemies. The hope of a worldly kingdom attracted them, and from all stations in life they flocked to hear him who was really "a voice of one crying in the wilderness." It was not a "reed shaken by the wind" that they came out into the wilderness to see; nor was it one of those that was clothed in soft raiment, such as could have been seen at Herod's court. If they came to see a prophet, they saw more than a prophet, for they saw the Lord's messenger, for among all the prophets there had never arisen one greater than John the Baptist. Yet he that became least in the Kingdom of Heaven, that John preached of, became greater than John. John's clothing and his food spoke his self-abnegation, and the power and earnestness of his preaching aroused them of Jerusalem and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan. They all heard to profit, for they confessed their sins and were baptized. Many of the Pharisees and the Sadducees came; they must have known of John; they knew well his father. When John saw them in his audience he said: "Who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come, O generation of vipers?" Knowing that they, of all others, needed a sincerity of purpose, for they had even taught the law and had never obeyed the law. Baptism to them, as they were, was useless, for conscience must arouse them to repentance; they must know a godly sorrow for sin, and a complete change in life. They could not claim salvation as being the children of Abraham. God could raise up from the very stones children unto Abraham; and when the poor, trusting penitent is pardoned, and comes into the kingdom, he is the child of Abraham who is the father of all, in every nation, who believe unto righteousness. John's preaching was such that a continuation is inferred; the people began to question him—"What shall we do then," after being baptized? Practical Christian benevolence, was his answer. Love for fellowmen that springs from a thankful heart.

The publicans asked what they should do. His answer was, they should go back to their work, and do it legally and honestly.

Soldiers were there, and they wanted to be guided, too. His answer to them was to the effect that they should strive to be better soldiers. So, in all walks of life, a better manner of living was John's admonition. Yet the whole people were in a state of expectancy, for did not this great preacher come, bearing tidings of something better to follow. John saw and knew this, and cried unto them: "I baptize you with water unto repentance, but when He, that is mightier than I, cometh; He will baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire." The water was only a sign, a symbol of an inward purification, that this coming mighty one would give them; and He would come not only as a teacher, but as a Judge. He was as a man who, after the wheat had been harvested, would separate the good from the bad. How slow were the people to understand that he who came clad in a coat of camel's hair, and whose food was only that which the desert gave, did not come to proclaim an earthly king. Some of them that listened to John, and afterwards heard Jesus tell of His Kingdom, still thought that at some time, in some manner and place, the Messiah would set up his earthly kingdom. Even when they went with the Lord to the Mount of Olives they saw Him arise above the world and disappear among the clouds of heaven, then their spiritual eyes began to be opened. So, then, let us learn that the coming of the Kingdom of God is when God rules supreme in the heart of man. Unless a man be born again and born from above, he cannot be of his kingdom. Then John preached from the old law and commandments, the coming of a new commandment and a new nature to follow and obey. It is the same old gospel we have always heard, and will always hear, until the King comes again with power and great glory, and all the holy angels with Him.
